PRECIOUS OINTMENT.

Do not keep your box of ointment,
Dear to you, for your friends to-day;
Do not keep it in the darkness,
Had forgotten, laid away,
The deeds of love and kindness,
Don't forget to give them now?
Don't forget to smooth the pillow
Don't forget to bathe the brow.

Send your flowers to the living;
Do not keep them for the grave—
They may comfort some poor mourner,
They may strengthen, help and save.
Send them in their fragrant beauty—
Show your friendship true and warm;
What would care a rosewood casket?
What would care a lifeless form?

Hearts there are with burdens laden,
Bearing bravely toil and care;
Ready to receive your kindness
Should you leave your ointment there.
Don't forget the kindly counsel—
Don't forget the loving tone;
They will make the cross seem lighter
To some sorrow-laden one.

Across life's rugged pathway
Stretch your hand and lift your voice,
Bringing all your love and kindness,
Making every heart rejoice,
Keep your ointment ever ready—
Use it freely—there is room,
It will bring you richest blessings,
Smooth your passage to the tomb!

The Evangelical Alliance for the United States to the American People.

DANGER TO THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS, THE SCHOOL FUND, AND RELIGIOUS FREEDOM.

This Alliance, a chief object of which is the promotion of religious freedom, asks your earnest attention to the dangers which at this time threaten the public school system of the States, which, with its historic memories and marvelous results, its American training, Christian morals, and harmonizing influence, is rightfully cherished as a chief bulwark of our civil and religious liberty, and of the purity and integrity of republican institutions.

Common schools alone can guard the nation from the illiteracy which now to millions of Americans makes the Bible a sealed book; and when dismayed at the ignorance and superstition brought to us from foreign lands, we thank God as we remember how much of truth there is in the remark that, "Children of all nations of the earth go into our common schools, and come out Americans."

That bulwark is now assailed along the line of States by insidious methods and immoral political deals, in which American principles and rights are bartered for foreign votes. There is an organized and persistent attempt, under foreign leadership, and occasionally under the mask of devotion to liberty of conscience and freedom of worship, to subject the infant wards of the State to proselytizing influences and discipline; to prevent by spiritual threats and other undue influence the attendance of children at the public schools, and to pervert to sectarian purposes the school fund.

Bills to this end are being introduced into the State Legislatures with titles that give no warning of their intent, and which recall the surreptitious passage in the New York Legislature (Chapter 353, Laws of 1875) of an act to amend an act incorporating the Sisterhood of Gray Nuns, intended to destroy at a blow the broad, unsectarian character of the common schools, and to enable persons trained in seminaries of the Gray Nuns, and furnished with their diplomas, to be declared qualified teachers of the common schools of the State.

The lesson taught by the passage of that law—which at the demand of an indignant public opinion was promptly repealed by the next Legislature—of the aims and methods of our opponents, justifies the utmost watchfulness, and a distinct reminder to your State senators and assemblymen to guard with sleepless vigilance the common schools, the school funds, and the constitutional right of all children in America, whether native or of foreign birth, to enjoy the advantages and the American training which the schools are intended to secure.

The committee on legislative action of this Alliance have from year to year opposed a succession of bills in the New York Legislature which disregarded the cherished American doctrine of "no connection between Church and State," violated the constitutional guarantees of religious freedom, facilitated the subjection of wards of the State to the agents of a foreign potentate, and aimed at the control of the school fund.

Similar bills, as the committee report, have been introduced in the Legislatures of Maine, Rhode Island, Pennsylvania and other States; and at its last session two bills of this character were presented to the Legislature at Albany.

Your representatives should also be called upon to take instant steps toward the repeal of every provision which may have been introduced into acts for the commitment of children, or into those for the support of protectories, which directly or by implication authorize the commitment of children, as idle, truant, homeless, or juvenile delinquents, to institutions which are distinctly denominational or sectarian; and where the child, while a ward of the State, is withdrawn from the supervision and guardianship of the State, deprived of the American education to which he is entitled as an American citizen, and consigned to parties acting under ecclesiastical and foreign control, by whom he is subjected to dogmatic and un-American teaching and discipline, with no State official near to whom an appeal can be made in his behalf, or who can guard his religious freedom and secure his culture and training as an American citizen. An honest legislative investigation into the management of our institutions of charity and correction will show the extent to which foreign intermeddling with State legislation and State institutions has multiplied the number of pauper children, and increased heavily the burdens of tax payers; and a statistical comparison of the results of the American and Papal systems of education will show the danger threatened by the latter to our American civilization, by multiplying, in the future, political corruption and pauperism, vice, and crime.

It is hardly necessary to repeat the declaration so often made by this Alliance, and recently announced at the National Christian Conference at Washington, that while it must resist as American citizens and Christians all attacks upon our public schools or any of our institutions by a foreign power that has no sympathy with our advance as a republic, we have no feeling but that of kindly regard for the American Roman Catholics who, as American citizens, in good faith renounce all allegiance to a foreign potentate; who regard our common schools as essential to the common welfare, and especially to that of their own children; and some of whom have set the noblest example to the American people in their determined resistance to ecclesiastical encroachments upon religious freedom, whether in State institutions or in State legislation, even when their refusal to admit clerical dictation as to their official duty as American citizens, has exposed them to ecclesiastical displeasure, which, as in the case of the late Judge Henry Alker, when disregarded by the living man, subjected his remains to indignity.

Touching the management of our common schools, on the purity of whose teaching depends the character of the nation, this Alliance would respectfully and earnestly entreat all who would maintain in their purity and beneficence our American institutions, to have a constant eye to the schools in their own immediate neighborhood; to cherish them with affectionate and jealous care; to guard them from partisan and sectarian manipulation; to see that the teachers are fitted for their work morally as well as intellectually, and that they worthily appreciate the grandeur of their task in training children for their high duties as American citizens. They should clearly understand that while those duties are based upon the broad, tolerant Christianity which our country holds to be, in a modified sense, a part of American law—the Christianity revealed in the Bible, and whose divine origin and birth are judicially recognized—a Christianity not founded on any particular tenets, but Christianity with liberty of conscience to all men: the Christian ethics and influence thus authorized and demanded in our schools, must never be narrowed or perverted in our State institutions, and least of all in our public schools, by the admission of denominational dogmas or doctrines, or of decrees or maxims at variance with American rights, American principles, or American law; or inconsistent with the fundamental American principle of a complete separation of Church and State.

Vanderbilt for Young Preachers.

BY GEO. H. THOMPSON.

MR. EDITOR: Believing that many of the young preachers of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences regard Vanderbilt as I did before coming here, I write this to relieve their mistake.

First, I thought we must be sons of a Vanderbilt, or, at least, have a greater amount of pocket furniture than usually falls to the lot of our young preachers. But I am glad to announce to my young brethren that such is not the case. A number of young men now to school earn money enough during the vacation to meet their necessary expenses during the session. And, as might be expected, they "carry off" the university honors. The sustentation fund is loaned to young preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to pay their board on the condition that they replace it "when able." Board, including meals, room rent, servant hire, gas, etc., averages not more than $9 per month.

Secondly, there are now about fifty young men in Vanderbilt preparing for the ministry. The estimate of each is placed, not on good looks, fine clothes, or on the happy fortune of being the son of a D. D., but on personal piety and manliness. No factor enters so largely into the estimate of him as a thorough consecration to God. Without any egotism as a small portion of this body, I say the consecration of some of our number would be a good example for many timid young men entering the ministry.

We meet every night around a common family altar, and pray earnestly for a deeper sense of our duty to God and man. The prayers we send up, evening after evening, for those "who have gone out from us," must be a benediction to all who have left our halls.

Our class meeting is held on Saturday night. Here we tell to each other of the battles and victories won during the past week, and mingle our prayers for each other in a manner to be noted by angels.

Twenty-seven Conferences are represented in the theological department. To be associated with and learn of representatives from such a broad territory the different features peculiar to each district, is no mean thing.

Nashville is called the "Hub of Methodism." Being at the hub, of course we see most of the wheel. We see and meet the leading characters of the church; hear them fire their largest guns. This, you know, is no small thing to us who feel honored to have the acquaintance of the D. D.'s. It is useless for me to state the merits of the university. This is too well known to need a word from me. But, in urging the merit of Vanderbilt to a corresponding editor of the ADVOCATE some time since, he stated, with some emphasis, that the teaching was done exclusively by lectures. The editor was simply mistaken. We have recitations similar to the recitations at Centenary.

The Louisiana and Mississippi Conferences have one representative each—William Schuhle, of the Louisiana, and the writer, of the Mississippi Conference. I acknowledge a duty to Centenary, but recognize a personal interest which places my choice on Vanderbilt. An advantage lost in our scholastic training will never be recovered.

VANDERBILT, Dec. 24, 1888.

A Mississippi Methodist College.

BY REV. T. L. MELLEN.

Within the early probabilities is a college for males in the State of Mississippi, and under the auspices and control of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. In obedience to the pressing need of the hour, and a very general demand from the Methodists of Mississippi, ten resolutions, looking to the establishment of such an institution of learning, were introduced during the recent session of the Mississippi Conference, and, after a full and free discussion, participated in by a number of brethren, lay and clerical, was adopted by a vote of four to one. So large was the majority that the daily press reported the vote to be unanimous. These resolutions were presented a few days afterwards to the North Mississippi Conference, in session at Starkville, and, after having been referred to the Board of Education, and by the Board endorsed, were reported back, and by the Conference adopted without dissent, after three days of quiet thought and a free discussion.

The committees appointed by the two Conferences will meet in Jackson, Miss., Feb. 11, 1889, to organize the joint committee, and to formulate plans and to take such other preliminary steps as shall tend to hasten the crystallizing process and give shape and permanency to the effort. The first object of the funds of the enterprise will be to secure an endowment fund, such as will give the college stability and guarantee its perpetuity. Already $100,000 is promised, and a number of places are competing for its location. The question of location will be deferred until after a sufficient endowment fund shall have been secured. The committee will not act hastily, but, adhering to the line marked out in the resolutions adopted by the two Conferences, will make steady and earnest and persistent effort to accomplish the purposes for which they were created.

The committees are composed of the following persons:

From the Mississippi Conference: Rev. T. L. Mellen, chairman; Dr. W. C. Black, Rev. A. F. Watkins, Col. W. L. Nugent, L. Sexton, M. D.

From the North Mississippi Conference: Rev. Dr. J. J. Wheat, chairman; Rev. S. M. Thames, Rev. T. J. Newell, Hon. G. D. Shands, Hon. W. H. Sims, and Maj. D. L. Sweatman.

Laymen and Church Insurance.

Our ablest preachers and most efficient pastors have their minds and hearts so completely absorbed in the higher or spiritual interests of the church that they can give but little time to such temporalities or material interests as the insurance of buildings. Their daily duties disqualify them for very practical thinking in the line of material, business interests. Laymen are more directly concerned in raising money to rebuild churches destroyed by fire or tempest. Their daily duties and trend of thought eminently fit them for the formulation of some system or plan for Methodist mutual insurance that will, in the coming time, save millions of dollars to our church.

The suggestion published a few weeks ago, as a sort of working hypothesis, was given to me by a very earnest, thoughtful layman, H. W. Bushman, of Springfield, Mo. He is now gathering facts, figures and general data to present to our Annual and General Conferences, that will, doubtless, arouse them to the adoption of some plan for the more general insurance of our property and a more economical use of our Lord's money.

If our laymen will look abroad in the great cities of ours and other lands, they will see the most magnificent extravagance concreted in the great buildings of insurance companies, who are making so much money they scarcely know what to do with it. Our church is contributing every year to the plethora of these gigantic corporations. "The children of this world are wiser in their day and generation than the children of light." Men who own property in a dozen localities will not waste their money on insurance companies. They carry their own risks and build additional houses with the money thus saved. A marine company, with ten ships on the sea, puts its money into new ships, instead of magnificent buildings on land for insurance companies. Methodism has ten thousand ships in her fleet; can she not carry her own risks? Had she not better put her earnings into new churches than in the gorgeous grandeur of insurance offices?

The very churches least able to rebuild themselves are the ones not insured at all. Our church in Piedmont, Mo., was recently burned with half the homes of the members. The pastor and a layman are now going from place to place soliciting funds to rebuild. The church at large can not afford to continue this humiliating and uncertain method of restoring buildings deeded to and belonging to the church at large, and not to individual societies.

Let every thoughtful layman, who has a suggestion, criticising figures or facts that will conduce to the perfecting of a plan for Methodist mutual insurance, forward the same to Bro. H. W. Bushman, Springfield, Mo., W. B. Palmore.

Dr. Lipscomb on "The Problem."

The following letter from Rev. A. A. Lipscomb, D. D., LL.D., will explain itself:

DEAR DR. POLAND: I have carefully read your book—"The Problem of Methodism:" read it as a student reads, and enjoyed it as a clear, vigorous statement of Methodist theology as our standards interpret the New Testament. From my youth my father taught me these views, and I adhered to them in early life, and cherish them still; and I am confirmed more than ever in their metaphysical, psychological and biblical correctness. Your book is logical, and, in the highest sense, philosophical. I commend it most heartily. Ill health forbids my writing more fully; but I have said enough to assure you how fully my judgment and heart approve the book. If you wish to use this letter in behalf of your admirable volume, do so.

With my best wishes for this well-timed book, and my prayer for God's blessing on it, on you, and on all its readers, I remain, my dear brother,

Most truly yours,

A. A. LIPSCOMB.

Notice.

To the Preachers and Members of the Church in the Louisiana Conference:

The widow of Rev. J. D. Jackson made application to the Board of Finance to be placed on the roll of beneficiaries of the Conference; but, as Bro. Jackson was not admitted into full connection, we could not grant her request. It was decided, however, to raise money by subscription. Bro. A. C. Mitchell and the writer were appointed by the president of the Board of Finance to receive money and forward to Sister Jackson. We want to raise the sum of two hundred and fifty dollars between now and the first of April. We hope to have liberal and immediate responses. Bro. Jackson was one of our most useful and promising young ministers, and many will rise up in that great day and call him blessed. His widow and two orphan children are in distressed circumstances, and this should not be. They need help and they need it now. Any amount from twenty-five cents up will be gratefully received. Send money to Bro. A. C. Mitchell, at Shreveport, or the writer, at Plaquemine.

W. WHEELER.

Notice.

To the Preachers of the Meridian District, North Mississippi Conference:

DEAR BRETHREN: You remember that at the last session of our District Conference we organized a Ministerial Aid Association for the purpose of aiding young preachers in securing an education preparatory to entering the itinerancy; at which time there was some money subscribed for said object, the most of which has been paid. The officers of the association, after consultation, selected a young preacher—Bro. Threadgill who is at Hiwassee doing well, and who is depending largely upon us for means with which to pay his board, etc. His bills are falling due and must be met.

Now, brethren of the ministry and laity, let us meet this obligation fully and promptly. Let us keep some money in the treasury all the time, and thereby keep a young man at school all the time. Present the subject to all of your people, publicly and privately, and forward the money to me by mail. I will acknowledge receipt of same. Truly yours,

M. [illegible], Treasurer.

Pastor's Reception at Meridian.

With reluctant hearts we bade adieu to our old friends in Jackson, but, thanks to the workings of the itinerancy, we found new ones waiting to welcome us to Meridian. Though the train was delayed till late in the night, several of the official Board met us and conveyed us in their carriages to the parsonage, where lighted lamps and glowing grates greeted us, bespeaking welcomes were spread. [illegible] was well filled, and [illegible] hand and [illegible] the Christmas turke[illegible] viand, and [illegible] den the day. [illegible] seem determined [illegible] ing to occupy [illegible] and come [illegible] to regret [illegible] hope by a [illegible] and effort [illegible] eration [illegible]

"THE BOOK OF PRAYER."

BY MRS. MARGARET J. SANGSTER.

Of all the beautiful treasures
That cluster about the year,
Unlocked over the threshold
When its early skies are clear,

The best is the simple legend
Of a book I may not see,
So like that our risen angels
Desire its lines to be.

It is full of the sweetest stories
Of dream and story and rhyme,
And the whole of it is a Love-Letter,
Forms only a part of me.

Some of the leaves are dazzling
With the feather-flakes of the snow;
Some of them thrill to the music
Of the merriest winds that blow;

Some of them keep the secrets
That make the roses sweet;
Some of them sway and rustle
With the golden heads of wheat.

I can not begin to tell you
Of the lovely things to be,
In the wonderful year-book waiting,
A gift for you and me.

And a thought most strange and solemn
Is borne upon my mind—
On every page a column
For ourselves we'll surely find.

What we may upon it,
The record there will stay,
Till the books of Time are opened
In the court of the Judgment Day.

And should we not be careful
Lest the words our fingers write
Shall rise to shame our faces
When we stand in the dear Lord's sight?

And should we not remember
To drop no thought of blame,
If we sign each page that we finish
With faith in the dear Lord's name?

(Hurlburt and Simpson's Lesson Commentary. Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

Sunday-School Lesson.—January 13.

A Sabbath in the Life of Jesus.

Mark i. 21-31.

GOLDEN TEXT.—As his custom was, he went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day.—Luke iv. 16.

TIME.—A. D. 28.

PLACE.—Capernaum, on the Sea of Galilee. Probably the place which he and his friends made a home after the ill-fated visit at Nazareth, chapter vi.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. iv. 13; Luke iv. 14, 31.

21. Straightway—The frequent recurrence of this adverb, often disguised in the English version by needless variations, as "immediately," "anon," "by and by," should be noticed as we proceed. It occurs forty-one times in the gospel; nine times in this first chapter. This also may be noted as characteristic of the writer, who, himself active and prompt as an attendant or minister, was emphatically the evangelist of action, writing what has been called the "Gospel of Service." Into the synagogue—The Jews erected synagogues not only in towns and villages, but also in the country, where there was a sufficient congregation, especially near rivers, for purposes of purification. Service was daily performed in them, consisting of prayers, reading the Scriptures, and preaching, or expounding them. A council or assembly of grave and wise persons, well versed in the law, was appointed to superintend and regulate all matters belonging to the synagogue and its service. Taught—It was the ordinary custom for the scribes to teach in the synagogues. It appears, however, that the Jews, though they did not allow this liberty to illiterate persons or mechanics, yet granted it to prophets and such as set up for heads or leaders of new sects, in order that they might inform themselves of their doctrines, and not condemn them unheard and unknown. Under these characters, probably, Christ and his apostles were admitted to the privilege.

22. Not as the scribes—He gave old truths an unwonted freshness of presentation, and added much that sounded entirely new, on his own authority, instead of confining himself, like the rabbis, to lifeless repetitions of traditional commonplaces, delivered with a dread of the least deviation or originality. They claimed no power to say a word of their own; he spoke with a startling independence. When the scribes delivered their doctrines to the people, they delivered them expressly as the doctrines of men, grounding them on the authority of their distinguished doctors: Christ, on the contrary, spake boldly from himself, delivering his commands as the commands of God.

23. A man with an unclean spirit—There was no particular reason for excluding them from synagogues more than from any other places; for the Jews did not transfer to the synagogues any of those ideas of sanctity which belonged to the temple at Jerusalem, nor accounted them as in any way sacred places. That there is here described not a case of physical and mental disease merely, but a real and actual possession of the soul by a fallen spirit, I think clear, both from the tenor of the narrative here, and from other parallel passages in the New Testament. How could a lunatic know Christ to be the Holy One of God when as yet he was unknown even to his own disciples? How should he fear that Christ would destroy him, who came to heal the sufferer but destroy the devil? How could lunacy be said to "come out of him" and to cry with a loud voice?" Cried out—The unclean spirit. He had such control of the man that he spoke through him, using his organs of speech. The personality of the demon is distinctly recognized. Neither disease nor a myth could thus cry out.

24. Let us alone—Even the poor demoniac, in the depths of his perturbed and degraded nature, could feel the haunting spell of that pure presence, of that holy voice, of that divine and illuminating message. But, distorted as his whole moral being was, he raved against it, as though by the voices of the evil demons who possessed him, and while he saluted "Jesus the Nazarene" as the Holy One of God, yet, with agonies of terror and hatred, demanded to be let alone, and not to be destroyed. I know thee—Evil knows good and hates it. Evil is not so powerful in reality as goodness, though apparently much mightier. Jesus is greater than all evil spirits. Earth has not recognized her king, has not yet perceived him under his disguise; but heaven and hell alike bear witness unto him. "The devils also believe and tremble."

25. Jesus rebuked him—Jesus was careful to guard himself and his own cause from every token of sympathy with the infernal beings, and so drew a most palpable line of hostility between them and himself. How the wonder-workers of that age—for there were many who pretended to cast out devils—would have gloried in any such testimony to their power as those which Jesus silenced and deprecated. But our Lord's promptitude and decision in silencing this testimony would seem rather to suggest that he saw it was intended for mischief, and could in the end accomplish nothing else. Come out of him—Two distinct personalities are here recognized. The demon is treated as a person as much as the man. Then followed a scene of thrilling excitement. Turning to the furious and raving sufferer, recognizing the duality of his consciousness, addressing the devil which seemed to be forcing from him these terrified ejaculations, Jesus said: "Hold thy peace, and come out of him." He never accepted or tolerated this ghastly testimony to his origin and office.

26. Had torn him—Rather, had convulsed him. Luke says he left the man without doing him any permanent injury. Cried with a loud voice—It might seem as though the evil spirit was not altogether and at once obedient to the word of Christ. But in truth he was obedient to the command of silence, he did not speak any more, and that was the thing which our Lord meant to forbid. This cry was nothing but an inarticulate cry of rage and pain.

27. Amazed—The entire assembly understood the case at once. They doubted neither the demon nor Christ. The possession nor the miracle. The authority of the teaching was all of a piece with the miraculous power which cast out evil spirits. The people were overwhelmed with astonishment, but of any deeper or more permanent effect we have no record. What new doctrine is this—What is the meaning of this new and strange occurrence, this mysterious dialogue and strife between a man and an evil spirit, and the still more wonderful submission of the latter? "What new doctrine"—that is, mode of teaching, with reference not so much to the truth taught, as to the evidence by which it was attested. Why they called it a new doctrine they explain themselves—to wit: because he claimed and exercised authority not only over human minds, but over fallen angels, though belonging to another race and sphere of being.

28. His fame spread—It went abroad that a beneficent being had appeared, at whose touch and voice disease and damage and leprosy and demons disappeared.

30. Simon's wife's mother—Very little has been preserved to us touching the home-life of the apostles. A tradition in the Armenian Church speaks of all being married except St. Thomas and the two sons of Zebedee; but whether true or not is unsupported by any general evidence. In this uncertainty such a passage as that before us at once excites our interest. At all events, the chief of the twelve was a married man.—Canon Lockock. Lay sick—In the very imperfect medical language of that day fevers were simply divided into little and great fevers. Luke, who was a physician, characterizes this as a "great fever." Anon—This is our evangelist's favorite "straightway," occurring ten or eleven times in this first chapter.

31. Took her by the hand, and lifted her up—As we should say, assisted her up. The perfect self-possession and calm confidence of our Lord are beautifully indicated. There was no hesitancy on the one hand, and no hustle on the other. Luke says that he rebuked the disorder, so that, perhaps, he also spoke. In these different points the evangelist, who adds something more, does not contradict him who says the less. The fever left her—A sudden ceasing of motions uncontrolled; a coolness gliding through the burning skin; a sense of waking into repose; a consciousness of all-pervading well-being, of strength conquering weakness, of light displacing darkness, of urging life at the heart; and behold! she is sitting up in her bed, a hand clasping hers, a face looking in hers. He has judged the evil thing, and it is gone. He has saved her out of her distresses. They fold away from off her like the cerements of death. She is new-born, new-made; all things are new-born with her, and he who makes all things new is there. From him, she knows, has the healing flowed. He has given of his life to her. Away, afar behind her, floats the cloud of her suffering. She almost forgets it in her grateful joy. She ministered unto them—Such a fever invariably leaves the patient weak. The period of convalescence is always long and trying, often full of danger. The fact that she ministered to them, that is, served in the ordinary duties of the household, shows that Christ in healing the disease, also imparted health and strength, and it demonstrates the miraculous character of the cure. The joy of health is labor. He who is restored must be fellow-worker with God. This woman, lifted out of the whelming sand of the lever and set upon her feet, hastens to her ministrations. She has been used to hard work. It is all right now; she must to it again.

32. At even, when the sun did set—There are two reasons why the time should be thus specified: 1. It was natural that the sick should be brought in the cool of the evening, rather than in the scorching heat of the afternoon. 2. It was the Sabbath, and the feeling which made the Pharisees question the lawfulness of a man's carrying the bed on which he had been lying (John v. 10) on the Sabbath would probably have deterred the friends of the sick from bringing them so long as it lasted. Never, perhaps, was the ending of the Sabbath day more anxiously waited for. The strict laws of the Jewish Sabbath gave a few hours of rest to all, but the blast of the trumpet which announced its close was the signal for a renewal of the popular excitement, now increased by the rumor of the second miracle. They brought unto him all that were diseased—What a strange scene! There lay the limpid lake, reflecting in pale rose color the last flush of sunset that gilded the western hills; and here, amid the peace of nature, was exposed in hideous variety the sickness and misery of man, while the stillness of the Sabbath twilight was broken by the shrieks of demoniacs who testified to the presence of the Son of God. What the sick of even a small town implied may be imagined. Fevers, convulsions, asthma, wasting consumption, swollen dropsy, shaking palsy, the deaf, the dumb, the brain affected, and, besides all, "many that were possessed with devils," that last worst symptom of the despairing misery and dark confusion of the times.

33. All the city—The effect was to rouse and gather the entire population of the city to obtain healing for themselves or friends.

34. Healed many—Matthew says he "healed all that were sick." The sun which had set upon an expectant crowd of miserable creatures arose the next morning upon a city from which disease had fled. Suffered not the devils to speak—The knowledge possessed by the devils is interpreted by Luke, "They knew that he was Christ," that is, the Messiah. The time for the full disclosure of that fact had not yet come. Because they knew him—They were ready to speak because they knew his nature and work. The mere belief of the facts and doctrines of Christianity will never save our souls. "The devils believe, and tremble." Let us take heed that ours is a faith of the heart as well as of the head. "The life of Christianity," says Luther, "consists in possessive pronouns." It is one thing to say, Christ is a Savior; it is quite another to say, Christ is my Savior and my Lord. The devil can say the first; the true Christian alone can say the second. Some good critics render this clause, "suffered not the devils to say that they knew him." The sense is, "He would not suffer them to speak, because they knew, and would address him as Messiah;" a title to which our Lord as yet made no public claim, lest he should excite tumult among the people.

Temperance.

WHAT ARE YOU DOING?

This was the question propounded to me in regard to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New Orleans.

Well, let me tell you: Our two hundred members represent about as many households, and signifies as many homes absolutely free from the use of alcoholic beverages, where the husband is encouraged to be a total abstainer, and the children are taught to "touch not, taste not, handle not." This work is not confined to the home, but its influence is felt in wide circles of friends and acquaintances. Who can estimate the quiet womanly power of our members? The banishment of the decanter from the Christian's sideboard is largely due to this same gentle unobtrusive authority. As most of our members are wives and mothers, and have home duties to occupy their time, many can not attend the weekly meetings; yet the work goes on. Our president met a lady not long since, who said: "Mrs. Lyons, I wish to pay my annual dues for five years in advance. I will be absent from the city, but I wish to continue my membership in the New Orleans Union, and will do all I can for our good cause." Would you call her a nominal member?

Let me give some account of the last monthly meeting, as there was no reporter present: First came the superintendents of Bands of Hope. Briefly and concisely they told how families heretofore strangers to the temperance cause were being reached through the children; how children were being taught the baneful effect of the first drink and the influence of alcohol on mind and body. These superintendents all work under the auspices of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and in the future their labors must bear fruit.

The "Flower Mission" followed. It is also an auxiliary. All know of their beautiful labor of love among the poor, the sick, the friendless. Then a dear little soul arose and told of her visits to the prisons and workhouse, taking her bit of white ribbon down into the very mire of humanity, endeavoring by word and deed to raise the sin-blinded up to the healing Sun of Righteousness. Presently reports of casual efforts were made, and member after member arose and related what she had been doing for the cause. One of the very youngest had procured sixty signatures to the pledge. This lady could not make speeches; she could only address a few at a time, she said, in the social circle.

Thus it will be seen our individual unpublished labor is kept up, even if we make no noise about it. Temperance work comes in with the rest, be it for church or home. Few have time to make a specialty of it, but all should do a part.

Having thus replied to my questioning friend, she hastened to say: "'Whereas, I was blind, now I see.' 'Ye are the salt; ye are the leaven;' and may God bless your salting and leavening until this whole wicked city is reformed!"

"Numbering Israel."

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of November 15 there appeared an article under the head of "Preachers' Experiences," and titled "Numbering Israel," which strikes me with somewhat of surprise, because of its sweeping statements and unqualified charges made against the ministry in their ability or indisposition to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, in reckoning concerning their congregations. This article, perhaps, requires a more lengthy notice than I now have time to give: so I dismiss it, believing it is only a case similar to one which occurred in a community in Mississippi some years since. It was in the "good old days," when men met to try their skill with the rifle, and when the reward to the most expert was to "carry off the beef." Upon this special occasion of which I speak, some twenty or more neighbors had met to try their "luck." Among the number was one who had imbibed too much, and who was, consequently, unable to judge correctly. However, he held his peace till on his return home, when he said to one of his companions: "Did you ever see as many drunken men in one crowd in all your life?" when the truth of the matter was, all the rest were duly sober, and he alone was the one who saw crooked.

This, I trust, is a satisfactory explanation of the insinuations contained in the article in question. May we not so hope for the honor of the church and its ministry? Fraternally,

From the Work

RUSTON, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Our Conference year is drawing to its close. My husband is busy making his final collections. I think he will have above average report. This has been one of the pleasantest years of my itinerant life. But somehow my lot has always fallen in pleasant places, and we have never been to a place to which I would not be willing to return. We have been busy all the year, and have, by the help of our heavenly Father, tried to do our duty, and we have had evidences all along that he has been on our side. He has wonderfully blessed our people during the year. We have shared the blessings. With the close of the year comes sad and anxious thoughts. "Where will we be sent?" is the absorbing theme. All itinerant preachers' wives feel the same way, I reckon. I am always willing to go where the Bishop thinks best for us to go, and accept our work from the Lord; but we can not help having our preferences, and my preference just now is to remain at Ruston. But no telling where our lot will be cast. We are so pleasantly situated in our parsonage-home. We have a new parsonage, built last year, painted this fall, comfortably and nicely furnished by the ladies, including a carpet recently purchased. The parsonage was built and furnished for the preacher's comfort and convenience, not as a "make-shift," as is often the case. We have everything we could ask in that line; what else could we desire? If our successors is not pleased, I have only to say they will be hard to please, that's all. Our society is of the best; our school, unsurpassed. President Sligh and his accomplished, thorough-going wife have built up a school which is the pride of every citizen of our flourishing town. In addition to the college buildings proper Bro. Sligh has built a large two-story "College Home," and it is finished and furnished throughout. A bevy of bright girls and boys are now inmates of that home. We could not desire or get a better school for our children—music and art included. The teachers are all first-class. Bro. Sligh will not employ any but the best—all good Christian men and women. Ours is a dry town, and that has not killed it either. Families are moving in every week. Many have gone to other places because they could not get houses to live in. Some are building, others intend to build. Our school is the center of attraction. All parents who desire to send their sons and daughters to a first-class school on easy terms would do well to confer with President T. S. Sligh.

I have told you before that this is a working church. Our ladies have been planning and working away all the year. They have raised $180 or $190 in the different societies. Beside this, our Juvenile Missionary Society has raised since last Conference $109 50. Our ladies' prayer meetings are kept up, as well as all other branches of woman's work. All this takes time and much thought, but with it all they never forget or neglect the preacher's family.

Now, do you blame me for wanting to remain here? But if another is sent, we will cheerfully step out; and they will walk into a cosy home, surrounded by every convenience; a good garden to begin on, and all these good people to love and care for them—even the good sister who "does not want any more preachers' wives," for she is just as good and sweet as she can be, and is always showing by acts that she loves the other half of the preacher.

PLAIN DEALING, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Our last quarterly meeting has closed, and our pastor reported all collections about full, and the missionary collections running over. Well, that makes us feel good, for such has not been reported from the North Bossier circuit in many years. Our pastor and presiding elder looked cheerful. Their salaries were nearer paid than usual, and, perhaps, will be reported about up at Conference. No such report has gone up for many years from this charge. We are on rising ground, and our motto is, "Onward and upward." We are building a nice new church edifice at the new railroad town of Plain Dealing. We are using it at present, but need funds badly to finish it. We are poor and few, but trust that the Lord will enable us to carry forward to completion the work.

Our dear pastor and noble wife have left us to visit relatives in a distant part of the State before going to Conference, where they will be sent to another field, having served out the limit of four years. It made our heart ache to part with them. Oh, how dear to us are the memories of the sweet intercourse enjoyed with that dear family! We feel that its influence will go along with us down the declivity of time, and make us better and more useful. We trust that their lines will fall in pleasant places, and that they may be spared to the church for many, many years to work in the Master's vineyard!

A STEWARD.

An Irrepressible Conflict.

Last week we published a letter from our Buffalo correspondent, giving a very interesting account of the meeting of the Episcopal Church Congress in that city, of which he spoke with the highest respect, saying that "decorum and reverence characterized all the proceedings, and the ability displayed by the speakers was of a high order. Both clergy and laymen took a part, and it is but simple justice to say that the learning, the vigorous thought, the literary finish, and the oratorical power of the gentlemen who were heard, reflected the highest credit upon the committee and upon the whole congress." But near the close of his report he alludes to an incident which ruffled somewhat the quiet dignity of the body—an incident to which another correspondent, Rev. Walter T. Clarke, who was an eye-witness of what took place, refers more fully. We print his letter, not that it gives us any pleasure to observe such differences in another religious communion, but that the incident, as here detailed, seems to show that there is in the Episcopal Church an "irrepressible conflict," which may at any time lead to an explosion. He writes:

"Music Hall in Buffalo, is a composite structure, containing a collection of apartments, large and small, designed for various purposes. Thus the same roof will cover at once and the same time exercises of the most opposite and incongruous character. Last week the spacious theatre and the smaller concert hall were respectively utilized by two outgrowths of English life, the Anglican imitation known as the Protestant Episcopal Church Congress, and the English whistling woman! Sad to relate, the female trilled before a couple of thousand, while the congress sat in solemn state before about two hundred. But some scenes in the latter were decidedly "rich;" at least, to the unregenerate spectator who did not wear the Lambeth countersign. The proceedings were, for the most part, earnest and dignified. But there was one episode which I had myself opportunity to observe, and which was of a quite different character. By the courtesy of a friend, who is the warden of an Episcopal college, I was invited to a seat on the platform, and thus a Presbyterian found himself wedged in between Phillips Brooks, Prof. Clarke, of Toronto; Bishop Miller, of Mississippi; President Potter, of Hobart College; and other well-known leaders in the Episcopal Church. All went smoothly till a young man, Rev. Percy Grant, lately called to a fine parish in Providence, R. I., rose as one of the appointed speakers. His theme was, "Limits of Discussion in the Church." His argument led him to speak upon the nature of the Episcopal office. He showed that it was retained in England as a political measure merely, and that no special divine grace was held to inhere in it. His citations were numerous and to the point.

"When he sat down the presiding Bishop, a son of that stalwart Presbyterian, the late Dr. Samuel Hanson Cox, rose and rebuked him unmercifully, saying 'he could hardly restrain himself during the address, so abominable were the utterances of the speaker.' The young man rose most respectfully to offer a word of explanation, when the Bishop turned on him and exclaimed, 'Sit down, sir; I will not hear a single word!' and instantly shut off all explanation by calling the next speaker.

"The great frame of Phillips Brooks could be almost felt to tremble with suppressed excitement. When the exercises at last closed, he went over to the young man where he stood alone like a leper, and, grasping him by the hand, exclaimed: 'That was the most outrageous thing I ever saw! What will these Bishops do next?' All Jerusalem was in an uproar. The Boston leader, gathering a band of followers, approached the Bishop, and said, 'There must be some settlement of this.' The response was, 'I'll not discuss the subject, sir.' Seizing his hat the prelate, in a tremble, showed signs of beating a retreat. It was a scene. And the hosts seemed about equally divided. Perhaps it was well that it stopped there. The Bishop was prudent in declining 'discussion.' It was much easier to silence Mr. Grant than to answer him. If he had once appealed to history, he would have had a task too strong, even for his Episcopal powers, and might have had to send to the other end of Music Hall to call in the whistling British maiden, to help him get through the graveyard of old English history, and to calm the modern 'Historic (or Hysteric) Episcopate' when it meets o' nights the ghosts of the worthy prelates of the times of the English Reformation."—Exchange.

PROGRESS OF MISSIONS.—For 3,000 years there existed but three versions of the Holy Scriptures. To-day they may be read in 350 of the 5,000 tongues that are spoken. In 1804 there were in the world only 5,000,000 Bibles; in 1880 there were in the hands of humankind 160,000,000 copies of the Sacred Word. At the beginning of our century the Way of Life could be studied by but one-fifth of the world's population; now it is translated into languages that make it accessible to nine-tenths of the inhabitants of the world. Protestants occupy over 500 separate fields. In them they have more than 20,000 mission stations, supplied with no less than 40,000 missionaries. Five hundred thousand heathen children attend Christian schools. One million communicants are enrolled in congregations gathered from among the heathen. Two million stated hearers are nominal adherents of the evangelical faith. Of the 1,433,000,000 that people the world, 135,000,000 are Protestant Christians. The area of the habitable globe is computed at 52,000,000 square miles; of these 18,000,000 square miles are under Greek and Romish Church dominion; 20,000,000 square miles under Mohammedan and Pagan governments, and 14,000,000 square miles under Protestant rule.—Christian at Work.

Why Do I Work?

In the office of the ministry there is much in common with ordinary departments of life. It gratifies literary tastes; it affords opportunities for study; it has associated with it a certain honor and esteem in the eyes of others; it furnishes occasion for the thrill that every real orator feels in the delivery of a message to his fellow-men. Now if a man is in the ministry simply for these kinds of enjoyment, there is no more spirituality in his work than there is in that of the litterateur or the political orator. Theirs may be spiritual indeed, if they are doing it out of love to God; but his must be merely secular if he does it only from such motives as have place in ordinary literature or eloquence.

You see, then, how it comes that in the estimation of men one may stand very high, may be, indeed, reputed among the first of vineyard laborers, and yet be placed among the lowest and the last by God. But I can not put this thought with anything like the force of Canon Mozley: "The truth is, wherever there is action, effort, aim at certain objects and ends; wherever the flame of human energy mounts up—all this may gather either round a center of pure and unselfish desire, or round a center of egotism, and no superiority in the subject of the work can prevent the lapse into the inferior motive. In the most different objects this may be the same; it is a quality of the individual. Whatever he does, if there is a degeneracy in the temper of his mind, it all collects and gathers by a false direction which it receives from the false center of attraction, round himself. The subject or cause which a man takes up makes no difference. The religious leader can feel alike with the political, and as strongly, this lower source of inspiration: can be accompanied by this idolized representation of self, this mirror in which he sees himself growing and expanding in life's area. Are the keen relish for success, the spirit which kindles at human praise and the gusts of triumph, the feeling which accompany action upon a theater, guaranteed no place in a man by his having a religious zeal? These are parts of human nature; and it is not zeal, but something else, which purifies human nature. So far as religion only supplies a man of keen earthly susceptibilities, and desire of a place in the world, with a subject or an arena, so far that man stands on the same ground, with a politician who is stimulated by this aim. They are the same identical type of men in different spheres. There is a conventional difference between them, but there is one moral heading. Both may be doing valuable work, important service, in a public sense; but if you do not think the politician a spiritual man because he is a useful man, no more must you think the active man in a religious sphere to be so. Spirituality belongs to the motive." Now, that will help us to understand how it may come, that one may have a high reputation among men for religious work, and yet be among the last when God pronounces the verdict: for he sees what men can not see, the motive from which the whole activity has sprung, and tests it all by that. It is a solemn thought, and may well send us to examine ourselves.

What are we in God's vineyard—hirelings, or trusting, humble laborers, working for the love of Christ? They that work for reward do not get as much as they want; they that work for love get far more than they expect. And the moment we ask of Christ, "What shall we have, therefore?" we vitiate the quality of our service. It is the same paradox which we have in the words, "He that findeth his life shall lose it, but he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." He that seeketh happiness for his own sake shall never get it; but unto him that serveth God for love, happiness shall be added, and shall be itself a rich reward.

Beautiful exceedingly in this connection is the story—mythical, no doubt, in form, but probably true in substance—that is told concerning Thomas Aquinas. Worshiping one day in the chapel in which he was accustomed to perform his devotions, it is said that the Savior thus addressed him: "Thomas, thou hast written much and well concerning me. What reward shall I give thee for thy work?" Whereupon he answered, "Nihil nisi te, Domine"—"Nothing but thyself, O Lord!" And in very deed he is the best of all gifts. Let the spirit of the doctor, as enshrined in this simple story, fill our hearts, and there will be no room within us for the hireling's selfishness.—Rev. Wm. M. Taylor, D. D.

Historic Events of Various New Year's Days.

On the 1st of January, 1651, the son of Charles I. was crowned as Charles II. by the Scots at Scone, the southern part of the country being occupied at the time by Cromwell with a hostile army. The extreme measure of cutting off the late king and extinguishing the monarchy was generally disapproved of in Scotland, but in taking up the young king the Scots were chiefly animated by a desire of preserving and advancing their favorite Presbyterian Church arrangements, according to the spirit of the famous Solemn League and Covenant. Charles, who was then only twenty, being anxious to get a footing in his father's lost dominions, consented, much against his will, to accept this covenant, which inferred an active persecution of both popery and prelacy; and the Scots accordingly received him among them, fought a battle for him against Cromwell at Dunbar, and now crowned him. A sermon was preached on the occasion by Mr. Robert Douglas, who had the reputation (but upon no just grounds) of being a descendant of Mary Queen of Scots. The crown was put upon the young king's head by the Marquis of Argyle, whom ten years after he sent to the scaffold for compliances with Cromwell. The defeat of the Scots and their young king at Worcester, on September 3, of this year, put an end to Charles' adventure, and he with difficulty escaped out of the country. How he subsequently treated the covenant and its adherents need not here be particularized.

On the 1st of January, 1660, General Monk commenced that march from Scotland to London which was so instrumental in effecting the Restoration. He started with his little army of six or seven thousand men from the town of Coldstream, in Berwickshire—a name which has been commemorated in the title of a regiment which he is believed to have embodied at that place, or soon after. Monk had spent about three weeks at Coldstream, which was a favorable spot for his purpose, as the Tweed was there fordable; but he seems to have found it a dismal place to quarter in. On his first arrival he could get no provisions for his own dinner, and was obliged to content himself with a quid of tobacco. His chaplains, less easily satisfied, roamed about till they obtained a meal at the house of the Earl of Hume, near by.

On the 1st of January, 1801—the initial day of the nineteenth century—Ireland passed into incorporated union with Great Britain, and the three kingdoms were thenceforth styled the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. The expression "initial day of the nineteenth century," requires something to be said in its defense, for many persons regard the year 1800 as the beginning of the present century. The year 1801 is in reality entitled to this honor, because then only had the previous century been completed. To make this plain, let the reader reflect that it required the year 100 to complete the first century, and the year 200 to complete the second century, and so on through all that followed. To say, then, that the year 1800 was the first of a new century, is to be led by sound instead of fact.—Dion.

Mastered by His Subject.

Mr. Spurgeon closed a recent sermon as follows: "Brethren, I am conscious that I have not preached as I ought to have preached this morning. I have been mastered by my subject. I could sit down alone and picture my divine Master on the cross. I delight to do so. It is my comfort to meditate on him. I see him hanging on the tree, and carefully survey him, from his head encircled with the thorns, down to his blessed feet, made by the nails to be fountains of crimson blood. I have wept behind the cross at the marks of the dread scourging which he bore: and then, coming to the front, I have gazed upon his pierced hands, and lingered long before that opened side. Then I feel as if I could die of a pleasing grief and mournful joy. Oh, how I then love and adore! But here before this crowd I am a mere lisper of words—words which fall far below the height of this great argument. Ah me! ah me! Who among the sons of men could fitly tell you of his unknown agonies, his piercing anguish, his distraction and heart-break? Who can fully interpret that awful cry of 'Eloi, Eloi, lama sabachthani?'—My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' Alone I can hide my face and bow my head: but here what can I—O Lord, what can thy servant do?

"'Words are but air, and tongues but clay,
And thy compassions are divine.'

"I can not tell of love's bleeding, love's agony, love's death! If the Holy Ghost will graciously come at this time and put me and my words altogether aside, and set my Lord before you, evidently crucified among you, then shall I be content, and you will go home thoughtful, tender, hating sin, and, therefore, more deeply happy, more serenely glad, than ever before. The Lord grant it for his name's sake! Amen!"

Resolutions for the New Conference Year.

Resolved, 1. That I enter upon it with a clean heart, a loving spirit and a Bible conscience.

2. That I enter upon it with "malice toward none and charity for all."

3. That I will attend every public service unless detained by a reason which I can ask God to accept.

4. That I will attend the Wednesday evening prayer meeting.

5. That I will erect a family altar.

6. That I will read the Bible more than last year.

7. That I will "contribute of my earthly substance, according to my ability, to the support of the gospel and the various benevolent enterprises of the church," as I solemnly promised before God and my brethren I would do, when I united with the church.

8. That I will not speak evil, "particularly of magistrates and ministers," because it is wrong, and because I also said that I would not thus speak when I said that I would be cheerfully governed by the rules of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

9. That I will have an eye single to the glory of God and the interests of his church on earth in all I say and do.

10. That I will do my best to make this the best year in my religious experience and in the history of the church to which I belong.

11. That I will be a manly man, a womanly woman—a true Israelite.

12. That I will daily and hourly live prepared to exchange worlds.

13. That I will by the blessing of God endeavor to make the world better by being in it.

14. That I will read these resolutions twice.—Meyersdale Messenger.

The Secret of the Lord.

The secret of mathematics is with the mathematician. A child of a few years of age sees columns of figures and a number of rules, and gets a small idea that there is such a thing as the science of mathematics; but it is a dark mystery to the child. It will remain a profound mystery to him, until he becomes a mathematician. And, even then, he may know but very little of the secret, as compared with what may be known. The secret of mathematics is with the mathematician, just in proportion to his knowledge of the science of mathematics, and his skill in working out the difficult problems of the science. He may possess the secret of ordinary arithmetic, and yet may not possess the secret of algebra. And he may understand the secret of algebra, after awhile, and yet not understand the secret of geometry during all of his life. And yet, it may be truly said, that he possesses the secret of mathematics. Now, "the secret of the Lord is," as the Psalmist says, "with those who fear him." Is there anything strange or unreasonable in this assertion? No; it is one of the most reasonable things in the world. It is the legitimate and logical outcome of a soul's living and loving relation to his Lord. He who has experienced a real change of heart knows something of Christ, which an unconverted person can not know so long as he remains unreconciled to God. No one can understand the love of Christ until he has felt the power of that love throbbing in his soul, and prompting him to respond to Christ's love by grateful adoration and a glad willingness to obey his bidding. But the Christian does not understand the whole secret of his Lord, and never will in this world. And yet what little he does know of it makes him anxious to learn more, and his efforts are rewarded, even in this life.—C. H. W., in Watchman.

Men of One Idea.

The world is always slow to recognize and to honor its real benefactors during their lives. It doesn't always do so after they are dead. We think some one—one of the unhonored, perhaps—has already made some such remark. It is repeated, because it is so sadly and so generally true. Prominent among its benefactors, of whom the world is not worthy, and doesn't promise to immediately become worthy, are those whom it contemptuously designates as "one-idea men," "hobby-riders," and whom it seeks to extinguish as mere "cranks," and seems surprised that they live. Undoubtedly among the men thus designated, there have been, are, and will continue to be, some bad men, whose influence is "only evil," and who deserve even more contempt from the world than they get. It is more generally true that every scriptural reformation of a corrupt religion; every important discovery in science; every successful movement for the uplifting of society; every advance in social order; every successful agitation for the civil and political freedom of man and woman; everything, in fact, that has aided in scattering the brooding darkness of a fallen world, has been almost, if not entirely, the work of men and women whom the world, in their day, derisively designated as "one-idea people," "hobbyists," and "cranks." What the world needs to-day, needs specially, and will always need, is men and women who know sound and healthy hobbies when they see them; and are willing to mount and ride them in spite of the clamor of the ignorant, and for the benefit of mankind.—Evangelist.

Nature's Kindly Breath.

Of all the metaphors, that which calls Oxygen "Nature's Kindly Breath," is the most apt. It is indeed the kindly part of nature's breath. Observe the result of this bountiful respiration:

Christ is the key to the history of the world. Not only does all harmonize with the mission of Christ; all is subordinate to it. When I saw this it was to me as wonderful and surprising as the light which Paul saw on his way to Damascus.—Von Muller.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

Distress After Eating

Sick Headache

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would have a faint or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." GEORGE A. I am fifty-five years of age.

Half of my life I have been a sufferer from a disordered liver, and the last three years a victim of that dread disease, consumption; was reduced to eighty-seven pounds, a mere skeleton, helpless, pronounced beyond recovery by my physicians, and given up to die by friends. In order to gratify my loving wife, I began taking Wm. SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, July 12, 1888.

Dr. R. M. Davis, County Line, Miss., reports having cured a cancer of long standing that years of the most skillful medical practice had failed to benefit at all. Besides, we have numerous assurances of cures effected in Asthma, Bilious Colic, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Diphtheria, and Malarial Fever.

Rev. W. A. Mason, pastor of the Baptist Church, Crystal Springs, Miss., writes under date of July 2nd:

At your request, I will say that for about eight years I have been suffering with a sore on the back of my neck which was caused by the rubbing of a mole by my shirt collar. It gradually spread till larger than a quarter-dollar. About six weeks ago, I commenced the use of Microbe Killer. From the very beginning I felt an improvement, and it has gone on steadily till now; though I have been very irregular in taking the remedy. I am satisfied that directions closely followed would effect a speedy permanent cure. W. A. MASON.

I gladly testify that, after suffering with a severe case of malarial fever, I tried Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, and am now perfectly well. I strongly recommend it to suffering humanity. JAS. J. BUCKLEY, 471 Chippewa Street.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., June 17, 1888.

To Whom It May Concern:

This is to certify that after taking one jug of Microbe Killer I was permanently cured of a severe attack of bronchitis and pulmonary inflammation, said illness having resisted all methods of medical treatment.

I cheerfully recommend Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer as being more than is claimed for it. HENRY V. MIELLY, With Rice, Born & Co., 77 Camp Street.

MASON & HAMLIN

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. One hundred styles from $22 to $900 or more. Illustrated catalogues free.

ORGANS $22 TO $900.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the excellence achieved by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute mainly to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "MASON & HAMLIN PIANO STRINGER," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity for standing in tune, and other important advantages.

Ten Thousand Subscribers is what the Publisher and friends of the ADVOCATE ask for.

Ten Thousand Subscribers is the number that all say the paper should have in the bounds of the three Conferences. How can we secure the requisite number to make up the 10,000? If each subscriber will send in one new subscriber, we will have more than enough to make the 10,000. If each preacher will send in ten new subscribers, it will give the ADVOCATE over 10,000.

THE PUBLISHER'S PROPOSITION.

Brethren and friends, if you will give the ADVOCATE a subscription list of 10,000, I will give $2,000 to the superannuated preachers, widows and orphans' fund, to be divided among the three Conferences, pro rata, in proportion to the number of new subscribers sent in from each Conference.

My object in asking for the ADVOCATE'S increased circulation is to enlarge its field of usefulness and increase its power for good in this part of our Zion.

New subscribers and letters of encouragement are coming in every mail, for all of which, together with the cordial reception at the recent Conferences, I am profoundly grateful.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 3, 1889.

Rev. T. A. S. Adams, D. D.

When the telegraph announced the sudden death of this eminent minister of our denomination, the whole church was startled. That a man, ruddy and hearty with robust health, in the very prime of manhood and usefulness, should be cut down, almost in a moment, was enough to cast a deep gloom over the entire communion. Without a premonition, without even a warning sickness, the strong man was called away. How true is that saying: "In the midst of Life we are in death"! How wise is that injunction: "Be ye also ready, for the Son of man cometh in an hour when ye think not"!

Dr. Adams was a man of large and varied attainments. He was a fine linguist, reading fluently several modern languages, besides having a pretty thorough acquaintance with the Greek and Latin classics, and was also a good Hebrew scholar. He devoted several years of his life to teaching, and was a master in that profession. He had charge of schools for girls and schools for boys, and was for several years the popular president of Centenary College. When he left that institution, the friends of the college looked upon his departure with sincere regret. In those schools he left an impress for good upon all his pupils.

Dr. Adams was an author of no mean repute. He was also a poet of fine powers. Some of his poetic gems published in this paper are perfectly exquisite. Several books of poetry published by him adorn the libraries of many of his friends in Mississippi and Louisiana. Dr. Adams was always a good preacher, and sometimes he would rise far above his level in preaching "the glorious gospel of the blessed God." His sermon before the last North Mississippi Conference was a grand exposition of John i, 10. We never heard him preach better than on that occasion. We presume that was his last sermon. It would have been a fitting close for the life of any minister.

Dr. Adams possessed many fine qualities of mind and heart, and these, refined by the graces of the Spirit, made him a most genial companion. He was a man of splendid physical make, and from that we thought the promise of a long life was assured to him. But the messenger came suddenly, and he went into the presence of the Master: and there we leave him, being assured that "the Judge of all the earth will do right." May the Divine Spirit comfort the bereaved wife.

Louisiana Conference.

The forty-third session of this body convened in Carondelet Street Church, in this city, December 19, 1888. The Conference was opened by religious service conducted by Bishop R. K. Hargrove. The Bishop read the fourth chapter of 1. Timothy, and gave short comments. The brethren then sang with fervor the old pilgrim song:

"Children of the heavenly King,
As we journey, let us sing."

After which the Bishop led the congregation in prayer.

The roll being called, a large number of clerical and lay brethren answered to their names. John T. Sawyer was elected secretary. The first thing the Conference did was to pass a resolution that all business, except minute business, shall be transacted in the afternoon. This does away with the confussion consequent upon counting moneys, etc., during the session. Various communications were received and referred to appropriate committees.

Rev. W. C. Dunlap, Commissioner of Education for the colored people; G. G. Smith, of the North Georgia Conference; G. W. Bachman, of North Mississippi Conference, and J. W. Chambers, of the Mississippi Conference, were introduced.

The following were admitted on trial: John F. Foster, Thomas L. Lallanee, A. D. McVoy, Jr., George E. Greene, James J. Kelley, Charles F. Staples. These are all young unmarried men!

The following remain on trial: George T. Ashley, W. J. Porter, John B. Williams, James E. Riddle, Walter Dunstan, Charles B. Carter, William F. Henderson, Clayton M. Lyons, James E. Denson.

The following were elected to deacons' orders: R. P. Howell, William H. Hill, Harry W. May, James E. Riddle.

The following local preachers were elected deacons: Henry H. Ahrens, Henry M. Banks.

The following traveling preachers were elected to elders' orders: Daniel C. Barr, Albert T. Galloway, Henry J. Boltz.

The following local preacher was elected to elders' orders: James D. Parker.

The names of the elders being called one by one, they read their reports, and their characters passed.

These reports were more variable than we had reason to suppose they would be. Some pastors made very fine reports, both as to increase in membership and in finances. Others report a standstill, and some report decrease in both. One curious feature of the reports is, that most of those who reported collections in full reported deficiencies in the salaries of pastors and presiding elders. This seems to us to be a sharp criticism of the work of the stewards. If the pastors can bring up the collections in full, it seems to be a reasonable inference that the stewards can bring up the preachers' salaries. At any rate, this discrepancy calls for explanation on the part of the stewards. Another thing demonstrated in these reports is the fact that where collections were delayed till the latter part of the year they were generally deficient. The Bishop several times called the attention of the preachers to this fact, and urged upon them the necessity of beginning early in the year if they desired to bring up good collections. In a good cause there is nothing like beginning early, working industriously and continuing late.

The Bishop's address to the candidates for admission into full connection was full of practical points, emphasized by earnestness and tenderness. The Bishop dwelt specially upon the direction of the Discipline to "instruct the children in every place," and exhorted the candidates to be diligent in keeping this direction of the law.

The report of the special committee on the Payne and Lane Institutes for colored people was in every way favorable to those institutions, and was adopted by the Conference. The report pledged the Conference to raising $120 for the running expenses of those institutions during the year 1889; and $150 were raised on the spot. This money was paid, and then Bro. Dunlap sang the "Centenary Song," and the brethren responded with the chorus as only Methodist preachers can sing.

The greeting from the Woman's Missionary Society in Louisiana by the president, Mrs. Fullilove, of Keachie, was admirably read by Mrs. Auvray, of this city. The response by Bishop Hargrove was brief, and to the point. The work of the women in our Conference is gradually increasing in interest and power. Many new members have been this year added to the societies; and under the efficient management of the present Board the work has gone forward, and the promise for the future is brightening.

On Friday evening the anniversary of the Church Extension Board was held in Carondelet Street Church. The audience was not as large as it was hoped it would be. The secretary's report showed a gratifying progress on this line of work, though the collections did not reach the assessment on the Conference. The address of Dr. Morton was a thorough presentation of the whole subject of church and parsonage extension, and was one of the best the Doctor has yet delivered. The audience received the address with great approbation and favor. No collection was taken.

The report of the Board of Education, read by the chairman, Rev. J. A. Parker, was an able document, presenting the subject in all its various phases in a most interesting manner. It showed that our schools were in a better condition than formerly, and the promise of still better condition in the future. The Board recommended a Board of Commissioners to collect moneys for the aid of young men of the ministry seeking an education at Centenary College. The debate on this recommendation was sharp and spirited, and was finally passed by a large vote. President Hunnicutt made a splendid address on the subject of Christian education, which went to the hearts of the brethren; and many of them have resolved hereafter to take a deeper interest in this most important subject. Bishop Hargrove also gave the Conference the benefit of his long experience on this line of church work, and his practical remarks were wise and weighty, and will do good in the future. Also on the report of the Board of Church Extension the Bishop reinforced Dr. Morton's speech by a powerful appeal in behalf of the loan fund for church extension, which was responded to by the Conference with the handsome collection of $1,115 for the Linus Parker Loan Fund.

Bro. McLaurin, the superintendent of the American Bible Society, appeared before the Conference in the interest of Bible circulation, and gave a fresh impetus to that important cause by his earnest words. Bro. McVoy, of Mansfield Female College, gave a gratifying account of the present status of his school, and, while portraying the prospects of that institution, urged upon us the necessity of upholding this, our only female college.

The missionary anniversary on Saturday evening was not a success, except as to the address. The audience was small, and the collection was small, but the address by Dr. Morton was a very fine one. Dr. Morton was the only connectional officer present, and the brethren made him do duty on all occasions.

The closing evening was a very exciting one, owing to an anticipated change in many of the appointments of this city; but after all was over, nearly everybody got down to a quiet level. The weather during the Conference session was the best we ever saw, and everybody enjoyed it. Bishop Hargrove won on the affections of our people from the first tap of the gavel to the last, and went away followed by their benedictions.

The statistics are as follows: Local preachers, 86; members, 18,249; infants baptized, 906; adults baptized, 992; Sunday-schools, 201; teachers, 1,455; scholars, 9,682; collected for Conference claimants, $3,403 90; Bishops' Fund, $740; foreign missions, $4,617 58; domestic missions, $1,233 57; education, $579 45; Woman's Missionary Society, $1,253; church extension, $1,150 50; Bible cause, $807 26; number of churches, 218—value, $426,335; parsonages, 62—value, $51,200; value of other property, $193,327; paid presiding elders, $5,269; paid preachers in charge, $41,731.

We have met with the thought that, perhaps, "all things have gone smoothly with us, because we did not care to make the world better or to be better ourselves." The purple and the fine linen and the sumptuous fare are enjoyable things, while an unheeded beggar starves at the gate. Duty leads along a rough road. Practical religion has to take up heavy burdens at every step of the way. Fighting evil fiercely and beating it back bravely is the only way to better the world or ourselves; and in "that war there is no discharge."

Did you tell your friend, who is not a subscriber to the ADVOCATE, how very cheap it is? It will cost him less than four cents for every seven days; two dollars for three hundred and sixty-five days. The religious paper is the cheapest article on the market.

F. D. Maurice says: "The last and culminating point in the divine education is that in which we learn the meaning and ground of self-sacrifice." That is precisely the teaching of the earthly life of our Lord.

Notice.

To the Members of Louisiana Conference:

DEAR BRETHREN: Please take up the collection for publishing the Minutes, and forward to me as soon as possible. The amount in each case is small, being only one-fourth of your assessment for Bishops. We need the money in hand, so that we may not be delayed in sending out the Minutes.

JOHN T. SAWYER, Secretary.

NEW ORLEANS, LA., Dec. 25, 1888.

Notes.

The Watchman publishes the names of four subscribers lately renewing their subscriptions, and their ages are: 85, 88, 91 and 95 years, respectively.

Let all our presiding elders and preachers in charge ponder long and thoroughly this sentence from Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, of the London Methodist Times: "In the present day nothing but self-sacrificing toil and perpetual adaptation and re-adaptation can save any church, however strong, from disaster and ultimate extinction."

The last Wednesday in January is the day set apart as a day of prayer for colleges. Let all our pastors take advantage of this, and in their prayer meetings that night give our people a plain talk on Christian education and call their people to pray for all the colleges in the land, and especially our colleges, every one of which needs praying for.

That the Sunday paper is not a good thing is shown by the New York Mail and Express, when it gives the contents of such papers in New York City for one Sunday during last month. There were 27 columns about murders, 27 items of shame, 17 of theft, 7 of swindling, 97 of other crimes—these items filling 74 columns. There were 318 columns devoted to sporting, theatres, fashion, sensation, fiction and personal mention. There were 467 columns of foreign, political and other news, editorials, specials, literature and art. There were 43¾ columns given to matter of a religious character! All good people should unite against such abominations.

Cardinal Gibbons, of Baltimore, has written a letter to Rev. W. F. Crafts, of New York, in which he heartily endorses the petition to Congress for the law forbidding Sunday work in the government's mail and military service and in inter-state commerce. He says he is most happy to add his name to those of the million of others who are laudably contending against the violation of the Christian Sabbath by unnecessary labor, and who are endeavoring to promote its decent and proper observance by judicious legislation. We can not see why any reasonable man should be opposed to the abolition of Sunday slavery and the suppression of Sunday crime."

The Richmond Advocate has the following, which we "second" for the present. When the time comes we hope to see the weekly missionary paper issuing from our House at Nashville, and circulating in every nook and corner of Southern Methodism. In the meantime let us have this:

The people can be reached only through the Advocates. The Mission Board would do well to get an editor to prepare a column for these papers. The matter must be put in a taking shape. A lazy, clumsy, doughy person would smother the project. The work must be done by the pen, not scissors. If there can be found the right man, give him two thousand dollars a year and full swing. The church is hungry for crisp, vivid and pithy notes on missions. Drooling essays dampen enthusiasm, Rattling bulletins stir.

Speaking of the sort of men needed to do Christian work in these days, and especially in cities, the Evangelist gives this example of the right sort:

To reach men in this direct way does not require a professional education. Sometimes men of business discover in themselves an aptitude for it, which is better than all the learning of the schools. The late Theodore Roosevelt, even while engaged in large business, always reserved one day in the week to visit among the poor. Nor did he count it a hardship, but a privilege—a work which was "twice blessed," and from which he received far more than he gave. But he was a man among a thousand, who in his big breast carried a great, loving heart. He did not go among the poor to patronize them, or to touch them with the tips of his fingers. When he sat down by the bedside of a poor sewing woman, dying in a miserable tenement-house, he could not have been more gentle if it had been his own sister who was passing through the last agony; and as she looked up in his face, her closing eyes rested on a countenance which was to her like that of a brother.

Rev. B. Jones writes from Moss Point, Miss., December 27, 1888: "I arrived at Scranton, December 21; was kindly received by Bro. Everett, since which time we have been kindly entertained by our friends, the Daniels and Griffins. We have no parsonage, and have been looking around for a house in which to live. The members of our church in Scranton and vicinity are few in number, and most of them are impecunious. Our church building is in debt, $216. I shall have to look for aid both for my own support and for aid in paying this debt to friends not members of my charge. Still I am trustful and hopeful of final results."

If you would present your friend with a good New Year's gift, send him the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for 1889. That will be a present which will do good all the year round.

Personals.

Bishop Galloway was in attendance upon our Conference the first day. Having been the editor of our paper for four years, the Bishop was at home among us, and the brethren were delighted with the compliment of his presence.

Several brethren of the Mississippi Conference gave our Conference a call as they were en route for their fields of labor for the coming year. Methodism is a connection, and wherever a preacher happens to stray into a Conference he feels that he is a part of it.

Rev. T. Y. Ramsey, at the late session of the North Mississippi Conference, after an uninterrupted work of forty-five years, was placed upon the superannuated list. Thus, after half a century of successful toil in the glorious cause of the Master, this old hero retires from the regular work with the love of all his brethren and the esteem of the whole church. May his declining years be peaceful and end in "the glorious morn!"

Rev. Q. A. Oats, of the North Mississippi Conference, has been transferred to the Los Angeles Conference, and stationed at Santa Ana. Our readers will remember Bro. Oats as an occasional correspondent of the ADVOCATE, and we hope to hear from him in his distant field of labor.

One brother reported a lady on his charge who dismissed her cook for one month, and applied the money thereby saved to help educate a young friend. Let all our readers take cognizance of this as an example of self-denial.

The number of booksellers was quite a feature of the Conference. Four or five men, urging the sale of their books—all of them the very books that preachers ought to read—are rather too many for the pocket-books of half-paid itinerants. And yet we believe all of them sold some books.

The Conference was disappointed in not hearing Dr. Barbee, our Book Agent. He arrived the day before the Conference convened, but was taken ill and returned home before we had an opportunity to hear him on our publishing interests.

Rev. T. J. Carver, formerly publisher of this paper, and for many years superintendent of the Carondelet Street Church Sunday-school, died very suddenly a few days before Christmas. The widow and orphan daughter have our sympathies in this sore bereavement.

One of the best things we ever knew to occur in a Conference was the reading of a part of the Discipline by the secretary for the special benefit of the presiding elders; and this done by the direction of the Bishop.

Dr. Morton stated that during last year one church a day for every working day in year had been added by the Church Extension Board. That is certainly a fine showing, considering that we have just commenced the work of church extension.

Rev. J. J. Ransom, our former missionary to Brazil, has gone as missionary to Cuba.

Rev. R. S. Trippett, who for forty-four years has gone out and come in with the brethren of the Louisiana Conference, and who has preached eloquently all over our State, found that his growing infirmities compelled him to seek repose, and at our late session asked of the Conference the superannuate relation, which was granted. Bro. Trippett has been preaching forty-six years, and retires from the active service with the esteem and respect of all his brethren.

We have received several batches of commendatory resolutions by churches concerning their departing pastors. We are sure they mean what they say; but we are of opinion that the preachers concerned will be better served by not publishing them. Long ago it was declared by the Spirit of God that the preachers are "the messengers of the churches and the glory of Christ," and that is enough.

The disappearance of Rev. J. V. Penn is still a mystery to his friends. Nothing whatever has been heard of him. We hear that his friends found his Conference money and papers in his trunk, and everything was in correct shape. We have been able to find no clue to his whereabouts, and can form no theory that will satisfactorily account for his disappearance.

Rev. L. A. Reed, now in his seventy-seventh year, received at our last Conference a large circuit for his appointment, and has gone out to it with all the enthusiasm of a young man.

Bishop Galloway is to hold the Florida Conference, which meets in Barton, January 9.

A pleasant call from Bro. Mellen and Bro. Murrah last week was a special gratification to us.

The death of Rev. Robert W. Macnell, presiding elder of the Durango district, Mexican Border Conference, is announced. He died at Dombre De Dios, December 21. There are no particulars.

Rev. George R. Loehr and family, from our China Mission, are on a visit home, having arrived in Georgia a few days since.

Rev. Jacob Iber, of this city, called in during the week and renewed his subscription to the ADVOCATE for the thirty-fifth time. How these old subscribers do love the paper! God bless them all, and the new ones, too.

Rev. Q. A. Oats, a transfer from North Mississippi to Los Angeles Conference, passed through our city last Monday en route to his new appointment, Santa Ana.

The latest news from Bishop McTyeire is that he is slowly recovering. The prayers of the church still ascend to the throne of grace in his behalf.

The postoffice address of Rev. John A. Ellis, presiding elder of the Vicksburg district, is Vicksburg, Miss.

A welcome visitor came into this office, December 31, carrying in his arms a big New Year's turkey. Such visitors are thrice welcome; and may they never forget the poor editor!

REV. GEO. W. F. PRICE, D. D., President.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

From Rev. Dr. McAnally, editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate:

"I have tried J. C. Maguire's Cupuliranginon myself and others, and it is my opinion that to produce a healthy and safe action on the Liver, Kidneys and serofulous generally, there is not a better medicine known, and for persons of Billious or Costive habits its action is most effective and salutary."

R. R. McANALLY.

Mr. P. Werlein:
I certify that the Mathushek piano that I bought of you, and which I have been using for some time, is an instrument consisting all the desirable qualities for execution, and, above all, for the voice. It keeps perfectly in tune.
J. ROLDOLPHE.

Mr. Werlein:
The Mathushek upright piano obtained from you some one year gives perfect satisfaction. I shall take pleasure in recommending the Mathushek to all my friends needing a first class piano.

Philip Werlein, Esq.:
Dear Sir—I have never heard any complaint about the Mathushek piano. It gives full satisfaction.
L. SO HRINK.
New Orleans, June 2, 1888.

Mr. Ph. Werlein:
This is to certify that I bought my Mathushek piano in February, 1879, and that my daughter has used it daily ever since, practicing not less than four hours daily. The piano has given us entire satisfaction.
NEMOURS BIENVENU,

New Orleans, June 2, 1888.

Mr. Ph. Werlein:
I hereby certify that I have given music lessons to Miss Bienvenu on her Mathushek piano for nine years.
H. ROLLING.

Mr. Philip Werlein:
Dear Sir—It affords me great pleasure to state that the Mathushek piano purchased of you has given unqualified satisfaction. I can say that for sweetness of tone and for keeping in tune the Mathushek piano takes the lead. My advice to all would be to secure a Mathushek piano.
T. R. McGGAH,
527 Chartres street.
New Orleans, July 14, 1888.

Mr. Philip Werlein,
Dear Sir:
The Mathushek piano which you sold me in 1873 is to-day, in my judgment, superior to many of the new pianos of recent manufacture which are offered for sale. I knew nothing of the instrument when I purchased it save its tone and general appearance pleased me.
After fifteen years' constant use I can bear testimony to its purity and volume of tone, quick and clear response to the touch, and excellence and durability of its make.
Fraternally Yours,
MORRIS C. COLE,
Pastor First Baptist Church.

These are only some of the testimonials, and from these can be seen how the great Mathushek pianos have become the pianos of the day.

Dear Sir:—In April, 1885, I suddenly received notice that my ordination examination would be held in a fortnight. I had only ten (10) days in which to prepare for the Exam. I should recommend a year's preparation in the case of any one so utterly unprepared as I was; but your System had so strengthened my natural memory that I was able to remember and give the gist of any book after reading it once. I, therefore, read Lightfoot, Proctor, Harold, Browne, Mosheim, &c., &c., once and was successful in every one of the nine papers. The present Bishop of Edinburg knows the facts.

THE BOOK OF THE NEW YEAR.

The book of the New Year is opened,
Its pages are spotless and new:
And so, as each leaflet is turning,
Dear children, beware what you do!

Let never a bad thought be cherished,
Keep the tongue from a whisper of guile,
And see that your faces are windows
Through which a sweet spirit shall smile.

And weave for your souls the fair garment
Of honor, and beauty, and truth;
Which will still with a glory enfold you,
When faded the spell of your youth.

And now, with the new book, endeavor
To write its white pages with care;
Each day is a leaflet, remember,
To be written with watching and prayer.

And if, on a page you discover,
At evening a blot or a scrawl,
Kneel quickly and ask the dear Savior
In mercy to cover it all.

So when the strange book shall be finished,
And clasped by the angel of light,
You may feel, though the work be imperfect,
You have tried to please God in the right.

And think how the years are a stairway
On which you must climb to the skies;
And strive that your standing be higher
As each one away from you flies.

MR. EDITOR: My grandma organized a society of children called the "Pecan Grove Home Builders," in September. At that time we had seven members; we have now eleven. Miss Lucinda B. Helm sent us all mite boxes, and we sent our money to aid in building parsonages for our ministers. Our brother told you about the death of our dear little sister, Helen. We are sad and lonely without her; but we keep her mite-box on the mantelpiece. She had one dollar in her mite-box while we were saving half a dollar in ours. I have been told that the toad's jewels are its eyes, so bright and so brilliant and so beautiful; but I never could have found it out by myself. Joseph Rowe, the answer to your question is, "Tabitha or Dorcas," found in Acts ix, 3. I could not find out where John the Baptist was ever baptized. My brother Gardner, sister Loruh, and myself have all joined the church. You must pray for us to be good. Our brother, Will, got a lead pencil and scribbled on some paper and folded it up, and said he was going to send it to the "Indian Tory," so the Indians could have something to read. He will be three years old December 3, and we think he is very smart. Your friend,

MARY L. CURRIE.

MR. EDITOR: I saw a letter in your paper last week from Frank Hill. Papa used to live at Patterson, too, and as we were near neighbors to Mr. Hill, I knew Frank very well. He used to ride after the cows on a little red pony. Papa has moved to Gainesville, Miss., on Pearl river. And I am staying with my uncle at Wesson, going to school. I am ten years old. I read in the fourth reader and study geography, arithmetic, spelling and grammar. We have got a very fine school. We have six teachers and about 300 scholars. Bro. T. L. Mellen was our pastor this year and last year. We all like him, and everybody says he has helped our church so much. I joined the church this year. We have a good Sunday-school and services at the church every Sunday in the month but one, as our pastor preaches at Beauregard one Sunday in the month. My uncle gets the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE now, and will take it next year. I believe papa takes your paper and I hope he will see this letter from,

Your little friend,

BUFORD MOORE.

WESSON, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl eleven years old. I read the little children's letters in the ADVOCATE. We do not take it, but I read them in Mr. Bradford's paper. He is our pastor in Meadville. It is raining, and we won't have any Sunday-school. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday and learn a lesson. I have two sisters and one brother. I go to the public school. I study the fifth reader, arithmetic and writing. If you will publish my letter, it will surprise my little friends in Meadville.

Your little friend,

BERNIE BLEECKER.

Playing Brownie.

It was a very dismal, rainy Saturday. And a very dismal little girl, with something that looked like a raindrop running over each cheek, stood at the sitting-room window, drumming drearily on the pane, through which there was nothing to be seen but a rubber-coated grocery boy with a basket on his arm.

"What a horrid, horrid day!" ponted Alice Kent.

"What a little Miss Grumblekin!" exclaimed busy Aunt Julia, as she hurried through the room, clad in her gossamer waterproof, en route for the market.

"But, auntie, I haven't anybody to play with."

Aunt Julia stopped a moment. "I know a niee game you can play all by yourself," she said.

"What is it?" asked Alice.

"Play you are a good brownie," replied her aunt. "Your mother has a great deal to attend to this morning."

"What do good brownies do, Aunt Julia?"

"Things to help people when nobody sees," was the reply—"surprises, you know." Then she was gone.

Alice stood and watched the umbrella turn the corner. Then her face brightened, and she ran upstairs as fast as her feet could carry her.

As the family sat at the cosy tea table that evening, mamma remarked: "I believe there has been a good fairy around to-day. Somebody dusted my room, and put my work basket to rights, and arranged my top drawer beautifully."

"Why, that is strange, Ellen," said grandma. "I had a similar experience. Somebody found my spectacles, and saved me the trouble of coming down after the morning paper."

"I wish you would notice the hall closet," interjected Aunt Julia. "You know it's a catch-all for the family."

"Yes," sighed mamma. "When everything else is in order that closet rises up before me like a nightmare. I must straighten it out this evening."

"But it looks very nice to-night," continued Aunt Julia, "shawls all folded on the shelves, hoods and gloves and hats and rubbers in their proper places. I could hardly believe my eyes."

"There is a certain little girl," said papa, "who often forgets to put my gown and slippers by the fire, but the fairy must have done it to-night. Have you had a dull day, puss?"

"The pleasantest Saturday I can remember," replied Alice.

No one would have thought her to be the child who pouted at the rain in the morning.—Sunday-School Classmate.

BOY CHARACTER:—It is the greatest delusion in the world for a boy to get the idea that his life is of no consequence, and that the character of it will not be noticed. A manly, truthful boy will shine like a star in any community. A boy may possess as much of noble character as a man. He may so speak and live the truth that there shall be no discount on his word. And there are such noble Christian boys; and wider and deeper than they are apt to think, is their influence. They are the king boys among their fellows, having an immense influence for good, and loved and respected because of the simple fact of living the truth.

Dear boys, do be truthful. Keep your word as absolutely sacred. Keep your appointments at the house of God. Be known for your fidelity to the interests of the church and Sunday-school. Be true in every friendship. Help others to be and do good.—Child's Paper.

THE TAPESTRY-WEAVERS.

Let us take to our hearts a lesson—no lesson can braver be—
From the ways of the tapestry-weavers on the other side of the sea.

Above their heads the pattern hangs, they study it with care,
The while their fingers deftly work, their eyes are fastened there.

They tell this curious thing, besides, of the patient, plodding weaver,
He works on the wrong side evermore, but works for the right side ever.

It is only when the weaving stops, and the web is loosed and turned,
That he sees his real handiwork—that his marvelous skill is learned.

Ah, the sight of its delicate beauty, how it pays him for all his cost!
No rarer, daintier work than his, was ever done by the frost.

Then the master bringeth him golden hire, and giveth him praise as well:
And how happy the heart of the weaver is, no tongue but his own can tell.

The years of man are the looms of God, let down from the place of the sun,
Wherein we are weaving, alway, till the mystic web is done.

Weaving blindly, but weaving surely, each for himself his fate:
We may not see how the right side looks, we can only weave and wait;

But, looking above for the pattern, no weaver need have fear;
Only let him look clear into heaven—the Perfect Pattern is there.

If he keeps the face of our Savior, forever and always in sight,
His toil shall be sweeter than honey, his weaving is sure to be right.

And when his task is ended, and the web is turned and shown,
He shall hear the voice of the Master, it shall say to him: "Well done!"

And the white-winged angels of heaven, to bear him thence shall come down,
And God for his wage shall give him—not coin, but a golden crown.

Give Children Something to Do.

An important point in managing children is to always have ready something for the little hands to do at those times which come quite often on rainy and other days when, tired of play, they listlessly gaze through the window or wonder aimlessly about, not knowing what to do with themselves. Children at such times are a great trial to the busy and often nervous people of the house, and are quite likely to be scolded, though such a course is so unwise and unjust that it can lead only to the worst results in the child's future. Calm and reproving words, kindly spoken, are necessary with all bright children and are usually very effective, but words uttered in a sharp, scolding tone must in most cases work an injury to the child's disposition. It is all the more sad, because the matter could be so easily managed by a very little attention on the mother's part.

How often we hear mothers or older sisters say to some little child who is full of desire to do right if it only knew how, "Do get something to do; how lazy you are; I never saw such a good-for-nothing child. I am sure I don't know what is to become of you," and a great deal more of such talk which, alas, most people have heard too often. The child at such times is not in fault. It is the mother's duty to see that suitable work is always ready, and she should require the child to do a moderate task for which she should not be afraid to give a due measure of praise after it is done. Always be careful to see that the child is not kept too long at one task, as such a course would be worse than idleness.

It is worthy of note that the work given to a child has a great influence in molding the mind and taste. A child kept always at knitting stockings or cutting carpet rags will be very practical, perhaps too much so. A wise mother will have a variety of work, both useful and ornamental. Some parents think it useless to teach boys to sew or knit. It is not, however, for there are many times in a boy's life when such knowledge may be useful. I have often observed that many college boys could mend their own clothes while they were quite up in their classes. I think the subject should be thoughtfully considered by parents, seeing to it that time should never hang on their children's hands for want of something to do.—American Agriculturist.

Let not him who prays, suffer his tongue to outstrip his heart; nor presume to carry a message to the throne of grace while that stays behind.—South.

Physicians are justified in denouncing proprietary medicines which claim to cure everything. A medicine, for instance, that will cure rheumatism in one person, will not necessarily cure it in another, for the condition causing it may be different; but Malaria is always Malaria, and Shallenberger's Antidote will destroy it in the system in every case. If you are suffering from Malaria you will know it, and this medicine will certainly cure you. Sold by Druggists.

RAY—The subject of this sketch, Rev. WILLIAM ANDERSON RAY, died November 26, at seven o'clock, at the residence of his son, in Canton, Miss., and was buried, November 27, at Pearl River Church, nine miles south of Canton, in the presence of a large audience of sorrowing friends and relatives. He was born in Alabama, August 30, 1828; joined the Methodist Church at the age of twelve years, and was converted at Bear Creek Camp Ground, in Alabama, under the ministry of Rev. T. B. McDonald, of the Alabama Conference. To use his own language in reference to this happy event (for he left a record of it in his own handwriting), he "obtained pardoning grace at five o'clock, on Monday evening, September 21, 1818." Thus to the day of his death he had a distinct recollection of the very hour of his conversion.

Bro. Ray was appointed class leader the next year, and continued in that office until 1857, when he was licensed to exhort. In September, 1858, he was licensed to preach and was ordained a deacon by Bishop Pierce in Jackson, Miss., November 24, 1862. He never entered the traveling connection, but he magnified the office of a local preacher, and in that capacity was a man of great usefulness to the church.

Bro. Ray was married to Miss Martha Glass, in Noxubee county, Miss., August 29, 1850. They were congenial and happy, united in the service of God and in their church relations, as well as in holy wedlock. Eight children were born to them. These are all living, the youngest being about twelve years of age, a member of the church, and walking in the footsteps of his father. God has greatly blessed them in their children. And these children, with their now widowed mother, have reason to thank God for such a husband and father as he was to them. He was loved, respected and trusted wherever he was known, and he has left them the heritage of a good name, an unsullied reputation.

Bro. Ray's health had been declining for nearly a year. For some time past his condition was regarded as critical. But he was prepared to go, and had no regrets except from parting with his loved ones at home. It was my privilege to visit him when he passed away. We sang a song of his own selection and prayed with him about an hour before he died. He was perfectly rational and expressed his comfort from the service, and then calmly fell asleep in Jesus without a struggle. A more peaceful death I never witnessed.

W. H. LEWIS.

BRIDGES—JAMES, son of Wilson and Sallie Bridges, of St. Helena parish, La., was born July 24, 1885, and died October 13, 1888. Another sweet little bud of promise has been plucked from earth's fair flowers to adorn and perfume heaven. The mournful parents should be consoled with the thought, that it was so early coveted by our Lord among his chosen ones, and that now it is happily associated with the angels with whom it reached out its little hands to play while dying. May the Lord comfort and save the bereaved loved ones!

J. W. ELLISON, Pastor.

BEIRNES—At her home, in Cottonville, East Baton Rouge parish, La., December 11, 1888, at twelve o'clock, Miss LIZZIE M. BEIRNES departed this life, aged twenty-seven years.

A FRIEND.

PAYNE—Died, November 24, 1888, at the Clarendon Hotch Memphis, Tenn., Mr. E. G. PAYNE, son of Rev. H. G. and Mary Payne. He was born in Vicksburg, Miss., October 8, 1834, while his father had charge of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at that place. In early boyhood he united with the church, remaining for some years; then withdrew, united again in October, 1876, with the Methodist Episcopal Church at Grenada, Miss., in which he lived a consistent member until his death. At the age of fifteen months he was left fatherless; but he inherited the blessings promised to the righteous. He was twice married. For sixteen years he was a great sufferer. All that loving hearts and gentle hands could do was done to alleviate his sufferings. His last hours passed peacefully away. His last words: "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit." God calls some of his people through the fiery furnace of bodily affliction, but they have this promise. "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter."

May the blessed comfort of our holy religion be given to the bereaved wife and sorrowing mother. I was his pastor for one year, and knew him well.

J. E. THOMAS.

HAYSE—Sister MARY E. HAYSE, the wife of Bro. Erasmus Hayse, of Plaquemine Brulee, was born in December, 1834, and died at the above place, September 22, 1888, aged fifty-four years and nine months.

Her sufferings were intense, and of several months' duration, during which time it was the privilege of the writer to visit and worship with her; he had always found her patient, trustful and hopeful, waiting God's time for her release. When the eventful moment came it found her ready, and she was not at all alarmed at the summons to exchange the mortal for the immortal, the material for the spiritual state, feeling that the "sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory that shall be revealed in us;" that lies just beyond in the sinless clime of the happy and the good. Aunt Mary, as she was called, was a faithful member of the church; charitable almost to a fault in her dealings with the erring. She was a model wife, mother, friend and neighbor. Peace be to her ashes, until the "latest trump of the seven," when her soul and ashes shall join together to fly up to God!

T. H. M'CLENDON.

JONES—MARY LUCY JONES was born January 25, 1837, in Marengo county, Ala.; was married to Thomas J. Morgan (of the same county on September 16, 1857; moved to Vermilion parish, La., in the fall of 1867; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, about the year 1870 at Prairie Gregg, and died October 26, 1888, aged fifty-one years, nine months and one day. Sister Morgan was a consistent member of the church, and during her suffering, which extended through several years, often remarked to her husband that she was ready to go when the Master called. Unfortunately she was unconscious two or three days before she died; but her past record speaks for her, and although she was unable to tell us how she felt and what her prospects were, we feel confident that she has entered into eternal rest. She leaves a large family, consisting of husband and nine children. May her death draw them nearer to Christ, and give them a fresh incentive to follow in the steps the Master trod!

HER PASTOR.

HUFFAKER—CORA FISHBURN HUFFAKER, daughter of Thomas J. Fishburn, and wife of E. C. Huffaker, late professor in Centenary College, was born and brought up near Jackson, La., and died at Princeton, W. Va., and was buried near Knoxville, Tenn., on the banks of the Frenchbroad river. Her married life was brief. On June 7, 1888, she was married; on November 28 she died. Dreadful to the young husband and the aging parents is her death; to a very large circle of friends it is a bitter and mournful bereavement, and a sad loss to the Methodist Church, of which she was an active and exemplary member. She had the qualities of a noble woman, and had she lived would have left her impress upon society. She died calmly and bravely, saying in her final moments, "The angels have come at last!" and as peacefully as a child ever fell asleep in its mother's arms, did she sink into the repose of death.

Farewell, bright, beautiful, devout, loving and beloved Cora, a beautiful life was thine, a glorious resurrection and a blissful immortality await thee. Rest in peace!

J. N. S. HUFFAKER.

HAWK—JOHN HAWK was born November 10, 1868, and died November 5, 1888. He was away from home when seized by fatal sickness and, notwithstanding a life spent sinfully, when death began to spread its mantle above him, his thoughts began to tend churchward. He spoke of church and of going to church. After he had offered prayer he said to those about his bed, "You all can call on the Lord, but you can't call like I can." After this he added, "If I could see mamma, I would be willing to go." The devoted mother was present several days; but the shade of death had settled so thickly about her dying boy that her presence was scarcely recognized. May the bereaved ones feed on God's grace!

BAKER—Died at Athens, Claiborne parish, La., October 14, 1888, ABBIE LEE, daughter of J. T. and V. A. Baker, aged twenty months and two days. "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of Heaven." Precious words, the Christian parents' consolation in the times of bereavement.

A Wonderful Food and Medicine,
Known and used by Physicians all over the world. Scott's Emulsion not only gives flesh and strength by virtue of its own nutritious properties, but creates an appetite for food and thus builds up the wasted body. "I have been using Scott's Emulsion for several years, and am pleased with its action. My patients say it is pleasant and palatable, and all grow stronger and gain flesh from the use of it. I use it in all cases of Wasting Diseases, and it is specially useful for children when nutrient medication is needed as in Marasmus."—T. W. PIERCE, M. D., Knoxville, Ala.

The Niagara Bridge.

Prof. W. C. Richards, in the Boston Watchman, thus describes this wonderful structure:

The Cantilever Bridge, built by the side of the old "Suspension Bridge," for the trains of the Michigan Central R. R., is a novelty of mechanical construction which invites the inquiring eye and mind to its examination.

At the point of its location the river is five hundred feet wide at the water's edge, and in the great central flood no pier could be built for the support of a bridge. The great cost and other disadvantages of a true suspension bridge made a novel and cheaper construction desirable. The principle of the Cantilever is that of a trussed beam, supported at or near its centre, with the arms extending each way, and one end anchored, or counterweighted, to provide for unequal loading. This idea was entirely new and untried. Each end is a section of steel, extending from the shore nearly half across the stream. This is supported by a steel tower from which reach two great lever arms—in opposite directions. One grapples fast the rocky shore-cliffs, and the other stretches toward and over the centre of the river. Having no direct support it derives it from the other, and rock-anchored, lever arm. Between the two shore towers there is a double track truss span of almost five hundred feet in length. The two river levers approach each other to within one hundred and twenty feet—their extremities hanging unsupported. This gap is filled up with an ordinary truss structure suspended from the ends of the cantilevers.

The chief ingenuity of the construction is shown, perhaps, in the provision made for contraction and expansion in varying temperatures—allowing freedom of motion to these ends—but preserving perfect rigidity against side force from strong winds. This structure is complete without guys. The heaviest train that can be run on this novel bridge, headed by two immense engines, while a fierce wind is blowing at a speed of seventy-five miles an hour, will exercise upon its ultimate strength a strain of only twenty per cent. In a wild wind, the safety of this remarkable viaduct over a resistless torrent is increased by running upon its tracks the heaviest train of loaded cars that can be utilized. Its shore foundations of masonry, and its mighty steel towers which hold the cantilever arms, are even less surprising than the methods resorted to for projecting the arms and coupling them at the mighty gap midway. Altogether it surpasses immeasurably in engineering genius, tact and skill, the yet impressive Suspension Bridge of Roebling in 1855. Thirty years had made a wonderful advance in mechanical science when the Cantilever was designed and built.

TESTS WITH THE BIG MAGNET.—At Willett's Point, N. Y., there is a monster magnet made out of two fifteen-inch Dahlgren guns and eight miles of cable wire. A number of tests have been made to show the strength or power of this magnet, and they are truly astonishing. A crowbar which was applied to the magnet, required the combined force of four strong men to tear it away. A handful of pins thrown in the opposite direction immediately flew back and attached themselves to the magnet. A seemingly impossible experiment was made with some fifteen-inch cannon balls. The balls were solid, and as much as a strong man could lift, yet the magnet held several of them suspended in the air, one under the other. The most amusing experiment was made with a sledge-hammer. When one tried to wield it in a direction opposite the magnet, he felt as though he were trying to hit a blow with a long feather in a gale of wind. There is nothing in the world that could take the conceit out of a strong man so much as this simple experiment. Another amazing test was made with a number of carpenter's spikes. A spike was put lengthwise on the end of the magnet, then another spike was attached to the first, and so on, until a line of them stood straight out from the magnet at least four feet in length.—Golden Days.

Hood's Sarsaparilla is a purely vegetable preparation, being free from injurious ingredients. It is peculiar in its curative power.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The office of the Tacoma Ledger, W. T., was burned on December 26. The paper had been making a vigorous fight against gamblers and disreputable persons, and it is said the fire was the work of an incendiary.

While a Christmas entertainment was being held, December 26, in a hall at East Prospect, Penn., the building collapsed, and 300 people were hurled with the broken timbers from the second to the first floor. A large number were badly bruised and cut, but fortunately there were no fatal casualties, and only a few were seriously injured.

The American Historical Association, recently incorporated by act of Congress, met in fifth annual meeting in the lecture-room of the Columbian University, Washington, December 26.

About 250 certificates of election to the next Congress have been received by the clerk of the House. Of course there is no doubt about the Republicans having a majority, unless deprived of it by death or other accident. The question is whether it will be one or seven. At present 163 Republicans and 153 Democrats have been certified by official count. In three districts both parties still claim the election.

There is considerable regret expressed among Democratic Senators from the South that Senator Gibson should have introduced a resolution to investigate the elections in several of the Northern States. The general feeling is that by so doing he gave away what the gentlemen on his side of the Chamber had been contending for ever since the war, namely: that the Federal government had no right to examine into the validity of State elections.

The Clyde Line steamer Ozama sailed from New York City, December 29, for West Indian ports. Included in her cargo, which was of a miscellaneous character, were several cases of Remington and Winchester rifles, and nearly a dozen Gatling guns. The arms were consigned to a mythical person at Cape Haytian, and are supposed to be for the use of the insurgents at that port.

The annual banquet of the Massachusetts Tariff Reform League took place, in Boston, at the Hotel Vendome, December 28. The principal guest of the evening was United States Secretary of the Treasury Fairchild.

The appropriation bills are all well advanced towards completion. The appropriation committee will probably finish this week consideration of the Indian and sundry civil bills. Work has already been done on the naval, army, deficiency, agricultural, fortifications and postoffice bills.

FOREIGN.

Experiments which have recently been made in France with a new powder show that it greatly enhances the value of the Gras rifle. A charge two-fifths less than the usual quantity has one-fifth more than the usual force. The powder causes no smoke and can be steeped in water without damage.

The work on the Panama Canal continues, although on some sections labor has been reduced. Altogether, some 2,000 men have been discharged during the past two months, owing to disputes between the Canal Company and the contractors. There are now about 9,000 laborers actually engaged in the work.

The English consul at Zanquebar has issued a proclamation warning all British subjects in that place that they will be liable to seven years' imprisonment if they enter contracts for slave labor. The British traders have made a united protest against the order. They say that slave labor is the only kind of labor obtainable in Zanquebar, and that if this is cut off all work must be stopped. In view of this protest the consul will suspend the enforcement of the proclamation pending instructions from Lord Salisbury.

Gen. Grenfell, at the head of the Welsh regiment of cavalry and Soudanese troops, made a reconnaisance from Suakim, four miles into the interior, on December 28. A force of rebels on camels were seen in the distance, but they retired at the approach of Gen. Grenfell's forces. After filling up the rebel wells, the force returned to Suakim.

The Freeman's Journal, of Dublin, accuses the London Times of attempting to bribe Sullivan, the Fenian. It says the Times dispatched an emissary to America, who discovered Sheridan at Pueblo, Col., and tried to induce him to go to London and testify before the commission, promising him that if his evidence proved satisfactory, he would be paid £10,000 within an hour after his examination was concluded. Sheridan positively declined to appear before the commission, and assured the agent that he was in nowise desirous of sharing the fate of James Carey.

The Pope has written a cordial letter to prelates in Ireland, informing them that he has sent a rich gift to each of the Irish cathedrals.

December 29 was the seventy-ninth anniversary of Mr. Gladstone's birthday, and, notwithstanding his absence on the Continent, scores of letters and telegrams of congratulation were sent to Hawarden. Most of the messages express a wish for the early triumph of home rule.

A mob collected on December 29, in Belgrade, Servia, and marched through the streets to the Austrian consulate, where they shouted "Down with Austria!" and smashed the windows. They then visited a number of residences occupied by Austrians, and made similar demonstrations.

Richter calculates from recent statistics that Germany has at her disposal, in the event of war, an army of 3,513,416 completely drilled men, not counting the reserves and the landsturm, who are not drilled in times of peace.

Ringing Noises

In the ears, sometimes a roaring, buzzing sound, are caused by catarrh, that exceedingly disagreeable and very common disease. Loss of smell or hearing also result from catarrh. Hood's Sarsaparilla, the great blood purifier, is a peculiarly successful remedy for this disease, which it cures by purifying the blood. If you suffer from catarrh, try Hood's Sarsaparilla, the peculiar medicine.

I HAVE LAID MY HEART.

BY GEORGE MACDONALD.

Lord, I have laid my heart upon the altar,
But I can not get the wood to burn;
It hardly fanes even if it begins to falter,
And I—the dark return.

Old sag, or night-fallen dew, has dampened the fuel;
In vain my breath would flame provoke;
Yet, see! at every poor attempt's renewal,
To thee ascends the smoke.

'Tis all I have—smoke, failure, foiled endeavor,
Coldness and doubt and palsied lack;
Such as I have—oh! Thou, Perfect Giver—
Send down Thy lightning back!

A Scrap of Methodist History.

BY REV. JOHN PIPES.

The records of the past reveal to us of the present generation some very curious things. They show that all this Louisiana territory west of the Mississippi river, and especially that south of Red river, belonged to the Arkansas Conference from the year 1836 to the year 1840. The Conference of 1839, in answer to the question, "Where and when shall the next Conference be held?" it was stated, Bethesday Camp Ground, Claiborne parish, La., November 4, 1840. If there is anyone now living in Claiborne parish, who remembers where Bethesday Camp Ground was, and what Bishop presided, and who was the secretary of the Conference, and will make these facts known, it will be the means of saving a piece of history to the church which otherwise would be lost. To show some points of contrast in the church then and now, we will give the appointments of the two districts in our territory in 1839.

ALEXANDRIA DISTRICT.—Richmond Bough, P. E. Opelousas, Benjamin Jones; Claiborne circuit, Uriah Wheeley and S. Retford; Natchitoches, H. B. Pipes; Cheneyville, John Powell; Franklin and Newtown, James L. Newman; Caddo, B. C. Wier; Vermillion, to be supplied.

MONROE DISTRICT.—John N. Hamel, P. E. Monroe, C. McIlvain; Rapides, William Stephenson; Little River, E. W. Yancy; Harrisonburg, Thomas Bean; Trinity, Spencer Walters; Mason Hills mission, William Stanly.

These two districts and thirteen appointments included all the territory now included in the Opelousas, Alexandria, Shreveport, Homer, and the most of, if not all, the Delhi district. This year, 1839, total numbers reported in society were 808 whites and 141 colored. In answer to the question, "What amounts are necessary to meet the claims of the superannuated preachers and the widows and orphans?" it was stated, $1,592 31. Total amount collected was $623 31, which leaves a deficit of $969. But of the amount collected, the Publishing House and chartered fund paid $576, which leaves only $47 31 as collected from the people.

Now, when we look at the increased facilities which we have for work, in population and wealth, with the improvements which we have in the arts, sciences and literature of the day, with the facilities for travel and communication with all the world, the question for us to ponder is, "Are we progressing in church work in proportion to these advantages?"

GRAND CANE, LA., Jan. 1, 1889.

Our City Mission.

BY REV. J. J. BILLINGSLEY.

As the appointee to the New Orleans City Mission, and as the result of the year's work, I reported at the Annual Conference that a young man had been admitted on trial in the Conference as among the first fruits of City Mission work. Several mission Sabbath-schools had been established, two of which enrolled about seventy members each. Three mission stations had been established, with regular weekly services in each.

Arrangements had been perfected with a builder for the erection of three mission chapels (taking in two other points besides the three mentioned above), and would have been built by Conference if the lots could have been secured, which we were not able to purchase.

One hundred open-air services had been held on the public squares of the city, which brought the gospel to from fifty to seventy-five thousand people. Twenty-five thousand tracts had been distributed; about fifty souls had been brought to a knowledge of the truth; twenty-five had been added to the various churches (Methodist) in the city, with more, doubtless, still to come in. Many families had thrown their doors open to the preachers and pastors, ready to be saved when properly evangelized. The attention of Christian people and of other denominations had been arrested to the necessity and importance of the work done and being done through the movement; and, withal, the masses of the people had been deeply impressed that they were not forgotten, and that they were being sought after, etc.: yet the Board of the City Mission resolved unanimously, November 30, not to ask the Conference for the reappointment of a city missionary. But the following letter of appreciation and endorsement of me and of my services was reported by a special committee, composed of Bros. J. C. Grant, Dr. J. W. Adams and J. K. Westerfield; was unanimously adopted by the Board. I think it due me, under the circumstances, that it be given to the readers of the ADVOCATE, many of whom know me, and will entertain a suspicion of failure on my part, and the consequent abandonment of the City Mission, unless otherwise informed. Please do me the favor to publish the letter, which was read in open Conference at its last session by the secretary.

Rev. J. J. Billingsley—

DEAR BROTHER: The Board of Managers of the New Orleans City Mission, at a meeting held on the evening of November 30, 1888, at the Carondelet Street Church, resolved, by a unanimous vote, "That a committee be appointed to express to you, the city missionary, laboring under their direction and control, their appreciation of your services and sacrifices."

We rejoice with you in the successful prosecution of the out-door services, accomplished with less disturbance and outside friction than last year, and reaching a larger number of the class to whom the gospel must be carried, and with results in the conversion of souls, and the formation of mission Sabbath-schools, that prove the inestimable value of the mission work. These results demonstrate the necessity of a minister with heart and soul baptized into this work, and with head and hand thoroughly educated in its details, and who shall be untrammeled in its prosecution, and cheerfully employed, and the wisdom of the request which led Bishop Key to make the present appointment.

The committee appreciate the unflinching courage with which you have faced this arduous work, and the earnest, untiring zeal and patience with which it has been carried on. You have done your duty. We can not express more fully our deep sense of the worth of your labors. We sympathize with you in its fatigues, and fears, and sacrifices. You have worn yourself out in the service of God, and in the employ of the New Orleans City Mission. Encourage your heart that, though months lapse between sowing and harvest, you have already been permitted to see the ripening fields and to garner some of its sheaves. God bless you!

J. C. GRANT,
JOHN W. ADAMS,
J. K. WESTERFIELD.

A Statement and an Appeal.

OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF EDUCATION, Covington, Ga., Dec. 31, 1888.

To the Ministers and Members of the Mississippi, North Mississippi, and Louisiana Annual Conferences, Methodist Episcopal Church, South—

DEAR BRETHREN: You will recognize the impracticability, not to say the impossibility, of one man attending all the pastoral charges of our broad church; and yet it is of the utmost importance that my cause should have a hearing before them all. I, therefore, beg your attention to this paper.

The work I represent is connectional, or it is nothing. It is not bounded by Conference or State lines. It is coextensive in point of territory with the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and the Colored Methodist Episcopal Church in America. It is a purely missionary work. It is an effort on the part of our church to carry forward the same work we did for the negro when he was a slave. It is the same gospel, but by new and adapted methods to his changed relations. We are succeeding slowly, it is true, but great movements, like great bodies, move slowly at first. We are building, not for a day or a year, but for all time, and, therefore, for eternity.

Paine Institute, our first plant in the forward movement of this great enterprise, stands as the sign-board pointing out the road that leads to the grand ultimatum of our labors. But to hold our ground, much less to push forward into other fields, we must have money. What is the interest on $25,000 toward the accomplishment of the grand end had in view by the church when she projected this mission? As strange as it may seem, our very success endangers our final triumph. To pause where we are is to doom the thing to a sickly, ephemeral existence. Recognizing this fact, as well as the imperative call of duty and interest, the Board has determined to broaden its work. In response, therefore, to the earnest request of the colored Bishops, as also by the local Board of Trustees, they have agreed to take the Lane Institute, located at Jackson, Tenn., under its care. It has, therefore, become necessary to appoint a minister of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in charge of that school. This involves the Board in an additional expense of $1,200 for his support. Rev. T. F. Sanders, of the Memphis Conference, is the president of Lane Institute.

Altogether, the estimate of expenses for the fiscal year will not fall short of $5,000; this, besides the moneys needed to equip these schools in the matter of additional buildings. Besides there is an imperative demand for a third school west of the Mississippi river.

Now, brethren, I appeal to you to help us. I can not come to you with the prestige of an assessment. This is one missionary enterprise that does not restrain or inspire the church by levying an assessment. We put it upon your conscience and appeal to your loyalty to Christ and your church. Will you not lift a collection here and now? We need and must have money or abandon this work. Shall it be published to the world that the great Methodist Church, South, had to abandon a great missionary enterprise, involving the salvation of seven millions of our fellow-beings right here at our doors, because it costs the pitiful sum of $5,000 to sustain it for one year? One million members asked for only $5,000! What is that to the member? Just one-half cent. But, alas! alas! nine hundred thousand will not give anything. But even five thousand giving us one dollar would raise the $5,000. Will not each pastor read this appeal to his congregation, and let them give what they will?

Whatever you may raise please remit direct to me through your president or secretary, and I will send receipt and acknowledge in your Conference paper. Above all, pray for me and my work.

Your brother in Christ,
W. C. DUNLAP.

A Good Proposition.

MR. EDITOR: I have just read Mrs. Wilson's letter to Mrs. McGavock, in January number of Woman's Advocate. She very pathetically tells of the urgent needs of Misses Roberts and Reagan in Nantziang, China. One of the great needs is a lady to teach music and singing; the other is an organ. We all know how very essential in worship is good singing, and what a damper is thrown upon the whole service by a failure in the music. The price of an organ there is $125. One made especially for that damp climate would be better than one made here.

The Memphis Conference gave Miss Rankin an organ, which she has taken to Kading. Why can not the ladies of the Mississippi Conference give $125 to purchase an organ for the church at Nantziang? I will be one of twenty-five to give $5 for this purpose, and I ask you, Mr. Editor, to act as treasurer in this matter. Let our ladies act promptly, and send their names and money immediately, and, by so doing, aid in that part of divine worship so very essential. Let none be restricted, however; send $5—more or less—and you, Mr. Editor, when a sufficient sum is contributed, will please send to Miss Kate Roberts at Nantziang, China.

MRS. V. LOU. EDGAR.
WAYNESBORO, MISS., Jan. 1, 1889.

The Wisdom of the Preacher.

One of our valued friends suggests that the beginning of the Conference year is a good time to republish Bishop Parker's editorial on the above subject. As in the main the article is applicable to the ministry of the present time, we comply with the request. It is taken from the ADVOCATE, of May 1, 1873.

Preaching is something more than mere teaching, and, it may be also, something higher. If it were only teaching, the Bible class, and not the pulpit, would be the field of the preacher's labors. Beyond piety and facility in imparting instruction, he would require no other qualification, and there would be no distinctive and special call of God. But, after all, the teaching is essential, and should have prominence in our ministrations. It is written: "And because the preacher was wise, he still taught the people knowledge." Paul was after the same style, "warning every man, and teaching every man in all wisdom." Thus testifies the Old Testament and the New—the author of Ecclesiastes, and the great apostle to the Gentiles. The advice to Timothy to "give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine," exhibits the teaching element to be developed in the labors of the evangelist. And Jesus himself, in addition to his own example and character as "the great Teacher," declares: "Therefore every scribe which is instructed unto the kingdom of heaven is like unto a man that is a householder, which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old." The notion of teaching as a feeding is here probably in the old store and the new. The flock of God must be fed, "nourished up in the words of faith and of good doctrine." The food must not only be appetizing, but it must be nutritive and wholesome. Whatever the dressings and flavorings may be, there must be a substantial provision to build up and perfect every man in Jesus Christ.

It is a noticeable fact that doctrine and exhortation have declined together. Although the hortatory and the didactic are usually regarded as scarcely compatible in the same mind, and are considered as belonging to very different temperaments and orders of intellect, still they seem strangely enough to decay or to flourish together. If the exhorter is almost obsolete in some quarters, so also is the doctrinal and expository preacher. The common opinion on this subject is, doubtless, wrong. "Reading, exhortation, doctrine," are put together by Paul. The fathers, especially in Methodism, preached habitually what would be called doctrinal sermons, and their exhortations were like the march of a tornado. A revival of this kind of preaching would, doubtless, awaken the old-time hortatory gifts and power. We once asked a brother to exhort after another had preached. In a very perplexed way he replied that "he saw no point to splice on." It is not difficult to see that the exhortation must have a good foundation, and that a clear and forcible exhibition of Scripture truth is the very life and inspiration of an appeal to move men to repentance and holiness. We imagine that Wesley exhorted with terrific force after one of his clear and conclusive expositions. Whitefield, whom we usually think of as delivering those wonderful orations, and as existing in an atmosphere of emotion, habitually read and expounded the Scriptures, verse by verse and chapter by chapter, to the people. The pulpit power of Jonathan Edwards has probably never been excelled; but the weapons of his warfare were doctrinal discourses, which he wielded and hurled with the fire and force of thunderbolts. His own explicit testimony is that doctrinal preaching was most successful in promoting and carrying forward the remarkable revival which prevailed in his day.

Robert Hall somewhere says, in substance, that while expository is less exciting than topical preaching to the preacher, it is more instructive to the people. Punshon is a model preacher for the richness and fullness of scriptural matter, and for the inimitable manner in which he unfolds the meaning of his text. Let it be said to the credit of Spurgeon that he gives good gospel measure, and usually explains what he takes in hand. He may, indeed, be set down as a doctrinal and expository preacher, and, wonderful to tell! one of the most popular and useful. Dr. McClintock, all in all the best of American preachers, made his sermons out of his texts. He sought for no quaint and far-fetched topical titles, but gave the mind of the Spirit, as exhibited in what he took in hand. The sermon is rooted in the text even as the shrub, laden with foliage and blossoms, is rooted in the soil of the garden. We might mention examples of eminent preachers among us, as the Pierces, Bishop Doggett, Bishop Kavanaugh and others, not a few, we are glad to say, who preach "the Word." Our young men have the purest and best models in their chief pastors; but the sermon literature of the period, as it comes from the press, is full of pernicious examples. They are often exceedingly thin and vapory—mental speculations and sentimental twaddle. We fear this evil is spreading. The Brooklyn sensationalists are multiplying followers to the great damage of the church, and to the serious detriment of the pulpit. We are in danger of getting away from the inspired models, and from the wisdom of the preacher. "He still taught the people knowledge."

The people are ignorant exceedingly of religious truth. In general they are mere smatterers in science and philosophy; and worse smatterers still in the things of God. They may know more than they practice; but do they understand? General intelligence and high civilization do not necessarily imply religious knowledge. The people need to be taught; and without this kind of preaching, while the world is full of churches and Sunday orations are plentiful, there will be "a famine of the hearing of the words of the Lord." A good old fashioned sermon nowadays on repentance, justification, the new birth or the future punishment of the wicked would be a refreshing novelty in some sections. If the preacher is a fisher, he must also be a feeler of men; and, after all, it is the gospel net rather than the baited hook to which the Savior referred. A distaste for instruction there may be, and many may be repelled by the preacher's method, but results will justify the course adopted. It is not the drawing, but the saving of the people to which we must look. And yet why may not the attractive and the saving be united? "Because the preacher was wise, he still taught the people knowledge," but it is added most suggestively that he "sought to find out acceptable words"—words of delight, as the margin has it—"and that which was written was upright, even words of truth." Let all imitate, as they may, this wisest of the ancients, and put their "apples of gold in pictures of silver."

The Interior—

To do something for the Lord and us is the approved method of coming to Christian graces and of finding joy in the Christian life. But many who feel the desire to do are troubled and uncertain concerning the what and the how. They repeat the question over and over again in their prayers, "What will thou have me to do?" But no voice, like that which responded to the inquiry of the persecuting Saul, directs them to go into this or that city, and they should be told them what they must do. Failing to hear a specific answer, and, feeling somewhat disappointed and perplexed, they simply do nothing. Really, an answer to the question is always to be gathered from the circumstances and surroundings of the questioner. There are needs to be visited and cheered; and if time does not permit this, a message kindly read and comfort may be sent. There are wealthy persons in distress by reason of poverty, in the church, easily within one's knowledge. A little timely aid, offered "in his name," will be doing something for the Master, will depend on not be given, because of lack of means and the pressure of other obligations, it is, at least, practicable to acquire way to interest some friend more abundantly blessed with this world's goods, or some benevolent organization in favor of the church. There are Sunday-school children to be instructed, mission enterprises near at hand, as well as far away, to be encouraged and sustained, acquaintances to be invited to church, a personal part to be taken in prayer meeting, are not these "whats" and "hows" worthy of consideration by one who professes a willingness to do? They are, indeed, but a few of many ways which the alert Christian may find to serve his Lord.

Christian Advocate, N. Y.—

But of supreme importance is the necessity of universal giving. This the Bible everywhere lays down as a duty. God's storehouse is not to be filled by the few rich, but by the many poor. The world's great business is to be borne by the numberless thousands. Its battles are fought by people whose names are on the muster-rolls of the companies, and nowhere else to fame. Its taxes are paid, its railroads built, its lands tilled, its mines worked, its fleets sailed, by the great unknown. The church consists of every class—the rich and the poor. Let everyone, then, lay down the principle: to give, to give with joy, and the high joy which intelligence of the object and a believing heart bring with them. The gift may not be large in the sight of men, but it is the accordingness to God's measurement of duty as God hath prospered—then it is as dear as any gift remembered by the agents of the world's charity. He who gives early, steadily, conscientiously, with his means, according to all the light he can get, and trusting in the divine care and utilization of his gifts, is the wise giver.

An unknown Hindu said, what Emerson was fond of quoting, "Justice is so dear to the heart of nature that, if in the last day one atom of injustice were found, the universe would shiver like a snake-skin to cast it off forever."

Sunday-School Lesson.—Jan. 20.

HEALING OF THE LEPER.

Mark i. 35-45.

GOLDEN TEXT.—"I will; be thou clean."—Mark i. 41.

TIME.—A. D. 27.

PLACE.—Galilee.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. viii. 1-4; Luke v. 12-15.

35. A great while before day.—Before daylight would be better. Literally, while the darkness of the night was still very great. A solitary place.—A remarkable feature of the lake must always have been the concentration of varied life and activity in a basin so closely surrounded with desert solitudes. In ancient times this near contrast of life and death, population and solitude, must have been brought to its highest pitch. It was those "desert places," thus close at hand, on the table-lands, or in the ravines of the eastern and western ranges, which seem to be classed under the common name of "the mountain," that gave the opportunities of retirement for rest and prayer. Prayed.—For prayer even sleep must be abridged. "Prayer," says Petter, "is a holy conference with God."

36. Simon and they that were with him.—Peter was the leader of the pursuing party, thus giving early indication of the impulsive ardor of his nature.

37. They found him.—The disciples, therefore, set forth to follow, having probably, from previous observation of his habits, some notion of the quarter where he was likely to be found. All men seek for thee.—As they went along the town, they failed not to observe that the popular excitement respecting Jesus was reviving with the awakening day; and they met clusters of people who were eagerly inquiring after him, or watching to see or hear him.

38. The next towns.—The Greek word here designates places larger than villages, but unwalled, and less than ordinary cities. Having awakened spiritual desires in the people of Capernaum, he went elsewhere that he might awaken them in others also. His example does not require, but it certainly justifies, an itinerant ministry. It was no retired mountain-lake by whose shore he took up his abode, such as might have attracted the Eastern sage or Western hermit. It was to the Roman Palestine almost what the manufacturing districts are to England. Nowhere, except in the capital itself, could he have found such a sphere for his work and words of mercy. Hence, to the center of Galilee, and to the cities of the Decapolis, he went throughout all Syria; how more could he have accurately fulfilled the vast multitudes which began to flock to him from Decapolis, from Jerusalem, Judea, and beyond Jordan?—Stowe. [illegible] to preach.—The whole purpose of Jesus's coming into the world is expressed in these words. [illegible] Hence, as it was the purpose of God that we should be saved through the preaching of the Gospel, so it was the purpose of Jesus to be able to suffer, and yet to preach, both from the Jewish synagogues and from the pulpit of the mountain, for the [illegible]

39. He preached in their synagogues.—From each of these points that town-synagogues were scattered through the villages of Galilee, is emphatically implied. Throughout all Galilee.—The circuit now begun was the first of a series in which Jesus visited every part of Galilee, preaching and teaching in the synagogue of each town that had one, and often, doubtless, in the open air. It was the bright and sunny time of the year, when the harvest was quickly ripening. The heat was already oppressive at noon, but the mornings and evenings permitted more easy traveling. It was a time of intense labor for the Savior, of which the day's work in Capernaum was only a sample. The bounds of Galilee embraced the many villages and towns of the plain of Esdraelon, and the whole of the hilly country north of it, almost to Lebanon.

40. There came.—This man had ventured, it may be, to linger on the outskirts of the listening crowd, and, undeterred by the severity of the closing sentences of Christ's discourse, came now to claim the blessings which at its opening were pronounced to be the portion of the suffering and the mourning. A leper.—It began with little specks on the eyelids and on the palms of the hand, and gradually spread over different parts of the body, bleaching the hair white wherever it showed itself, coating the affected parts with shining scales, and causing swellings and sores. From the skin it slowly ate its way through the tissues to the bones and joints, and even to the marrow, rotting the whole body piecemeal. The lungs, the organs of speech and hearing, and the eyes, were attacked in turn, till at last consumption or dropsy brought welcome death. The dread of infection kept men aloof from the sufferer; and, the law proscribed him as above all men unclean. The disease was hereditary to the fourth generation. All the notices in the Old Testament, as well as in other Jewish books, confirm this statement that we have something quite different from a mere sanitary regulation. Thus, when the law of Moses was not observed, no such seclusion necessarily found place: Naaman the leper commanded armies in Syria (II. Kings v. 1); Gehazi, with his leprosy that never should be cleansed, talked familiarly with the king of apostate Israel. (II. Kings, viii. 5.) How, moreover, should the Levitical priests, had the disease been this creeping infection, have ever themselves escaped it, obliged as they were by their very office to submit the leper to such actual handling and closest examination. But no: the ordinances concerning leprosy had quite another and a far deeper significance. Seeing then that leprosy was this outward and visible sign of the innermost spiritual corruption, this sacrament of death, there could be no fitter form of evil over which the Lord of life should display his power. He will thus prove himself the conqueror of death in life, as elsewhere, of death accomplished; and his victory over this most terrible form of physical evil is, therefore, fitly urged as a testimony of his Messiahship.—"The lepers are cleansed." The leper's prayer is not, therefore, Make me well, but, Make me clean; take away the shame and the moral pollution of this disease. Now there was one feature in which the leprosy had no parallel: no medicine could arrest or even mitigate the disease. It was regarded as a direct punishment inflicted by God, and, as such, incurable, save through the intervention of him who sent it. This conception of it was inherent in the Jewish mind. It explains the question of the king of Israel when he exclaimed, on the receipt of the letter asking him to cure Naaman of this disease: "Am I God, to kill or to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy?" It was the same conviction, too, that brought forth Naaman's confession, when he realized his cure: "Now I know that there is no God in all the earth, but in Israel." Kneeling down to him.—According to Herodotus, the ancient Oriental, and especially Persian, mode of salutation was, between persons of equal rank, to kiss each other on the lips; when the difference of rank was slight, they kissed each other on the cheek; when one was much inferior, he fell upon his knees and touched his forehead to the ground. If thou will.—In the will of the Lord he acknowledges the divine power. We can hardly suppose that a full knowledge of the Godhead of Jesus was vouchsafed to that poor outcast; but that sign of homage, and such a confession of belief in his power to heal, evidence the presence of a faith far beyond that of his fellows. Thou canst make me clean.—As this is the first cure of leprosy recorded by all the three first evangelists, it was probably the first case of the kind; and if so, this leper's faith in the power of Christ must have been formed in him by what he had heard of his other cures. Here was (1) a thorough consciousness of his own misery and helplessness; (2) he knew it was not too bad for Christ's power. It has been well said that the language of faith always is, not If thou canst, but If thou will. He is willing to leave the whole matter in Christ's hands. (3) Let us pause on this little word if. "If" embodies in itself both fear and hope in varying proportions. "If" implies doubt; and faith in its earlier stages almost always involves doubt; but, when the soul can use "if," it has made great progress in faith.

41. Moved with compassion, put forth his hand.—The sacred act of stretching out the hand and touching him, had no magical intrinsic power, being frequently dispensed with; but it visibly connected the action with the subject of the miracle, and at the same time symbolized or typified the healing virtue which it did not of itself impart. Touched him.—The touch of the leper was the proclamation that Judaism was abrogated henceforth. I will; be thou clean.—The touch was followed by his word. "It is a sign of your faith," he seemed to say, "that you use the expression, 'If thou will,' not 'If thou canst.' I do will; and my hand is ever obedient to my will: be thou cleansed, therefore, by this touch." It was a glorious vindication of the acts of the law which attached ceremonial pollution to a leper's touch; but it was also the same time a glorious illustration of the spirit of the law, which was that mercy is better than sacrifice. The hand of Jesus was not polluted by touching the leper's body, but the leper's whole body was cleansed by the touch of that holy hand. It was even thus that he touched our sinful human natures, and yet remained without spot of sin.

42. Immediately the leprosy departed from him.—The crumbling limbs renew their shape, the blood flows quickly through the system, the eye recovers its brightness, and the voice its music. He stands up once more in his pure, vigorous manhood.

43. And he straightly charged him.—Two directions followed the cure: one of expediency, the other of obligation; and they were given with a sternness that marked their importance and the peril of neglecting them. Our translation fails to express by "He straightly charged him" the force of the original; but one of the old versions rendered it more aptly, "He threatened him." The Geneva version (1557) has it, "And after he had given him a straight commandment." Forthwith sent him away.—Wiclif says, "put him out." The Rhemish translation has it, "and forthwith cast him forth."

44. Say nothing to any man.—The best commentators are agreed that the order was only meant to extend to the period when he had presented himself to the priests for examination. Considering the great multitudes of bystanders, it was impossible to prevent the transaction from being made public, so that the object of the injunction must have been to keep the officiating priest ignorant of the transaction, that he might not maliciously deny the leper to be perfectly clean, which would disappoint the benevolent object of the miracle. Besides this purpose of restoring the man to his civil and religious rights, the examination by the priest and his attestation of his being no longer a leper served to make the priest himself a testifying witness to the reality of the miracle. Offer for thy cleansing those things.—See Leviticus, chapter 14. For a testimony.—The actual cleansing must be confirmed in a Levitically legal way.

45. Began to publish it much.—This shows the full wisdom of Jesus in forbidding him to tell any man. The rumor raised a tumult and a crowd, and an excitement wholly unlike the gentle and spiritual movement it was the purpose of Jesus to create. Could no more openly enter into the city.—It was a rare cure that had been, to heal a leper (II Kings v. 7), and Christ had not healed any till this present time; therefore, where this was published abroad, it would not only gather people, under other diseases, to Christ for their recovery (for they would conclude he could heal any when he could do this), but it would cause lepers to break into the city where he was, which was contrary to their law and custom, and so would breed trouble and confusion.

My Religious Experience.

From my early boyhood I was a Methodist in principle and doctrine. My mother was a Christian and a praying woman, and a widow. I was the youngest child of six, and the constant companion of my mother in going to church, or in her walks about her little farm and garden. I have seen that mother kneel and pray and agonize in spirit, doubtless, for the salvation of her children; yet I still continued in the broad road to ruin, and sinned against the God of heaven, and disregarded the holy Sabbath day, and indulged in dissipating at times for thirty years or more. All this time God's Holy Spirit followed me, wooing, admonishing and warning me of my danger. I have been made wretched and miserable in the grog-shop; oftentimes by that still small voice saying to me, "Prepare to meet thy God." This broke up all the fun and frolic with my drunken companions, and I would start of home in a hurry. I never was in an ill humor while drinking, but was all gab, and could out-talk any grog-bully I ever met. I often felt more devotional than when strictly sober, and if I met up with a Methodist preacher while in this mood, I would urge him to send an appointment to our neighborhood and preach in our school-house. I have met Bro. S. S. Scott (well-known to the old members of the Louisiana Conference), and also Bro. H. O. White. These meek and humble servants of the Most High God, who teach us the way of salvation, never failed to comply with my request. When the day arrived, I would go, and take all my family. On one occasion Bro. Scott said at his next appointment he would give us a little protracted meeting of two or three days, and make an effort to organize a church at that place.—I made sport of the very idea that any intelligent minister of the gospel should ever think he could start a church where there were no members at all, and none to assist him in prayer or song. The day for our protracted meeting arrived (it was Saturday). Myself and family were there (wife and nine children), and a number of the neighbors were out, anxious to find out what a Methodist protracted meeting was. Bro. Scott was there, and preached a pure and unadulterated gospel sermon, and that evening went home with me, and prayed in my house at night and morning. All went to church Sunday; and no visible signs of a revival that day. All of us there on Monday early; and, doubtless, Bro. Scott was in close communion in prayer with his God that day, for God made him the humble instrument to preach the gospel of Christ, which is the power of God to the saving of the soul of all that believe. The power was so great I trembled in my seat, and I was powerfully convicted and dreadfully distressed on account of my numerous sins. I was very fearful that God would cut the brittle thread of my life and send my soul to hell; and I would be bound to say, Amen! to my own damnation. At the close of the sermon he opened the door of the church for the reception of members. He sang one verse, and I arose to my feet and made a few remarks to my neighbors—that right now, by the grace of God, I was determined to change my course in life and live for God the remainder of my days. The song began, and I advanced and gave the preacher my hand and God my heart; and, to my great surprise, nineteen of my neighbors and our children joined the church that day. I was still in deep agony and distress on account of my sins. The house was too small a place for me, and I asked Bro. Scott to go with me to the woods. I still was afraid to go with him alone, so I asked old Bro. Dortch to go with us. We all started, and I got between them. I thought this might shield me from an angry God. In a short distance we all kneeled down by an old pine log—I still between them, and all praying. All I could say was: "God be merciful to me a sinner"!—and this is a good prayer to-day. And while on my knees at that log, the Holy Spirit prompted me to say these words:

"Poor tempest-tossed soul, be still,
My promised grace receive;
'Tis Jesus speaks! I must, I will,
I can, I do believe!"

As I said "I do believe," my faith was strong; I could lay hold of God's promises as my own, and could claim Jesus as my only Savior as much so as if no other sinner in the world had to be saved. I arose from my knees in a perfect ecstacy of joy; and the joy of the moment I never shall forget, for it thrills through my soul as I think of it yet. I went back to the house praising God aloud; and I hugged them all, and told them what a dear Savior I had found.

This all took place in broad daylight, and I was wide-awake, and cool, sober and strictly rational; and God has so wonderfully blessed me that I have never doubted my conversion. And I thank God I joined the church and was converted; and I would not be back again in the broad road to ruin for thousands of worlds like this. I greatly regret that I did not give my youth and manhood to the services of my God. Yet "he forgives my past follies, and gives me strength for days to come." I believe my conversion was in answer to the prayers and tears of mother. I have full, unwavering faith I shall meet her in heaven. Let me say to all Christian mothers to train your children. If you fully understood your responsibility and accountability to your God, the training of your children would be the greatest consideration of your life. Oh, the good you can do! The impressions made on tender young hearts is indelible.

Bro. Scott's protracted meeting at Gum Spring School-house, in October, 1870, was a complete success. He did organize a church there, and left me class leader; and I hold that commission to-day, and I would not exchange it for a seat in Congress. I never felt it my duty to preach, but the class meeting, prayer meeting, experience meeting, love-feast, in the family and secret prayer are my fields of labor; and I do religiously believe by these means of grace we can get blessings we can get nowhere else. I was in my fifty-ninth year when I joined the church. I am now in my seventy-seventh year. Eighteen years I have devoted to God's service—the happiest period of my life. I am now, as it were, on Bunyan's delectable mountains with the good shepherds who tend the great King's flocks, waiting and watching for my summons to appear at the gates of the celestial city; yet I have to pass the valley and shadow of death, yet I fear no evil, for with God on my side, I hope to die shouting, "The Lord will provide!"

Who Will Give? Who Will Go?

Mrs. Bishop Wilson writes from China to Mrs. McGavock:

"As you see from the heading, we are with Miss Roberts and Miss Reagan at Nantziang, and so you will not wonder that their work presses upon my heart. I am here and see. I know of what I shall speak. Miss Roberts and Miss Reagan went to the annual meeting quite discouraged, and that not because they are weak women, for, on the contrary, they are resolute and consecrated, but for the reason there was so much to do, both as to the schools and the difficult language, which must be learned if they hope to occupy the most useful position among the Chinese. Both felt that they had not met the requirements as to study (though both passed the stipulated examinations), nor given the attention to other work that the necessities of the case demanded. I saw the tears rolling down Miss Roberts' face after she had read her report, so full was her heart of her work and its needs. My love went out to her then and there; and in conversation with Mr. Wilson afterward, I said: 'Some one must be sent to Nantziang.' He said: 'What can I do? There is no one to be spared. Other work also demands new help.' When he read the appointments at the close of the meeting, Miss Roberts and Miss Reagan broke down completely—they sobbed aloud—so impossible did it seem to them to compass the work. They are superior women, knowing their responsibilities, and willing to give themselves, their all, to this work at Nantziang. And also they are of good courage, very cheerful, very energetic, but they knew they could not compass an impossibility. Now listen to me: give heed to me, my friend: You must send out from home (nobody in China can be spared) another lady to help Miss Roberts and Miss Reagan. I mention just one reason: neither of them can sing: they need some one to teach music, vocal music, every day in all the schools. I listened to the singing in Sunday-school this morning. As you know, the Sunday-school is made up of the day and boarding-schools, and it (the singing) was execrable! Chinese and Japanese have no ear for music, absolutely none; you never met a person having less ear, perhaps none with so little. They can not learn except by long-continued teaching. It is a laborious task to put music into their brains or on their tongues, but it could be done by a person consecrated to the work, who had music, even in a small degree, in her soul. Believe me, if you desire this part of divine worship to be the help it should be in holding the thoughts on God, you must make it devotional, and that can not be unless you send a lady specially to this work. Of course such an one would find much beside to do. Miss Roberts thinks (so does Mr. Locher) that work in the homes among the women could be done with another lady at Miss Roberts' disposal.

"All this brings me to an ORGAN (I put it in capital letters). Mr. Reid, who is with us, and the two ladies are so anxious for music, they are so sure it is a necessity, that they are about to rent an organ that Mrs. Hill can play in Sunday-school and the preaching service. Mr. Reid and the two ladies gave ten dollars apiece, saying to each other, 'Perhaps at the end of six months we can buy it.' They ought not to do this; they give and give and give; but this organ they ought not to give. Can you not collect among the friends of Nantziang the money (say, $125) for this purpose? The ladies of the Memphis Conference gave Miss Rankin an organ which she took to Kuling. Now, can you not collect the money and send it to Miss Roberts? For two reasons she could buy here to advantage (I mean in Shanghai): first, they make organs especially for this damp climate; and, second, the money could be transported as soon as in your hand, whereas the instrument would be several months on the way. Mr. Reid enters with enthusiasm into all that interests the two ladies, and from what he said to-day is ready to divide the expense; but not one of them should give a cent toward it. I must say they do not know I am speaking of what should not be done with their own money, but I do hope you can do something is why I thus intermeddle.

"Mr. Wilson asked if one of the Shanghai ladies could not come every Sunday to Nantziang. However, they can not, for Miss Atkinson, Miss Lipscomb, and Miss Hamilton have their Sunday duties as much as on all the other days. Before I leave this subject let me say the 'baby organ' in the school is almost worthless, so that it is not worth while to move it to the Sunday-school. My letter is taken up with this one thing because I am in earnest. You must send a helper and an organ quickly—not next year, but immediately. Call all the women together, and tell them that two ladies, almost alone in a foreign land—a heathen land—ask for very little, asking for these two things."—Nashville Advocate.

Right Occupation.

To provide a house for the Lord, and to offer it to him, is not enough to meet the actual demand, however costly and elegant the structure may be. His residence therein must be sought so as to be secured; for only as God is with those who assemble within formally consecrated walls, can the great end of all their avowedly sacred services as public worshipers be secured. Consecrated worshipers are no less needful, than consecrated places of worship. Upon every part of a house designed for the worship of God there should stand out in view as in living characters, the great truth announced when he who is to be worshiped, said, "Without me ye can do nothing." The glory of every such house will depend upon the divine presence therein. That which is most to be desired is, that God's "honor" may dwell there, and that he may have his "habitation" there. For this result, prayer should continually be made, while all hearts are devoutly prepared to welcome him who loves "the gates of Zion more than all the dwellings of Jacob."

True affection for the house of God implies an appreciation of its objects, and a delight in its duties. Those duties are holy, and those objects momentous. To perform the duties properly and profitably, there must be a right state of heart, and to accomplish the objects successfully, there must be a large measure of the divine blessing upon all endeavors in that direction. There is an imperative demand, therefore, for the cultivation of true holiness of heart, and most earnest and careful heed should be taken, that offered prayers be not hindered. The great teacher deemed it needful to say, "God is a spirit; and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." No more appropriate utterance of the heart can be breathed by a worshiper in God's earthly sanctuary, than may find expression in the words of Watts:

"Lord, search my thoughts, and try my ways
And make my soul sincere:
Then shall I stand before thy face,
And find acceptance there."

The responsibility of occupying a house of God, and sustaining his ordinances therein, is not to be lightly regarded. It has to do with results which belong not to time alone, but which may be traced in all the realities of eternity. The scenes which occur in such a house will tell upon the destiny of souls. Those who resort thither, will receive impressions which will last forever, and take directions which will lead either to the right hand or to the left hand of the final judge. Thoughts of the last judgment are not inappropriate in such place. Something of this serious thoughtfulness should belong to the occupation of a place in every house of worship. The preparation of a place for divine worship should not fail to suggest the preparation of the heart for its right occupation. Fitly does Dr. James Hamilton say, "In the spirit of that significant Oriental usage which drops its sandals at the palace door, the devout worshiper will put off his travel-stained shoes, will try to divest himself of secular anxieties and worldly projects, when the place where he stands is converted into holy ground by the words 'Let us worship God.'"—Watchman.

"Mr. Scudder used to say that if took great affliction to bring his mind to that place," said Mrs. Katy. "He used to say that an old papermaker told him once that paper that was shaken only one way in the making would tear across the other, and the best paper had to be shaken every way; and so he said we couldn't tell till we had been turned and shaken and tried every way, where we should bear."—Mrs. H. B. Stowe.

The Sunday Rest Bill.

The following is the bill, introduced by Senator Blair on May 21, 1888, as amended by the Sabbath Union, which many patriots desire shall be made a national law by Congress:

"A Bill to Secure to the People the Enjoyment of the Lord's Day, commonly known as Sunday, as a Day of Rest, and to Protect its Observance as a Day of Religious Worship.

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That on Sunday, no person or corporation, or the agent, servant, or employee of any person or corporation shall perform or authorize to be performed any secular work, labor or business, works of necessity, mercy, and humanity excepted; nor shall any person engage in any play, game, show, exhibition, or amusement, open to the public, or of a public character, in any Territory, District, vessel, or place subject to the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States; nor shall it be lawful for any person or corporation to receive pay for labor or service performed or rendered in violation of this section.

"Sec. 2. That no mails or mail matter shall hereafter be transported in time of peace over any land postal route, nor shall any mail matter be collected, assorted, handled or delivered during any part of Sunday.

"Sec. 3. That the prosecution of commerce between the States and with the Indian tribes, by the transportation of persons or property by land or water, on the first day of the week, is hereby prohibited, and any person or corporation, or the agent, or employee of any person or corporation who shall violate this section shall be punished by a fine of not less than ten nor more than one thousand dollars, and no service performed in the prosecution of such prohibited commerce shall be lawful, nor shall any compensation be recoverable or be paid for the same.

"Sec. 4. That all military and naval drills, musters and parades, not in time of active service or immediate preparation therefor, of soldiers, sailors, marines, or cadets of the United States on the first day of the week, except assemblies for the due and orderly observance of religious worship, are hereby prohibited, nor shall any unnecessary labor be performed or permitted in the military or naval service of the United States on the Sunday.

"Sec. 5. That it shall be unlawful to pay or to receive payment or wages in any manner for services rendered or for labor performed or for the transportation of persons or of property in violation of the provisions of this act, nor shall any action lie for the recovery thereof, and when so paid, whether in advance or otherwise, the same may be recovered back by whoever shall first sue for the same.

"Sec. 6. That labor or service performed and rendered on Sunday in consequence of accident or disaster or unavoidable delays in making the regular connections upon postal routes and routes of travel and transportation; the transportation and delivery of milk before 9 a. m. and after 10 p. m. shall not be deemed violations of this act, but the same shall be construed so far as possible to secure the whole people rest from toil during Sunday, their mental and moral culture, and the protection of the religious observance of the day."

The American Sabbath will not be restored or maintained without work. If Christian people are content to sit still and do nothing beyond indulging in best wishes, we shall have before long a thoroughly Continental Sunday. The above bill is printed with a petition for its passage attached. Somebody ought to circulate it in every Christian church and in the community around it, for the signatures of all who wish a Sunday of rest and worship. Probably copies of the petition can be obtained from the Rev. Joseph H. Knowles, 71 Bible House, New York. We have no authority to say that Mr. Knowles will attend to this matter, for the printed sheet comes to us with no intimation as to where it can be procured. Can not every Reformed church be canvassed for signatures?—Christian Intelligencer.

To the Work.

There is no use talking—standing around and talking blue, and sighing and wishing things were better. We can beat the enemy every time, and in every touch of forces and all along the line, if we have a mind to. We have the muscle and the money, and the truth and the right, and the Lord Almighty on our side. It is not much to strike a blow at a thing when you come in striking distance of it, as you go along. There is the old farmer. If he came to a Canada thistle, he is sure to hit it a whack with his hoe, or if he have no hoe in his hand, he will stop, take out his rusty big jack-knife and cut it out by the roots, and he does not consider it "work" to do so. It is his "instinct" to hate a Canada thistle, and to kill it if he can. If he find a neighbor with a broken wheel or stuck in the mud, he will stop and lend a hand, and nobody need ask him to. It is as natural for him to do it as it is for him to eat his breakfast. In the good old neighborly times before we had our organized and specialized fire departments, nobody need be urged to tumble out of bed and go at his best to put out a building-fire, anywhere in the town. Before we had our professional nurses at twenty dollars per week, one did not have to coax and make appeals to people to go and watch overnight with the sick; there were more volunteers than were needed, and people got well, if anything, better under the unskilled nursing of love than they do now with the skilled nursing for money. Did you ever know of a termagent—a hot-tempered woman—of whom it was not said, "Well, after all, she is a good-hearted creetur—she will do anything and everything in sickness or for poverty or at a funeral"? Now, let us put a little of this common-sense religion into our religion. Anyone and everyone can do a great sum of good in the course of a year by acting upon it. Don't go with a "you are a poor devil, and I'd like to make you better" air. Carry an humble, home-helping hand, and people will see what it is and be thankful for the lift. Try to help people in getting ahead. Tell non-church goers that you "have a good preacher; come around and try him once." Say a good word to the boy anywhere. Boys are always accessible and love to be noticed, and get him out to Sunday-school. There is no worker so good in a family as a good religious paper. Send your copy to a family that takes none, say a good word for it, and get them in the way of good reading. "Systematic Benevidence" has worked wonders—systematic good work works greater, and systematic weekly good reading will lift any family to a higher plane of goodness and happiness. Let us all go in for 1889, and we will see at the beginning of 1890 that what we have done has counted; and the good Lord never misses a count. There are no omissions in his trial-balance. He does not fail to post his books, and the fullest and largest of all his books is his "day-letter," but we ought not to try to take advantage of him on that account.—Interior.

The Vocations of Men.

Much has been written of late concerning the long lives of those who follow literary pursuits, and some interesting statistics as to the age of writers have seen the light. With the familiar instances of Gœthe, Voltaire, and a score or two more of past days and with the more modern cases of the laureate, Mr. Browning and Mr. Bailey, the author of "Festus"—long may they live—I am not inclined to concern myself. With a full sense of my own incompetency to deal scientifically with the subject, I wish, nevertheless, to place matters on a scientific basis. All professions are healthy as compared with trades. What men are longer lived than scientists, archæologists—there is no profession of archæology, but let that pass—lawyers, clergymen, physicians, actors? In some professions, notably the bar, to which might be added the stage, the early training is said, in a half serious banter, to kill off the weaklings. To some extent this is true of all professions. Men without self-control die, as a rule, young, whatever their occupations. In other cases, however, the conditions under which the classes named exist are the most favorable. The two things that most readily kill men who attain middle age are anxiety or loss of interest. The man who goes to bed not knowing whether a turn in the market may elevate him to wealth or steep him in ruin, dies of softening of the brain. He who has made his fortune and retired feels, unless he has cultivated a hobby, that he has no place in the world, and dies of inanition. As a rule, the professional man of fifty has learned what he can do. If he is unfit for the line he took, he has slipped out of it; if he is making a fortune, it is a career full of interest and with little trouble or anxiety to himself. It is not his own case that the barrister pleads, the physician combats and the parson arraigns. If, again, he is but moderately successful, his earnings, though small, are pretty safe. He gets as near an approximation to security as fate in a world such as this accords, and he may hope, barring exceptional circumstances, that the future will be as the past. His occupation, meanwhile, brings him consideration and intelligent surroundings, and his life is fairly and pleasantly varied. Once the philosopher temperament is reached, the combustion of life is very rapid.—Mail and Express.

Patience with the Faults of Others.

An apostle tells us that the Scriptures contain "some things hard to be understood." This we believe, though some people seem to have no difficulty in finding out the Almighty to perfection. The more ignorant they are, the easier it seems to be. But passing this, some of us find more things hard to be practiced, than there are hard to be understood. Among the former—and a wonderful stumbling-block for its size—is the injunction, "Be patient towards all men." It always comes in to take the starch of self-conceit out of us in a very summary way, and to make us feel very limpey, when we are flattering ourselves that we have been growing in grace. It does seem at such times that there ought to be exceptional cases, in which we could be allowed to kick foolish and unreasonable people. It does seem very hard to be patient with the impenetrable self-conceit of those who, in assuming what God should and should not do, claim a wisdom superior to that of the Omniscient; the self righteous folk, who think they do their whole duty, and hold a large stock of righteousness in reserve; the stolid people, who are unmoved by our unanswerable arguments; the censorious people; the people who habitually shirk Christian duties; the oblivious people, who wish to do everything—how often these overtax our patience! We can learn to be "patient with all men," only by coming to a consciousness of our own infirmities and shortcomings, and by praying for and receiving strength to become "perfect and entire, wanting nothing," by letting "patience have her perfect work." There is room for its working in too many of us. We could too much.—Evangelist.

I am fifty-five years of age.

Half of my life I have been a sufferer from a disordered liver, and the last three years a victim of that dread disease, consumption; was reduced to eighty-seven pounds, a mere skeleton, helpless, pronounced beyond recovery by my physicians, and given up to die by friends. In order to gratify my loving wife, I began taking Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, which is a cure for consumption, and to-day I am healthy, and able to indulge myself in preaching the gospel from the sacred desk.

RUFUS FIGH,

Cor. Pine and Crockett Sts.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, July 12, 1888.

Dr. R. M. Davis, County Line, Miss., reports having cured a cancer of long standing that years of the most skillful medical practice had failed to benefit at all. Besides, we have numerous assurances of cures effected in Asthma, Bilious Colic, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Diphtheria, and Malarial Fever.

Rev. W. A. Mason, pastor of the Baptist Church, Crystal Springs, Miss., writes under date of July 2nd:

At your request, I will say that for about eight years I have been suffering with a sore on the back of my neck which was caused by the rubbing of a boil by my shirt collar. It gradually spread till larger than a quarter-dollar. About six weeks ago, I commenced the use of Microbe Killer. From the very beginning I felt an improvement, and it has gone on steadily till now; though I have been very irregular in taking the remedy. I am satisfied that if directions closely followed would effect a speedy permanent cure.

W. A. MASON.

I gladly testify that, after suffering with a severe case of malarial fever, I tried Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, and am now perfectly well. I strongly recommend it to suffering humanity.

I cheerfully recommend Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer as being more than is claimed for it.

Cheaper Religious Newspapers.

A resolution was introduced at the recent session of the Mississippi Conference, and referred to the Committee on Books and Periodicals, asking that committee to report as to the feasibility of lowering the price of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE to one dollar per annum. Of course the committee could not see the feasibility of such a plan, and did not recommend that it be adopted. There seems to be a periodicity about this demand for a cheaper paper, which is very curious. Our agents—the pastors—explain this matter everywhere, and show plainly that the church paper can not be published at a cheaper rate; and yet, ever and anon, the cry is made for a cheaper paper. People who don't take pains to inquire into the matter in all its details are very apt to suppose that a weekly religious paper can be published as cheaply as the Weekly Picayune or Times-Democrat. If we published a daily ADVOCATE at $12 a year, we could very well afford to publish a weekly ADVOCATE at $1 a year; but as we don't do the first, we can't do the last. All the churches have tried the experiment of publishing cheap papers, and they have invariably failed. The last failure is thus noted by the Christian Observer:

The Church at Work is the name of an excellent little paper which has been published weekly in Indianapolis, in the interest of the Presbyterian Church. The want of a low-priced newspaper was felt in Indiana, and the attempt has been faithfully made to supply it by furnishing a sheet at only one dollar a year. It has been a matter of surprise how the paper could be made as good as it has been at that price. It secured a circulation of about twenty-six hundred subscribers, but after a life of less than two years, the attempt has been abandoned, and its last issue announces its suspension and the transfer of its list to the Herald and Presbyter.

Thus another effort to make what is popularly known as a cheap religious paper results in failure. The experiment has been tried a score of times in the last fifty years, but in every case, after an experiment of a few years, the paper is suspended, or else its price is raised. The Presbyterians, as a rule, want a good paper rather than a cheap paper. It is a remarkable fact that in no case has a weekly Presbyterian paper, which is published at $1 or $1 50 a year, secured more than four or five thousand subscribers, and often not that many, while furnished on that basis; while those which charge $2 50 or $3, or even larger sums, secure circulations amounting to ten or twenty thousand, or more.

We call special attention to the last sentence in the quotation above. Among the exchanges that come to this office, those having the largest circulation are those of the highest price. An editor and publisher of a handsome sheet in a flourishing country town told us that two years ago he tried the plan of lowering the price of his paper, and the result in a year was a clear loss of $500, and this on a subscription list of less than one thousand subscribers. The number of new subscribers obtained by the cheap paper did not pay for the loss sustained in giving the paper to old subscribers at the lower rate by $500. So it will always work. In regard to this matter, we hold that a good religious newspaper, like a good education, is not dear at any price. In fact, we incline to the opinion that the dearest thing a man can do for himself and family is not "to hustle around and scrape up" $2 to subscribe for a religious paper that will bring information and cheer and comfort and religious knowledge fifty times a year to his household. We know some people who are as poor as anybody, yet they manage to renew their subscriptions promptly, and are sure they get the paper cheap enough.

The Parker Loan Fund.

At the last session of the Louisiana Conference quite a large amount was added to this fund. Dr. Morton explained clearly the nature and uses of our Church Extension Loan Funds, and Bishop Hargrove made the exhortation, and the preachers and others raised in the Conference-room $1,115 for the Parker Loan Fund. This fund is intended as a perpetual monument to the memory of Bishop Parker, and is a much more Christian monument than one of brass or stone could be. These funds are used as loans to help build churches in the needy places; and thus the money contributed to them is always a medium of affording help where help will do most good. The church that is aided soon returns the money, and then it is sent out in a different direction on the same helpful mission; and thus it becomes a continual helper. The same thousand dollars may be the means of building many churches. We know of no scheme where a little money will give more help and do more good than the plan on which these loan funds are managed. If a man wants to make his gift perpetual, here is the place for him to put it.

We understood Dr. Morton to say that one, and possibly more, of the Texas Conferences had agreed to raise money for the Parker Loan Fund. We see no reason why the amount should not reach $10,000 by the meeting of the next General Conference. We trust that all our friends will contribute something to rear this monument to our sainted Bishop. Remember it is not a granite shaft, but a fund of money whose use will be a fitter memorial of a Christian Bishop than anything else can be. Remittances may be made to the editor of this paper, or to Rev. William Hart, Columbia, La.; or to Rev. J. W. Medlock, New Iberia, La.

A Significant Fact.

Bishop Wilson has given the church, through the columns of the Nashville Advocate, some good reading on the subject of our missions in the East. His last letter about our work in Japan contains some facts that ought to be impressed deeply into the conscience of the church at home. There is one of the finest lessons on Christian beneficence we remember to have seen in many a day. We reproduce for our readers that part of the Bishop's letter relating to the finances of our little band of young Christians in that far land:

> The number of members, including nine or ten foreign by members, is one hundred and sixty-three, of whom eighty-eight have been baptized within the past year. There are also seventy-nine probationers—applicants for membership under instruction. Six children have been baptized, and three members have died during the year—firstfruits to Christ of our mission. Of church property we have none, except the church in Kobe, built by the mission without help from abroad. The financial statement is especially interesting to one who has been among the people and taken note of their condition of life. You will see that our regular channels of contribution are open here as at home, and organized methods of drill and instruction are used in this infant church. Missions, church extension, current expenses, for the poor, for other objects, for building and repairing churches—all these terms and phrases, so familiar in our annual review in the Conferences, have come into the Japanese vocabulary, and have, to a small, struggling church like this, a significance much more intense and serious than where a church covers a continent, counts its members by hundreds of thousands, and its wealth by millions—is so strong that it fears no danger, so rich and increased in goods that it thinks it has need of nothing, and cares but little, if at all, for any beyond its "own house." I was present, as I said before, at a missionary anniversary and a church extension anniversary, and witnessed the earnestness and liberality of men and women who had but yesterday escaped from the slavery of superstition and idolatry. It would be worth something to reproduce the scene, if it were possible, before the eyes of some congregations I have seen resisting the appeal made to them on this behalf. Here is the dry record of results, in estimating which you must take into account that a large proportion of the members have been so lately received into the church that they have had no opportunity to contribute—indeed, forty-five of them were baptized while I was in Japan: For missions during the year (reckoning in yen and sen—about 75 per cent. of our dollar and cent), $285 04; church extension, $213 93; for building churches, $347 60; current expenses, $84 44; for the poor, $17 03; for other objects, $17 98. In addition to these amounts, $188 78 have been received as tuition fees in our schools, and $2,523 as salaries and expenses of the self-supporting missionaries.

That is as fine a report as we have seen from any quarter. If now some of our people are not made ashamed of themselves, it will be because they have "received the grace of God in vain."

Preparation for the Pew.

We have innumerable essays and sermons and books telling preachers how to "prepare for the pulpit," which is all very proper. But the preparation for divine service should not be confined to the pulpit. Our Savior said to the people: "Take heed how ye hear." Perhaps, one reason why the preaching of the gospel is not more efficient than it is lies in the fact that very many attendants at church make no preparation whatever for a profitable reception of the truth. If the preacher finds it necessary to prepare himself to preach, why should not the hearer prepare himself to hear? Is there no necessity in his case to make preparation for hearing? On this subject the Interior says:

> When you call a minister to your church, it is a mutually understood part of the contract that he is to have fair dealing; that you are to give him a reasonably fair chance to do you and the people generally and the cause of Christ good. He goes to work after a period of rest on Monday, to do his very best for you on the succeeding Sabbath. He seeks with the vigilant scrutiny of a placer-miner, for hidden treasures, that he may enrich your mind and spirit with them. Now, put it to yourself fairly and squarely, is it doing—let us say—the neighborly thing by your pastor to put yourself in a condition in which he can not get at you, or get to you, with the treasures which he has toiled so hard to secure for you? Would it be fair to him for you to take a drink of whisky or a morphic opiate before you go to church, or which would cause you to stay at home? If not, then you are doing an unfair thing by your pastor and an infinitely unfair thing to yourself to fill your mind with sensationalism and "news" and crime and "bargains" and all worldliness, not to say a large modicum of hellishness, on Sabbath morning before going to church, or putting yourself in a mood to stay away from church. It is not fair dealing with your pastor, and it is awfully unfair dealing with yourself to do so. It will be noticed that pulpit sensationalists are coming out in defense of the literary dunnage called the Sunday paper. Why? Because it is water on their undershot mill-wheel. Because it destroys the appetite for anything wholesome and nutritious and invigorating, and makes customers for their pulpit sensations. Of course, the stream does not stop. It rests on their wheel-buckets but for a very brief time, and then speeds on down to the level of the spiritually and mentally and morally dead morass of dissipated and deadened mind. But so long as the stream flows from the higher levels to the lower they can run their machinery. So long as the true minister lifts people up and the Sunday paper sets them back on the down grade, so long will these sensationalists flourish. But what father, who is interested in the stamina, and the vigor, and success of his children in life, wants them to take that chute?

Southern Progress.

Our Southland is gradually regaining its former position among the different sections of the country, and we think that it will not be long before we shall march to the front in all that goes to make up the material prosperity of the land. Our natural resources will compare favorably with those of the East or North or West. The enterprise of our people is behind that of no other people. New peoples are coming among us with their money and industry, and the outlook for 1889 is better than ever before. The following shows the progress of the past year, and the momentum acquired will accelerate the progress for this year:

The Manufacturers' Record, in its annual review of the Southern industrial progress, shows that the capital represented by new mining and manufacturing enterprises organized in 1888 was $168,800,000.

During 1888 there were organized in the South 3,618 new enterprises, against 3,430 in 1887, and 1,575 in 1886—a total for three years of 8,623, in addition to which there were hundreds of small enterprises, such as gristmills, gins, etc., not counted in this enumeration. In the South since 1880 20,000 miles of railroad has been built and over $700,000,000 have been spent in building new roads and improving old ones.

Cotton mills have increased from 180, with 15,220 looms and 753,889 spindles, in 1880 to over 300 mills, with about 38,000 looms and 1,800,000 spindles, while many new mills are under construction and many old ones being enlarged. The value of cotton goods made in the South was $25,000,000 in 1880, and nearly $50,000,000 for 1888.

In 1880 there were 40 cotton-seed oil mills in the South; now there are about 160, with about $12,000,000 invested. The value of the South's agricultural products for 1888 was about $880,000,000 against $571,000,000 in 1879. The value of the South's live stock is now $575,000,000, while in 1879 it was $391,400,000. The production of grain rose from 431,074,630 bushels in 1880 to 626,395,000 bushels in 1887, an increase of nearly 200,000,000 bushels.

Our Quarterly Review.

The January number of this periodical is on time with a fine table, set for the delectation of its readers. This number opens with a discussion of the ubiquitous doctrine of evolution, under the title of "Evolution and the Origin of Life," by "Veritas." Then follows "Nature, the Interpreter of Providence," by C. B. H.; "Oliver Goldsmith," by J. F. H. E. Barras, of Canada, writes on one of the greatest questions of the time, under the head, "Romanism—Its Outlook." Rev. R. N. Price contributes an interesting sketch of Rev. John Tunnell. Prof. R. M. Smith contributes a second article on, "The Revelation to the Greeks;" and Dr. Samford continues his "Reminiscences of the Olden Time." There is a short paper on "The Improvement of Church Finances," by "Eureka;" and a long paper on "The Crucifixion," by Dr. J. W. Hanner. Dr. Josephus Anderson's paper, on "The Problem Examined," is a sharp criticism of Dr. J. M. Boland's book—"The Problem of Methodism." The editor contributes a variety of editorials, all of which are of interest and value. This Review is well worth the support of all our reading people. To our preachers we commend it heartily. Published by our House, in Nashville, for $2 50 per annum.

A Genuine Surprise.

The people who "consider the poor" are still in the land. The other day the editor received from one of our first class clothiers a bundle, with the following laconic epistle accompanying it:

Dr. Carter: I am instructed to send you this overcoat.

It almost took the breath away. Just think of an editor of a church paper with a seal-brown beaver overcoat! If somebody would now think to send us a tall slick hat, this would be the most distinguished-looking editor in the church.

A Warning.

MR. EDITOR: The Rev. J. P. Drake writes me that a blind man, calling himself the "Rev. T. W. Fleming," of St. Joseph, Mo., claiming to be a gospel temperance lecturer, is using my name as a reference and voucher. The public and my brethren of the Mississippi Conference are hereby warned that such use of my name is wholly unauthorized. I have never seen or heard the man. While I was at the session of the North Mississippi Conference, some of the official members of our church at Wesson permitted him to occupy my pulpit, and now he unwarrantably makes use of my name! It is my rule to let all such characters pass on. The Rev. W. B. Lewis heard the lecture, "Ridiculous Humanity," and was by no means pleased with it. And from what I have learned from him and others who heard "Rev. T. W. Fleming," I do not hesitate to say that the lecture ought not to be delivered in any of our houses of worship.

T. L. MELLEN.
WESSON, MISS., JAN. 7, 1889.

Bishop Keener in South Carolina.

Bishop Keener's three official visits to the South Carolina Conference, respectively in 1877, 1885, 1888, answer in regular order to the degrees of comparison—good, better, best. His last visit was the best of the three. He was abundant in labors, and quite possibly was never more fully appreciated than last week in Winnsboro, in the good work he did on the platform and in the pulpit. By the formal request of the Conference he preached on Thanksgiving Day at twelve o'clock. He was evidently at his very best. A profound discussion of the underlying principles of the Divine Providence was followed by a most felicitous application of these to the circumstances and contingencies of our daily experience. He told us about God's care of sparrows (Matt. x, 29-31), and his greater care of his children. One of our preachers facetiously insisted that sparrow-pie was to be his favorite dish hereafter. The Sunday sermon was a philosophical discourse on the atonement in its dual relation to the law and the gospel. (John xix, 8, 9.) It was a noble argument on an essential truth—such a sermon as one would like to read again and again.

But what I most thank the Bishop for was his fatherly talk and wise counsel to the class admitted on trial. It was just such a talk as the young brethren needed—just such as we all needed and need. The true Wesleyan doctrine of Christian perfection was made to appear in opposition to Zinzendortian self-complacency, on the one hand, and in contrast with the excesses of wild enthusiasts on the other. O if we, as a church, only knew how much we have at stake in this glorious doctrine!

I should say that the work of stationing the preachers was satisfactory in a very high degree. There were comparatively few changes. The preachers at our city charges were all returned, and there was no change in the presiding eldership. I feel quite sure that the wisdom of this conservative course will be vindicated in the results of an auspiciously opening Conference year. I never knew a Conference to adjourn in better humor. We are on up grade in many and obvious respects in our fine old Conference.—S. A. Weber, in Nashville Advocate.

Notes.

The Times-Democrat, speaking of "counting out" the prohibition vote which was cast in the Southern States in the last election, asks this question: "Is there any man, pretending to sanity, who can assign any reason or pretext for throwing out the few prohibition votes of Louisiana or South Carolina?" We don't know the man that can do that; but we know quite a number of men who voted that ticket in this city, and they know their votes were not counted! Can the Times-Democrat explain why their votes were not counted?

The Sunday-School Times, referring to the work of John the Baptist, makes this very apposite remark: "Our best work may be in preparing the way for better work than we ourselves can do. Let us not feel that our time is lost when it is given to preparing others to do a work that is beyond our powers." As good as that remark is, we fear that there are too few of us who relish the idea that those who come after us will do better work than we are doing. It might change the whole aspect of the future, if we would acknowledge and act up to the sound and sensible remark quoted above.

The secular press is famous for its inaccuracy in reporting religious news. The other day, in giving an account of the committees representing the Presbyterian Churches, North and South, and their meeting in New York, it reported a speech of Dr. H. M. Field, editor of the Evangelist. The next day, Dr. Field, in a card in the Tribune, said that he was not only not at the meeting, but had been all the week sick in bed. We have seen reporters sitting in a Conference taking notes of proceedings, and the next day have read of the Conference doing what it never could have done! Is not religious news worth reporting correctly?

A regular contributor to the columns of the Advance has this to say of church fairs.

> Possibly there are two arguments for church fairs. One is that they bring into the church work people who would otherwise be inactive; also that certain articles offered for sale are purchased by persons who would otherwise make no contributions to the church funds. The arguments have force, but not much force. The church fair is simply Mrs. A spending a dollar in worsted, spending two days in making it into a bag—a bag which her husband buys for one dollar and ten cents, and brings it home and puts it in their chamber. Ten cents net profit! Such economical measures are hardly in accordance with either political or domestic economy. But the strongest argument against the church fair, it seems to me, is its thorough antagonism to the Christian work of the church. The church was not made to sell groceries or woolen goods or hardware. It was made to continue the work of Christ. Church fairs are not his work.

Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, pastor of the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City, recently gave forth this utterance. It seems to us that it will bear repeating and emphasizing everywhere. There is hardly a congregation in the land to whom the earnest words are not applicable. Oh! that our people everywhere may put themselves in a position to diffuse the gospel. Says Dr. Parkhurst:

> I am tired of this everlasting preaching to saints. In my congregation are many saints too heavy with gospel truth; it has got to be wrung out of them by hard Christian work. Churches must be the centers of dispersion. We have got great, coagulated masses of piety in the churches without circulation. Money isn't going to convert the world. The church has never grown with such rapidity as in its time of extremest poverty. You can't reach the hearts of the masses by hiring people to go to them. You must go yourselves. You can't hope to make the world Christian by doing your religious services entirely by proxy.

Would not this be a good example for some of our readers to follow? The ADVOCATE will do as much good in the families of Methodists as the Standard will do in the families of Baptists:

> A good friend of the Standard recently consulted his good sense, and decided to make presents to twenty-five different families in the Sunday-school with which he is connected. Quite naturally under these circumstances, he decided to send a good Baptist paper for a year to each of these homes. For the year to come fifty-two numbers of a wide-awake, first-class newspaper will be perused by these persons; and twenty-five persons, or possibly four times that number, fifty-two times a year will rise up and call him blessed. We are quite overwhelmed with the thought of how pleased this man must be, and how encouraged with consciousness of good deeds done as he thinks of the pleasant things that fifty-two times a year twenty-five, or possibly four hundred, people are thinking about him. If anyone doubts the pleasure of this method of distributing good things, we advise him to send a good Baptist paper to his friends, and try the effect.

Personals.

Bishop Hargrove passed through our city, January 8, en route to Oregon.

Bishop Galloway passed through our city last week on his way to Bar-caw, Fla., to hold the Florida Conference, which convened yesterday. The Bishop has nearly completed the circle of the churches. From Oregon to Florida means "in labors more abundant."

Rev. Dr. J. M. Weems gave us a call en route to his new field in Mexico. Dr. Weems has the prayers of the church for his success. He goes in a spirit of full consecration to the cause of Christ, and will add much to our working force in that mission field. He was accompanied by his wife. The sisters at home will be sure to remember the missionary's wife at a throne of grace!

Our thanks are hereby tendered to H. S. Fulkerson, of Vicksburg, for a copy of his very interesting pamphlet, "The Negro: As He Was, As He Is, and As He Will Be."

Brother pastor, If you will tell your people plainly that they are impairing the "efficiency of your pulpit work" by not subscribing for this ADVOCATE, you will hit the nail squarely on the head.

Prof. Magruder, of Baton Rouge, gave us a very pleasant half-hour chit last week. The professor has reached his threescore and thirteen, and still pursues his great calling with unabated zeal. He has impressed many young men in the Southwest with a love of learning which is bearing fruit to noble character and work.

Rev. G. S. Inge, our pastor in Holly Springs, Miss., in a note to the Nashville Advocate, says that, on December 23, his congregation raised $1,470 to clear the decks and continue improvements on the church and parsonage." That is the "first gun" from North Mississippi. May we hear shotcannoning all over that Conference during the whole of 1889!

The pastors will oblige us and encourage each other and enliven the whole church in our bounds by sending frequent postal card reports of the progress of the Lord's cause.

Dr. Howard Crosby says, in the Evangelist, that in twelve years the population of New York City has increased 500,000, and yet in the same time the number of saloons has decreased by 3,000. Twelve years ago saloons numbered 10,000; now they number 6,811.

This ought to be an exceptional year with all the readers of the ADVOCATE. Suppose we make it exceptional by each giving one cent a day for missions, for every working day in 1889. Counting two readers to every paper sent out, the amount would reach $30,000 by the end of the year; nearly twice as much as we are now raising. What say our readers to the one cent a day scheme?

The American Citizen, of Canton, Miss., has this to say of our new pastor at that place:

"The new Methodist minister, Rev. T. H. Holloman, preached his initiatory sermon Sunday morning at eleven o'clock. Mr. Holloman, as a speaker, has a very pleasing address, appealing to the reason of his hearers in a way that will not fail to interest them. He has entered into his work with a zeal that bespeaks success."

An old lady (name not given), who recently closed the fiftieth year of her church membership, sent a check for $501 to the Woman's Board of Missions, "as a thank offering for the many blessings received during those years." Verily grace abounds in her heart.

Senator Gibson, of this State, has placed us under obligations for a copy of his "Select Speeches Delivered in the House of Representatives and Senate of the United States during 1875-1887."

The society for the prevention of cruelty to animals has gone to work in this city. Mr. P. J. Morrissey is special agent of the society, with headquarters at 222 St. Joseph street. It is to be hoped that all will co-operate in the good work of this society.

A postal card started around the world, from London, October 10, made the entire trip in seventy-five days. That card will, no doubt, be preserved as a traveled curiosity.

The publisher informs us that since December 3 one hundred and fifty-one new subscribers to the ADVOCATE have been received; seventy-eight of these are from Mississippi; sixty-six, from Louisiana, and seven miscellaneous. This is a good showing; but we hope it will grow better as the year advances. Let the brethren keep in memory the munificent offer of the publisher, and "work like beavers" to get that two thousand dollars for the widows and orphans and superannuates. We believe they can do it, and they will have the blessing of God in the effort.

—Rev. J. C. Lowe, writing from Concordia, Miss., December 28, 1888, says: "On my return from Conference our youngest daughter was taken with 'swamp fever,' and is quite sick. We can only wait and hope and pray. 'Darkness shows us worlds of light,' etc. I am much pleased with the future prospects of the ADVOCATE, and when I get to Lexington and at work, will try and help you with some subscribers. I have just heard that our dear brother, T. A. S. Adams, is dead. Thus one more of mine and my wife's best friends is gone. I never saw Bro. Adams more joyous and happy than he was during our Conference. He said in the love feast: 'This has been the happiest year of my life.' Looking at him there, so strong and well, who could think he would leave us so soon? The sermon he preached during the Conference was one of the best I ever heard from him: great bundles of thought delivered in simple language. There was no effort to show his scholarship, extensive as it was."

Books and Periodicals.

BOOKS.

BUSSY BURNS. Illustrations by Ida Waugh; Verses by Mrs. Ella Blanchard. Worthington & Co., New York, publishers. For sale here by George Wharton. Price $2.

This is the most beautiful book we have seen during the holidays—one gotten up for the special delight of the little people. The verses have a ring delightful to the ears of boys and girls, and the pictures will fascinate all eyes, whether they belong to old folks or children. A couplet from the dedication says:

"Here are pictures and stories, whatever your mood,
To help you to smile, and to make you all good."

And so they will, if we are any judge of such matters.

PERIODICALS.

—The Kindergarten, for December, is an admirable number of this new monthly. It is designed for parents and teachers. Alice H. Stockham and Co., 161 La Salle St., Chicago. Price $2 a year.

—The October and November numbers of the Studio, though late, contain interesting reading for all lovers of art, and pictures that will please even the eyes of the uninitiated. Studio Publishing Company, New York. Price $3.

—The Christmas While Awake did not reach us until after the holidays, but it was just as good for our little folks as it would have been if it had come earlier. It is one of the best, and the young people "dote on it" wherever it goes. H. Lothrop, Boston. Price $2 00.

—The November and December numbers of The Homiletic Magazine came together this time, and they contain much in the way of exposition and homiletics which will be of interest and value to preachers. Indeed, this is a monthly that is of great service to the careful and thoughtful student of the Scriptures. The writers are thoughtful, painstaking men, and they give from time to time valuable information on scriptural subjects. E. B. Treat, Broadway, New York.

ENCOURAGED.

The publisher gratefully acknowledges many letters of encouragement, extracts from a few of which he takes the liberty to insert:

Rev. Conrad Knudsen, of Cuthoff, Texas, says:

To me the ADVOCATE has not only been a blessing and delight, but simply a necessity. I wish you and the kind, laborious editor a happy New Year, and great success to the ADVOCATE.

C. W. Mills writes from West End, Atlanta, Ga.:

I have received a large amount of gratification and, I trust, profit in reading the ADVOCATE during the year, calling to remembrance many incidents connected with my life forty and fifty years ago.

I feel a great interest in the success of the ADVOCATE, and will aid you and Dr. Carter all I can. May it be a power for good! is my prayer.—Rev. M. C. Shell, Houston, Miss.

Rev. H. R. Singleton writes from his new charge, Crystal Springs:

I will make an earnest canvass for the ADVOCATE.

(The publisher knows good results will follow.)

Will do all I can for the ADVOCATE this year.—Rev. H. S. Johns.

May the good Lord bless you and Bro. Grant in your good work!—Rev. G. H. Jacobs.

A prosperous and happy New Year to the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, its publisher, editor and all its readers.—Rev. John Bareroft, Pickens, Miss.

I have taken the ADVOCATE for twenty years, and don't feel as if I could do without it.—Mrs. Anna Bolte, Brandon, Miss.

Rev. J. N. Ware writes:

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders. The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

Ten Thousand Subscribers is what the Publisher and friends of the ADVOCATE ask for.

Ten Thousand Subscribers is the number that all say the paper should have in the bounds of the three Conferences. How can we secure the requisite number to make up the 10,000? If each subscriber will send in one new subscriber, we will have more than enough to make the 10,000. If each preacher will send in ten new subscribers, it will give the ADVOCATE over 10,000.

THE PUBLISHER'S PROPOSITION.

Brethren and friends, if you will give the ADVOCATE a subscription list of 10,000, I will give $2,000 to the superannuated preachers, widows and orphans' fund, to be divided among the three Conferences, pro rata, in proportion to the number of new subscribers sent in from each Conference.

My object in asking for the ADVOCATE'S increased circulation is to enlarge its field of usefulness and increase its power for good in this part of our Zion.

New subscribers and letters of encouragement are coming in every mail, for all of which, together with the cordial reception at the recent Conferences, I am profoundly grateful.

DOES ANY ONE CARE FOR FATHER?

Does anyone care for the fellow?
Does anyone think of the one
Upon whose tired, bent shoulders
The cares of the family come?
The father who strives for your comfort,
And toils on from day unto day,
Although his steps ever grow slower,
And his dark locks are turning gray.

Does anyone think of the due-bills
He's called upon daily to pay?
Milliner bills, college bills, book bills—
There are some kinds of bills every day.
Like a patient horse in a tread-mill,
He works on from morning till night;
Does anyone think he is tired?
Does anyone make his home bright?

Is it right, just because he looks troubled,
To say he's as cross as a bear?
Kind words, little actions, and kindness
Might banish his burden of care.
'Tis for you he's ever so anxious,
He will toil for you while he may live;
In return he only asks kindness,
And such pay is easy to give.

"O Sir, I Can't!"

BY MRS. LILLIAN T. ROBERTS.

The hot sun of a July morning was pouring down upon the backs of the busy berry pickers. Under the spreading branches of an apple tree in the midst of the berry patch was a long table of rough boards, on which the berries, gathered in wooden boxes, were placed, and from which they were transferred to iron-bound crates by Charles McIntosh, a boy of fifteen.

He was so busily engaged that he did not notice the approach of Mr. Millard, the owner of the fruit farm, who stood for some time silently watching him, as with deft fingers he arranged the quart boxes. A box had fallen short of the full measure so he evened it full. "I must speak to Bob Sackett," he thought to himself. "He's not picking fair."

"These boxes are much too full," said Mr. Millard's gruff voice beside him, which so startled Charlie that he nearly let the box fall out of his hand. "You must take out a few of those berries."

"O sir, I can't!" he faltered, "it would be dishonest."

Mr. Millard's face flushed. "You dare to speak so to me. Very well, I discharge you immediately. Those who work for me are to do as I say. To-day is Saturday, so I will pay you in full. You can go home. Send Bob Sackett to me at once," he said to a little fellow who had just brought his box to the table.

Charlie walked slowly away, while Mr. Millard, after a few hurried words to Bob Sackett, unfastened his ponies which had been impatiently waiting and drove away.

Somehow he did not feel in a very comfortable frame of mind. The macadamized roads, over which the light carriage bowled so smoothly, and the brisk gait of the high-stepping ponies, failed to give the usual satisfaction. The sorrowful yet manly look of the boy's eyes haunted him and the clear voice rang again in his ears, "O sir, I can't."

"Hold on there, Mr. Millard!" shouted Mr. Banks, the grocer, as he drove through the city streets in an absent minded manner.

Mr. Millard pulled up his horses at the pavement.

"You may send me half a dozen more crates of your raspberries, Mr. Millard. I have never before found them in so good a condition and the boxes so well filled. I do not mind telling you now that I was much dissatisfied last year; the measure was scant, and my customers grumbled. Of course you were unaware of it," he went on hastily, "and I had some thought of telling you. So far this year I am much pleased, and if the rest of the berries are in the same good condition, I will raise the price a cent a quart."

"Very well," said Mr. Millard. "I will send them to you, but I must drive on now for I have pressing business."

He turned the carriage around as he spoke, and gave the loose rein to his ponies, rather to Mr. Banks' surprise, who thought he surely must be going the wrong way.

More swiftly than he came he drove back, but swifter than the wheels flew his thought. Mr. Millard was not an intentionally dishonest man, but he had done a dishonest thing that morning. The boy was right and he was wrong. Once really convinced of wrong, Mr. Millard was a man who would confess his wrong and right it as far as he could. That the berries had been, according to Mr. Bank's statement, short in measure before, had not been by his orders, and his remark this morning had not been a forethought.

As he turned down the road toward his farm, he saw a boy with downcast head walking slowly along absorbed in thought. He reined up his horses so suddenly that he nearly threw them on their haunches.

"Hello, Charlie," he called, "hop in here."

The boy looked up as he heard the cheery voice. Past grief, present surprise and joy were all pictured in his face as he obeyed the command. As soon as he was seated, Mr. Millard said:

"Charlie, I beg your pardon for what I did this morning. You were right. It was a dishonest thing although I did not fully intend it to be so. I thank you for your courage in standing up for the right."

Then Mr. Millard briefly told of his encounter with Mr. Banks that morning. In ending he said,

"I know you are working very hard to get an education. Because I was wrong, and not because of the bribe of an additional cent a quart for doing right, and because above all I appreciate your manliness, I shall give you that extra penny for the rest of the season."

Charlie tried to thank him, but the words stuck in his throat. They were now at the berry-patch, and there they found Bob Sackett busily scanting the measure according to his instructions. He did not look over-pleased to see Charlie returning in so triumphant a manner.

Mr. Millard saw the sullen expression on the boy's face, and after a few earnest words of explanation, he said kindly:

"I know it is hard, Bob, to go back to berry-picking. Do your work well, be honest and fair, and perhaps another season you may stand in Charlie's shoes. A boy who can say bravely 'I can't' has better things in store for him."—Advance.

Which Was Best?

Vacation was over, and the Gladston Seminary girls, pretending to be half sorry, but really quite resigned to taking up work again, were talking over the summer.

"We went to Campobello," said a fashionable-looking girl, with bangs and bangles, "and we did have the gayest time! Maud St. Clair was at the Owen, and we walked and talked and rowed together. Such fun!"

"I would'nt go to the sea for worlds!" said Kate May, scornfully. "We were at the mountains; that is, we girls. Mamma could'nt go. Grandma was ill, and she had to stay with her."

"Here comes Nan!" said a fourth. "She's burned enough for two."

"Come here, Nan, tell us what you did!" "Where did you go?" arose the chorus, for Nan was the popular girl of the class.

"Oh, I did'nt go anywhere," she answered good-naturedly.

"Not anywhere!" "Staid in Gladston!" "Were'nt you dull?" "How in the world did you fill up your time?"

Nan began to count off the items on her fingers:

"I made bread, took care of the baby, mended stockings, washed dishes"—

"Stop! stop! Where were you housemaid? And they gave you a character when you left?"

"Yes," replied Nan; with composure, though a flash of pleasure stole into her cheeks. "Mother did. She said yesterday that this has been the pleasantest summer she had spent in years. I tell you, girls, it pays to be housemaid when your mother can say that about you!"—Christian Observer.

THE SIN OF OVERWORK.—The woman who spends her life in unnecessary labor is by this very labor unfitted for the higher duties of home. She should be the haven of rest to which both children and husband turn for peace and refreshment. She should be the careful, intelligent adviser and guide of the one, and the tender confidante of the other. How is it possible for a woman exhausted in body, and, as a natural consequence, in mind also, to perform either of these offices? It is not possible. The constant strain is too great. Nature gives way beneath it. She loses health and spirit, and hopefulness; and, more than all, her youth—the last thing that a woman should allow to slip from her; for, no matter how old she is in years, she should be young in heart and feeling, for the youth of age is sometimes more attractive than youth itself.

To the overworked woman this green old age is out of the question. Her disposition is often ruined, her temper soured, her very nature changed by the burden which, too heavy to carry, is only dragged along. Even her affections are blunted, and she becomes merely a machine—a woman without the time to be womanly, a mother without the time to train and guide her children, a wife without the time to sympathize with and cheer her husband, a woman so overworked during the day that "when night comes" her sole thought and most intense longing are for rest and sleep. Better by far let everything go unfinished, and live as best she can, than entail on herself and family the curse of overwork.—The Household.

RECEIPT FOR HAPPINESS.—How often do we vex our souls, and with what endless worry do we seek after happiness. A happy home, a happy life a happy heart—how restlessly we seek for these things. There is but one receipt for happiness, and that is forgetting self in service for Christ. The happy home is where he rules in the heart, and wise are they who learn this secret early in life. We may be content and prosperous without this love for Christ, but we may not know what true happiness is. In service for Christ true happiness may and should always be found. If religion does not bring contentment, we may well question whether we possess the genuine article. The fruits of the Spirit must show itself in our lives. "By their fruits ye shall know them." When a child of God complains that his lot is hard, the complaint is uttered against the Father in whose trusting care he has confided his soul. "I wish I were dead," is an expression which, when uttered by a child of faith, must cause angels to weep. Let the child of God forget his wants in the wants of others. Let him deny himself for the sake of God's work at home or abroad, and his heart will swell with happiness and gratitude. Let his endeavor be to make some other soul happy, and he will find the blessing will return unto him multiplied tenfold. In work for Christ there is blessed and endless happiness. —Intelligencer.

A deep sea diver laid his hand on something soft, and curious to know what it was, he took hold of it to examine it. Fatal curiosity! The tentacles of an octopus reached out and grasped him in its deadly embrace. The friends above, feeling the struggle, drew him to the surface, to find only a corpse still in the clutches of the monster. Many a young man has come from his pure country home to this great city, and prompted by a curiosity excited by the signs on the streets, has entered one of these homes of the devil-fish which we protect by law.

And they do say that Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is one remedy without a rival. Price 25 cents.

ADAMS—Resolutions adopted by the Methodist Episcopal Church at Oxford, Miss., on the death of Rev. T. A. S. Adams, D. D.:

Whereas, Our pastor and beloved brother in Christ, THOMAS ALBERT SMITH ADAMS, departed this life suddenly on the twenty-first day of this, the month of December, A. D. 1888; And, whereas, We desire to give expression to the regret which we entertain for him who is gone from us, and to the sentiments inspired by this visitation of God; therefore, be it

Resolved, That by his removal from amongst us, we have lost a dear friend and brother; one, the purity of whose character was dignified by a refined scholarship, adorned by a most sympathetic and gentle temperament and softened by a tender and loving heart; one, whose life has been consistently and wholly devoted to a self-denying pursuit of Christ.

Resolved, That while, both as individuals and as a congregation, we are deeply sensible of the greatness of the loss to us by the death of a man so noble and Christ-like, yet do we neither murmur nor question. God, whose work it was, is all wisdom and tenderness. He doeth that which is best. Neither to the eye of a holy faith, is there aught that is mysterious or inscrutable in his removal. He had fought out the fight; he had done that which God wished him to do; and we rest secure in the joyful assurance that he has been taken to his glorious and eternal reward.

Resolved, That to our sister, his widow, and the children, who are bereaved in their earthly affections, and whom it has not been our lot to know as in Christ, we tender our deepest sympathy for their sorrow; begging them, however, to remember and take comfort and strength from the fact, that the husband and father who is gone yet lives; and by God's unalterable Word we do know that, in happiness greater than mortal eye can conceive, he awaits their coming home to him.

EDWARD MAYES, for Com.

PHARES—JOHN E. PHARES was born in East Feliciana parish, four miles from Jackson, La., August 31, 1811; was married December 21, 1838, to Mary E. Cailliham, by whom he had seven children, six of whom are still living. He was converted in 1877, and he and his wife joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, on August 5, 1878. He was trustee and recording steward of the Shumsport church. He died October 21, 1888, after a painful illness of but six days. Immediately prior to the separation of body and soul, he turned to his wife, and, with a beautiful smile on his somewhat rugged features, said, "Come, Pet, let us go"—and fell asleep in Jesus.

Judge Pharres was a man of strong individuality of character—a very firm friend, and was a man ever ready to meet half-way any with whom he had differences. A brave and loyal soldier during the late war, to the last he looked and acted like an old warrior. But John Pharres at home was a loving and devoted husband and a most affectionate father. Though many may equal, none could excel him in his domestic character. He was ready to die, and so expressed himself; and he now waits the dawning of that glorious morning when we shall all be united to part no more.

May God comfort and protect his sorrowing wife and grant her heavenly wisdom and earthly strength to raise her children in the love and fear of him who is the friend of the fatherless!

WALTER DUNSTAN.

MOSS—Mrs. N. A. MOSS, daughter of Samuel and Mary Eliza Ross, of Kingston, Miss., was born March 1, 1807. She was married to H. K. Moss, in Natchez, 1824, and died in Madison station, Madison county, December 8, 1888. For many years she lived in Natchez, and for many years in Jackson. She lived several years in Point Couper parish, La. From there, with her husband, she moved to Yazoo county, above Yazoo City. At this place, known as the Bermuda Plane—twenty-five miles above Yazoo City—she lost her husband in 1867.

From the time of the marriage of her youngest daughter, she lived with her until her death. She was the mother of thirteen children—of these only two survive. For many years she was a member of the Episcopal Church; but not being near to any church of her own, several years ago she sent a rebel herself to the Methodist Church. Our mother often complained of her short comings and misdeeds, and was generally troubled with doubts. Whilst we required no expression from her to assure us that she was ready for the coming of the last enemy, it does afford us comfort to recall the statement she made a few hours before her death, that she was not afraid to die. This coming from her meant something.

HENNING—Sister CATHERINE HENNING (nee Perkins) was born in Calcasieu parish, July 24, 1860; was married to J. T. Henning, in July, 1875; converted under Rev. C. Keener, and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Sulphur Mine circuit, and died at Sulphur City, La., October 17, 1888.

Sister Henning was a warm friend to Methodism and Methodist preachers from the time of her conversion till her death. She died after lingering along twelve months with consumption. She did but little talking for about two months before going home; but when talked to upon the subject of her departure, she was perfectly ready to go. I, her pastor, expect to meet and be with her in the presence of God and his angels in heaven. And now, let me direct the devoted husband and three motherless children to Hymn No. 753, Standard Hymn Book.

MUSE—WESTERN W. MUSE was born March 6, 1887, and died in the faith at his earthly home in Wilkinson county, Miss., December 20, 1888. Bro. Muse was long a member, and for many years the last surviving male member of that old historic church at Bethel Camp Ground, where in the days of Winans, Drake, James, Judge McGehee, and others, the great camp meetings were annually held, and many souls converted, almost [illegible] have preceded him to the glory land. To the day of his death he loved to speak of those occasions and their grand results and sing the old camp meeting songs. And, though for three or four years before his death his mind was much impaired, and memory almost gone, and [illegible] right hand had lost its cunning, and his tongue would refuse to utter his thoughts, yet he did "[illegible] Zion," and professed the [illegible] his chief joy.

P. HOWARD.

PHARES—EMMA P. PHARES was born in West Feliciana parish, La., February 27, 1841. He was the eldest son of William and Mary A. Phares.

How sad! just as he was reaching the years of ripening manhood he was suddenly stricken down. For some time past he had been troubled with chills and fever, but little attention was paid to this, however, thinking that nothing serious would ensue. But, alas! congestion developed and the faithful attention of physicians with the prayers and love of [illegible] family and friends could not influence the messenger to delay his sad mission. On July 27, 1888, he closed his eyes in death. We laid him away in the old Woodland cemetery to await the resurrection. May the [illegible] sanctify this mysterious providence to the good of those who [illegible] this loss!

She was for a long time a member of the old Bethel Church, of Wilkinson county, Miss., and at the time of her removal to Texas was connected with the church at Jackson, La. Scientific.

Uses of Photography in Science.

In describing some of the applications of photography to scientific purposes, Mr. H. Trueman Wood mentions, as among the advantages of the art for such uses, that it is an absolutely unprejudiced observer. The sensitive plate records, with absolute fidelity, the image thrown upon it. The sensitive surface further has the power of storing up feeble impressions of light, so that an image is produced by the long-continued impact of vibrations too feeble to have any effect until they have been allowed to impinge upon the plate for a considerable time; while, on the other hand, the light-rays, if of sufficient energy, can produce their due effect in a time which, to human appreciation, seems infinitely small. Again, the photographic plate is affected by rays to which the eye is quite insensitive, and thus by its aid we can take cognizance of, and observe, rays beyond the limits of the visible spectrum, of the highest and of the lowest refrangibility. Thus, the photographic lens will record the impression of an infinite amount of detail, to reproduce which by any other method would require immense time and labor. The most important services which have been rendered by photography to science are in astronomy; in photographs of the moon, of the sun, and of eclipses, in which possibly evanescent phenomena are put on permanent record for the study of after-years. The work of cataloguing and charting the stars, and accurately locating them, has been greatly aided; has been, in fact, set in a new aspect by means of photography. Then we have the photographs of the nebulæ, one of which, Mr. Common's view of the nebula in Orion, Mr. Lockyer has declared to be one of the greatest achievements in astronomy, of a value greater than that of all the eye-observations made during the past two and a half centuries. In astronomical spectroscopy, by which great discoveries have been made respecting the constitution of the heavenly bodies, photography has had it all its own way. Meteorologists have made use of photography in various ways, as in application to self-recording instruments of various kinds, and in observations of cloud-forms and distances, and of lightning. In chemistry and physics, the best [illegible] graphic work has been done by the camera when allied to the spectroscope. [illegible] spheres and [illegible] the appearances of [illegible] have been many and [illegible] photography, with [illegible] and perfect [illegible] the figures [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The Fifty-first Congress reassembled on January 2. In the Senate the Tariff Bill was taken up at the point where it had been left when last before that body. The River and Harbor Bill was attacked in the House as being extravagant and wasteful.

The question of the duty on sugar is just now exciting more interest than any other portion of the Tariff Bill, for the reason that it has aroused the first serious contention among the Republican Senators.

Mr. Sherman, in the Senate on January 3, referring to the Panama Canal, said that the French government had hitherto refrained from official connection with the enterprise, but that on account of the failure of De Lesseps it was now proposed that the French government should itself assume the construction of the canal or exercise some power inconsistent with the established doctrine of the American government. Under the circumstances he thought that the passage of a resolution expressing the disapproval of the government regarding the connection of any European government with such an enterprise would be an act of friendly caution. The resolution met with much opposition, and was laid aside.

An important move for the enforcement of the prohibition law took place on January 4, at Burlington, Ia. The sheriff made a raid on a wholesale liquor establishment and seized about 200 barrels of whisky and 100 cases of wine.

The steamboat Paris C. Brown, on January 3, struck a snag and sunk up to her hurricane roof at Hermitage, La. Eight lives were lost. The vessel is a total wreck. The Bridge was valued at $21,000, and insured for $15,000.

The Kate Robbins, a Parisol Line steamboat, struck a snag at Pebble Bluff, in Tensas Lake, on the little Tensas, and sunk in a few minutes. No lives lost.

The municipal election in Brandon, Miss., on January 7, was carried by the Democrats.

The strike of the engineers and firemen on the C., B. and Q. railroad, at Chicago, has been settled.

FOREIGN.

Work on the Panama Canal seems to be unaffected by the crisis in France. The various contractors have been promptly paid up to date, and everything is cheerful.

Mr. Gladstone repudiates the idea that Ireland, under Home Rule, would become a mere papal instrument. In support of his belief Mr. Gladstone instanced the fact that the Irish had chosen Protestants as their political leaders, beginning with Mr. Parnell. In regard to the papal question his views had not changed.

The floods in Southern France have caused enormous damage.

Private information was received at Castle Garden, on the third instant, of the launching recently of a new war ship by the Italian government. The vessel is called Re Umberto, and her displacement is 13,298 tons, or 1,358 tons more than the Trafalgar and Nile, England's two largest war vessels.

London's lord mayor will give a farewell banquet in honor of the United States minister and Mrs. Phelps on January 24.

The Journal de St. Petersburg, reflecting on the speeches of King Humbert of Italy and Herr Von Tisza, the Hungarian prime minister, in which they predicted that peace would prevail during the coming year, declares that "every nation sincerely wishes that the events of 1889 will verify their favorable auguries."

At a banquet at Gran, on January 5, Cardinal Simor, primate of Hungary, offered a toast in honor of the Pope. In a violent speech he denounced Italy's treatment of the Pope as intolerable.

An attempt was made on the fifth instant, to blow up the building occupied by the Ministry of the Interior in Spain. A petard was exploded in the rear of the building, but beyond shattering the windows it did no damage.

The Czar, on January 5, granted an audience to Judge Lambert Tree, the United States minister, who presented his credentials.

The London Times' Roman correspondent hears that the Italian government will obtain a loan of $2,000,000 in Germany, which will be a reply to the Russian loan obtained in France.

Since the release of the Haytian Republic, on December 25, to the United States steamers Galena and Yantic an officer and a boat's crew, regularly relieved, have been constantly kept aboard of the Haytian Republic, and that ship is kept constantly under the sheltering guns of the United States war vessels.

A violent storm has occurred in Pyrenees Orientales. The rivers have overflowed their banks and the streets of Perpignan and the country in all about are flooded. Communication has been stopped, considerable loss of damage has been done and much distress caused.

What "Speedilac" Means.

Ask Beel to Hood's Sarsaparilla, the word Peculiar is of great importance. It means that Hood's Sarsaparilla is different in its combinations, in many vital points, which make it a medicine of unusual merit, in a strictly peculiar sense. First, in the combination of medicinal roots used; second, the proportion in which they are used; third, the process by which the active curative properties are secured. Sandy knows well. They mean worlds. They make Hood's Sarsaparilla Peculiar in its curative powers, as it accomplishes wonderful cures hitherto unknown, and which give to Hood's Sarsaparilla a clear right to the title of "The greatest blood purifier ever discovered."

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS

J. G. GRANT

50 and 52 Baronne Street,

OFFERS THE FOLLOWING SUGGESTIONS

THERE are two ways to make money. One is to earn it; the other is to save it. There are two ways of saving money. When you save a dollar by putting it in the bank you do well, but when you save a dollar by shrewd purchasing you do better. The first is saving; the second is in reality earning. So there are two ways of earning money--by labor and by wise purchasing.

LET ME SAY A WORD ABOUT PURCHASING:

The FIRST THING to learn in order to become a successful purchaser is that price means nothing until you have seen the goods. The fact that Bedroom Suits, for instance, cost $100 in one store and $65 in another tells you nothing. The $100 suit may be worth $125, while the $65 suit may not be worth carrying away. It is only when you have compared the goods as well as the prices that you are in a position to judge of what is cheap and what is not. Goods may be too cheap sometimes. Prices don't always tell the whole story. Either know the goods or know the dealer. If he has a reputation for liberality and straightforward dealing, people soon find it out. When you learn that he is carrying a larger and better stock, and that his trade is increasing rapidly, both in the city and the adjoining states, why it means something. It means that his business methods have been approved, that people have discovered his liberal ways and taken advantage of them, and it points you the direction for your next purchase.

The SECOND PRECEPT in successful purchasing is that the best is always cheapest in the end. Many people who have never visited our warerooms have the idea that only cheap goods are sold because I do not put on much outside style and occupy a showy and very high priced store, but one visit will prove that this is a great mistake. Remember that there is a big difference between CHEAP GOODS and GOOD CHEAP. Go elsewhere for cheap goods, but come here for goods cheap. The man who sells cheap goods sells his customers at the same time. I am not in that line of business. The people are beginning to understand the difference, and my trade proves it every day. A word to the wise is sufficient. Call and see how cheap fashionable furniture of the best quality can be sold.

ELIXIR MORTIS.

BY JAMES BUCKHAM.

Oft I've seen a smile on lips of death,
Sweet peace upon the brow of marble sleep.
I love to think, some rapture, sweet and deep,
Comes unto mortals with the last soft breath.

"He giveth his beloved sleep," one saith;
And may it not be that, the while we weep,
And Death puts in his gentle blade, to reap,
The soul in nobler elysian wandereth?

Oh not our God, who ever kindly brings
Each little pilgrim to these gates of earth,
Make even death as painless-sweet as birth—
Like the first lifting of a young bird's wings?
A rapture, when we launch with buoyance forth,
Leaving the outgrown nest for wider things!

The Arraignment and Trial of the Prayer Meeting.

BY J. B. W.

The pastor at Laodicea, where the church was "lukewarm," resolved on a day when the conditions were all favorable—that is to say, no rain, no dust, no mud, not cold, nor yet hot, not windy, but a bright, breezy, beautiful day; when the last weather-apology for non-attendance was swept away by the brightness of the Sabbath—resolved, we say, to put the prayer meeting on its trial in answer to any charges which might be preferred. The pastor said no written charges and specifications had been presented against the prayer meeting, but he was quite sure charges were secretly entertained; for he had noticed when the neighbors generally ceased to call on a certain family, that they had their reasons for it. The reasons may have been good, or they may have been unreasonable prejudices; but the result was the same—the family was socially forsaken, and for cause. He argued from these premises that there was a legitimate inference that an analogous state of things existed here in Laodicea; for many of the old friends and former visitors of the prayer meeting had cut its acquaintance, and had ceased to call on it once for long months—not to say, years.

"Now," said the pastor, "there must be a reason, or reasons for these;" and that he stood there that day as the friend of the prayer meeting, to hear and answer, if he conscientiously could, the objections that any might have to offer. He said the charges might be graver than he supposed; that he might not be able to make satisfactory replies; but, though he knew he was sadly in the minority in his sympathy with the prayer meeting, yet it was in his nature to befriend the weak and stand by the deserted.

"Now, then," said he, "if any of you have aught against the prayer meeting, say on." There was silence for a brief space, one looking at another, and each waiting for some other to lead in stating objections. "Well," said a highly respectable brother, "I hear that there are only a few, and they rather obscure, who attend or visit the prayer meeting. Rather a poor thing, I understand." The pastor said that this was only a rumor, only hearsay evidence, and could not be received as testimony against the prayer meeting. Besides, to desert an old friend, for no other reason than that certain others had grown cold towards him and deserted him, was hardly generous. He thought real friends should cling all the closer in the days of neglect and desertion; that such conduct was too much the conduct of the faint-hearted disciples when Christ was surrounded by his enemies—"they all forsook him."

Said another, who had not been to prayer meeting for years, and was not regarded eminent for his piety, "he heard that people in whom he had little confidence prayed at these meetings, and he did not care to be mixed up with such."

The pastor said he had to say in reply, "Let him that is without sin cast the first stone" at the sinners who prayed in prayer meeting; and, further, he had always understood that it was the most unworthy and sinful who had most need to pray; that the man that said, "God be merciful to me, a sinner," was the man that was "justified," and not the man who "thanked God that he was not as other men." He said he thought if the brother would come to prayer meeting, and hear these people humbly confessing sin and asking mercy, he would be more charitable.

Another said "he thought that prayer meetings were rather antiquated institutions, and were fast becoming obsolete; that in this scientific age, this age of wide and varied culture, the church had outgrown the need of the prayer meeting. We had become too esthetic and refined for anything of the kind." The pastor said he read in the Bible, a book for which he hoped all entertained the highest respect, that "men ought always to pray, and never to faint;" that we ought to pray all prayer, or all manner of prayer, and "pray without ceasing;" that in apostolic times, in the city of Jerusalem, we read they had prayer meetings, and that they were in such good order that "many were gathered together praying;" that St. Paul was an eminent scholar, far traveled, and a visitor of the most polished cities of the Augustan age of culture; yet we read of his holding and attending prayer meeting. The pastor said that here in Laodicea we were making commendable progress in mental culture and social refinement; but he had failed to recognize such an advanced esthetic development as to supersede the need of social prayer; that, as he understood it, we were "saved by grace through faith," and not by esthetics at all. He should regret to see an attempt to supersede Christian fellowship, consecration and zeal with esthetic culture, however refined or beautiful.

Another brother said "he thought these prayer meetings should be conducted more socially, and made more conversational than they were." The pastor said he would venture to say, in the name of the prayer meeting, that no objection would be made to such a change, though, as he understood it, prayer meetings were not exactly talking meetings, and thought it a little singular that Methodists who had almost abandoned class meeting—a meeting specially intended for Christian conversation—should be urging the introduction of conversation into the services of the prayer meeting. However, he would venture to say, as the representative of the prayer meeting, that it would cordially welcome all such, and would be glad to hear them talk, or do anything that would lend interest to the occasion.

An excellent lady, who claimed to be nervous, and at times indisposed, said "that her health did not permit her to attend prayer meeting." The pastor said he was glad that this sister made no complaint against the prayer meeting; but would remark, in a general way, without intending any allusions but where they might be strictly applicable, that his mind had long been considerably exercised with the sanitary difficulties of church attendance. He was not deeply read in the laws of hygiene, but his mind was puzzled to understand how large, well-ventilated and comfortable churches, not greatly crowded either, could be so unhealthy as some seemed to suppose; that he had known people who would attend a wedding or a party, even on an inclement evening, who felt they could safely risk themselves at an opera, a circus, or a crowded theatre even, yet would not venture on the rashness of exposing their health to the night air of an evening meeting. The pastor said the whole question was an enigma too deep for his solution. As for those really sick, no one felt a more tender sympathy than he.

Another said "he had no particular objection to the prayer meeting. It might be well enough for some people, but that he did not need it, and did not wish to be troubled about it. He asked to be let alone. He worked hard, and wished to rest at home when night came."

The pastor said if the case was as the brother stated, that he did not need prayer meeting, he was certainly to be congratulated, for he apprehended that there were but few who could say so; but he really thought such an advanced believer ought to feel, and manifest more sympathy than he did, for those who were weak in faith, listless in zeal, and cold in love. Some such there were, and they needed all the sympathizing aid the strong could give them. The highest authority has told us it is more blessed to give than to receive, and he who said this came himself "to seek and save those that were lost." The pastor said he had been taught by the Book of books that those who followed Christ must "deny themselves," not only sins, gross or overt, but needless self-indulgence as well, and that the Christian must "endure hardness as a good soldier," and "give all diligence to add to his faith" all Christian graces. The apostle says: "We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves. Let everyone of us please his neighbor for his good to edification; for even Christ pleased not himself."

After a pause, and no one seeming to wish to speak, the pastor said it seemed to him that the objections urged against their old friend, the prayer meeting, were not well taken, nor well sustained, and were not, in his humble opinion, justifiable grounds for the cold treatment the prayer meeting had received here in Laodicea, and that, for his part, he felt more like standing up to his old, neglected, and injured friend than he ever did. There being no more to say, the investigation closed, and it was resolved "that it is not expedient at present to abolish the prayer meeting."

Missouri Letter.

BY M. B. CHAPMAN, D. D.

As I look out of my study-window this morning on the pouring rain, I can easily imagine myself in the South, for it is a typical Louisiana winter's day. Just think of it! The eighth of January in Missouri, and the thermometer has not yet touched zero. If Boreas does not come soon, we will have to depend on the Southern ice factories for our ice next summer. So far not a pound has been gathered, and usually the ice-houses are almost full by this time. The gathering of ice is quite an important industry in our city, and the work usually employs a large number of laborers. Our dealers ship large quantities to Texas and other Southern States, and have a good deal of capital invested in their houses and machinery; so that the mild winter is being felt somewhat keenly in business circles. But it is an ill wind that blows no one good, and a green winter in this rigorous climate is a great blessing to the poor.

As last Christmas, so this year Park Church and Sunday-school celebrated our Lord's birthday by donations to the poor. Tables were placed in the auditorium, and on these were put the various donations as they were brought on Christmas Eve. Provisions, clothing, bedding, books and toys for children, etc., constituted the gifts, and I think both parents and children realized that it was more blessed to give than to receive. We charged an admission fee of a potato and an apple, and collected about a barrel of each, which were put with the other donations. We had a responsive service, with singing and recitations, in which all the children took part. Then on Christmas morning a committee, which had previously ascertained where the needy families were, and what were their wants, distributed the gifts in the name of the church. It seems to me that there can be no better way to celebrate Christmas than this, and it is certainly in the fullest accord with the Spirit of the Master, who declared, "The poor ye have always with you."

The NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE is always interesting to me; has been ever since when a boy I used to read H. N. McTyeire's editorials, and turn to the "Children's Corner" to see what he had for the little ones. How well I remember that "Children's Corner!"—and I still have in an old scrap book some things I cut from it. Your paper and the New York Observer are the first religious papers I remember. My father, raised a Presbyterian, always took both. I have read the ADVOCATE from that time on—through the editorships of J. C. Keener, Linus Parker, C. B. Galloway and others, until the present editor, the friend and adviser of my boyhood, mounted the tripod. Since then it has had increased interest for me, and is one of the most valued of all our church papers. But it is especially interesting to me when the Southern Conferences are being held, and when I see in its columns the names of some whom I have known so long. Your last issue contained the proceedings of the Louisiana Conference, which received me on trial twenty years ago, and many memories were stirred as I looked over the appointments. I missed the names of many who have "fallen on sleep" since I was received, a boy, among you, and there are many strange names; but some remain whose names and faces are among the most cherished memories of my boyhood.

I am glad to see that, under the vigorous administration of Dr. Hunnicutt, Centenary is taking a new lease of life, and I regret to see that the Mississippi Conferences propose to establish another college. At this distance, and knowing nothing of the circumstances save what I see through the church papers, I am, perhaps, hardly competent to form a correct judgment; but it does seem to me as if it would be far better for the five Conferences in Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana to concentrate on the Southern University and Centenary, and give them large endowments and first-class equipments, making them the equal of any institutions in the country, than to attempt to establish another college, and thus cripple the two they already have. Southern Methodism has already more colleges and newspapers than she needs, and her interests would be better conserved by decreasing the quantity and increasing the quality. Multiply the high schools, and let them be feeders to the colleges, and then let there be fewer of the latter, but let their standard of scholarship be raised. Endow the colleges liberally, and afford facilities for the students to live cheaply, so that our institutions may come into active competition with the State Universities, and you will then build up great centers of influence like Vanderbilt, which will be felt throughout Southern Methodism.

In saying that we have more Southern Methodist papers than we need, I referred to the multiplication of Advocates and weakly papers to come in competition with those already established. I am heartily in favor of a first-class weekly missionary paper, bright, crisp, fully abreast of the times, with a live editor whose time shall be wholly given to it, and which shall be devoted to the work of letting the church know that the world is moving, and of stirring up enthusiasm in the great cause which lay nearest the heart of Christ. I believe such a paper, properly edited, would commend itself so heartily to our people that it would pay its way, and, if it did not do so at first, the Board could well afford to appropriate $10,000 to put it on its feet, and to send it into every family of the church. I believe the investment would pay fourfold the first year. The Methodist Episcopal Church appropriates $10,000 annually for the single item of missionary intelligence. We could well afford to do the same, for they find that it pays in sending out leaflets, tracts, etc. But a weekly paper, brimful of bulletins from the field of battle and replete with information and statement of facts, would do a hundredfold more than could be accomplished by the leaflet plan. The latter would go but once; the other fifty-two times a year. One would be stereotyped and tame, the other fresh and stirring. Keep the matter before the church, Mr. Editor, and by May, 1890, it may be accomplished.

At Park Church we enter the new year hopefully. Our congregations are large and serious, and I trust that we will soon be in the midst of a gracious revival. We are having union services in the city during the week of prayer, and next week I will continue the services in my own church. The following week Sam Small will be with me, and we are expecting and praying for large results.

HANNIBAL, MISSOURI.

Rev. T. J. Carver.

The following memorial was presented by the committee appointed by the teachers of the Carondelet Street Sabbath-school, New Orleans, and was unanimously adopted by the school:

Rev. T. J. Carver was born in Pennsylvania, in 1818; moved with his parents to Virginia when very young, and lived in that State until he was sixteen years old. He was an ambitious boy, and sought and obtained employment in an office when only thirteen. His parents were members of the Episcopal Church; but his early association in business with Methodists led him often to their churches, where he was soon happily converted to God.

Before he was twenty he was licensed as a local preacher. In early manhood he moved to Mobile, Ala., where for more than thirty years he was engaged as a cotton factor. Although a man of many business cares and responsibilities, he never failed to respond when called on to supply the pulpit.

Mr. Carver's was a well-rounded Christian character. He was always on the right side of every moral question. As a temperance worker, he was an earnest prohibitionist, never advocating his views in an offensive way, but always, as a man, imbued with the consciousness that he was responsible to God for his convictions. Mr. Carver was a man of a genial, sunshiny disposition, invariably meeting his friends with a pleasant smile and cheery words. But in his home-life his Christian virtues shone out more beautifully than anywhere else on earth. Those who knew and loved him most testify that "the life he lived in the flesh, he lived by faith in the Son of God." He was never very strong, physically, but in faith and good works he was a valiant soldier for Christ.

About ten years ago he came to New Orleans, and from then until the close of his life he was actively identified with all the enterprises of the church in this city. For five years he had been the superintendent of the Carondelet Street Sunday-school. Who can ever forget his earnest prayers for its success? He believed and taught that the end of all Sunday-school teaching should be to lead the children to Christ. He knew every child in the school, and always had a smile and kind word for the youngest and most timid, as well as for the oldest or most wayward. Between him and the officers and teachers there always existed the most friendly Christian intercourse. When business required him to be absent from the city he commended his successor and the school to God. Only a few Sabbaths since he stood here, his head silvered with the frosts of seventy years, his benignant countenance beaming with love for the Savior. The tremulous tones of his voice, in his appeals to teachers and scholars, still linger in our ears; but we shall see his face no more on earth. The summons came suddenly, December 20, but it found him ready. While we weep, let us be consoled with the words of Holy Writ: "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord; for they rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

To his bereaved wife and only surviving daughter we tender our sincerest sympathy. And now, superintendent, officers, teachers and scholars, let us covenant this day to meet him,

"Where the sunset ceases to roll;
Where, in all the bright forever,
Sorrow never shall press the soul."

MRS. DR. J. J. LYONS,
For Committee.

A Call to the Churches Composing the Jackson District, Mississippi Conference.

Each pastor will please read this to his congregation. There is a debt of some six hundred dollars, which is burdening our district parsonage at Jackson. There is a church in the bounds of this district which has prayed and been God-led into the settled conviction that God in his Word means literally what he says regarding his blessings and his cursings; that honors and prosperity are in his hands, to be awarded those who come to him and stand bravely and liberally by him in his church's need. We are willing and anxious and pray that each church in this district will respond now, nobly and liberally, to his call of help for this parsonage, and thereby get its award of blessing from God; but we are going to try and get our share of these precious promises, and hereby assume, and on the first of April next will pay, whatever unpaid balance it may owe. Bro. Laird, of Jackson, and Bro. Little, our presiding elder, will receipt for all contributions. Come, brethren, get filled with the Spirit!

A Call.

To Secretaries of Annual Conferences:

Will the secretaries of all our Annual Conferences please forward to the undersigned as soon as possible the number and value of the churches burned within their respective Conferences during the last ten years? This can be very readily accomplished if every presiding elder who reads this call forward a postal card to his Conference secretary, containing the value and number of churches burned in his district during the last ten years.

AN EARLY MISSIONARY.

She left the pitcher at the well, and to her home returned,
The welcome words of life to bear, that in her full heart burned.
Her kindred and the stranger's ear alike the news receive,
Of waters from a hidden spring the Savior waits to give.

With joyful haste, and zealous love, she turns to seek her home.
The ceaseless burden of her theme: "Behold the Christ is come!"
He waits, Messiah waits to bless, as none e'er blessed before;
Come, drink ye of the living spring; believe and thirst no more.

"Come and behold Messiah's face, of whom the people tell;
O come and hear his holy voice; he waiteth by the well;
To come to Christ!" Samaria's hills echo his name aloud,
And tidings of Messiah fly amid the wondering crowd!

Like her of Sychar, hast thou drunk of that blest fountain? Then go,
Let others learn the priceless gifts that in these waters flow.
Go forth! and in thy Savior's strength proclaim the news abroad,
And wandering hearts shall turn, and bless a feeble woman's word.

But if thou canst not go; if thou must watch thine own loved fold,
Then from thy well-filled purse, or even it like her of old
A single farthing be thy store; give, and he who loves his own,
Will send another in thy stead, and say to thee, "Well done."

Sunday-School Lesson.—Jan. 27.

FORGIVENESS AND HEALING.

Mark ii, 1-12.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Who forgiveth all thine iniquities; who healeth all thy diseases.—Psa. ciii. 3.

TIME.—A. D. 27. Matthew places this event after Christ's return by ship from the eastern side of the lake. Mark says it took place after some days.

PLACE.—His own city—that is, Capernaum, which he had adopted as his place of residence so far as he had any abiding-place.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. ix. 1-8; Luke v. 18-26.

1. It was noised—They had followed him on his journey from town to town, and now, on his return to Capernaum, the rumor of voices and the pressure of throngs beset him more than ever. Had anxiety to hear the truths of the new spiritual kingdom caused this excitement, it would have been healthy, but it had been already shown only too clearly that, while men believed in his power to heal, they cared little for his higher claims. In the house—He went at once to the house—probably the house of St. Peter—which he ordinarily used when staying at Capernaum. Then the crowd gathered in even denser numbers, filling the house and even the court-yard which surrounded it, so that there was no access even to the door. Our Savior was so far from seeking the people's praise and commendation that he came into Capernaum without observation, and betook himself to his dwelling-house there; but the more he sought to lie hid, the more he was taken notice of. Honor flies from them that pursue it, and pursues those that fly from it. The way to be honored is to be humble.

2. Many were gathered together—Where the king is, there is the court: where Shiloh is, there shall the gathering of the people be. It being ascertained that he might be found, persons of consideration repaired to Capernaum, not only from other parts of Galilee, but from Judea and Jerusalem; some, doubtless, in search of benefit to their souls, some from curiosity to see and hear one whose name was in every mouth, and others to watch whether any dangerous principles lurked in a doctrine so actively promulgated. It would be a humble house; and the public apartment, or family room, in which our Savior would be seated, was soon crowded to the door. No room to receive them—If we may judge from the ruins on the site of the town, the house was only a single, very low-story high, with a flat roof reached by a stairway from the yard or court, and Jesus may have stood near the door, in such a position as to be able to address the crowd outside as well as those in the chamber. No! so much as about the door—So great was the crowd that access could not be obtained to the door. This might intimate that the paralytic was taken up through a neighbor's house to the roof over Jesus. Preached the word—The term preached employed in our Authorized Version summons up before our imagination more of the nature of a public proclamation, or harangue, than is indicated by the evangelist's expression. The Savior was in a private house, and sat talking to the people. Such is the import of the term. Observe how simple must have been the preaching of Christ, a house-to-house preaching.

3. They come—He was addressing the thickly crowded audience about the kingdom of God, so long prophesied, and now, at last, in their midst, when four men approached, bearing a sick person on a hammock slung between them. It proved to be a man entirely paralyzed, unable to make their way through the throng, the bearers went round the house to see what should be done. Sick of the palsy—Palsy is defined, a sudden loss of tone and vital power in a certain part of the human body. This may affect a limb, the whole side, the tongue, or the whole body. Borne of four—In this verse we have again the particular minute depicting of Mark. This sick man appears to have been too feeble to come himself, and too weak to be carried in any other way.

4. They uncovered the roof—The sick man was bent on getting to the feet of Jesus, and willingly let them raise him, which they were able to do by fastening cords to the hammock, and pulling it up, after they themselves had got to the top by the narrow and ladder-like steps. Their trembling burden once safely on the roof, the rest was easy. Eastern houses are, in many ways, very different from ours, but in none more strikingly than in the lightness of the roof. Rafters are laid on the top of the side walls, about three feet apart, and on these short sticks are put, till the whole space is covered. Over these, again, a thick coating of brushwood, or of some common bush, is spread. A coat of mortar comes next, burying and leveling all beneath it, and on this again is spread marl or earth, which is rolled flat and hard. Many roofs, indeed, are much slighter—earth closely rolled or beaten down, perhaps, mixed with ashes, lime and chopped straw—being all the owners can afford; and thus, even at this day, it is common to see grass growing on the house-top after the rains, and repairs of cracks made by the sun's rays are often needed in the hot season to prevent heavy leakage. It is thus easy to break up a roof when necessary, and it is often done. The earth is merely scraped back from a part, and the thorns and short sticks removed, till an opening of the required size is made. Let down the bed—The couch (or pallet), not the common word for bed, here used by Luke and Matthew, but one of Macedonian origin, found only in the later Greek, and probably denoting a couch easily carried, perhaps, a camp-bed. Even the most costly Oriental beds consist of cushions and light coverings spread upon the door or divan, bedsteads being quite unknown.

5. Their faith—Namely, in letting him down through the roof, because the whole house and space around the door was full. Their must be supposed to include the sick man, who was, at least, a consenting party to the bold step which they took. Observe, too, that apparently Christ answers the prayer before it is presented. They say nothing; he speaks to the silent prayer of their actions. Son, thy sins be forgiven thee—There is something which strikes us with surprise in the words which he spoke—so unlike his usual utterances on similar occasions: "Thy sins be forgiven thee." It reminds us of the inseparable connection between sin and suffering, "by sin came death," and with death all its evil forerunners of pain and sorrow, sickness and disease. It would seem that the man was conscience-stricken. We are not told it in so many words, but what if the loss of vital energy in his limbs had been produced by a course of enfeebling indulgence? We can see his terror in the presence of the Great Searcher of men's hearts, dreading disclosure, and yet longing to be healed. It is thus that in fear and trembling he may have poured out his soul in confession of his guilt. St. Matthew hints at least something of the kind, for he puts into our Lord's mouth such words of fatherly love and encouragement as a confession of this kind would naturally evoke, "Son, be of good cheer," and then, "Thy sins be forgiven thee."

6. Certain of the scribes sitting there—Those who assembled now on his return to Capernaum were not merely residents of that place, but collected, as Luke strongly phrases it, from every village of Galilee and Judea, as well as from Jerusalem. However hyperbolical these terms may be, the essential fact is still that these unfriendly scribes came from various quarters, thereby showing the importance which began to be attached to Christ's proceedings, especially by those who were at once the jurists and the theologians, the lawyers and the clergy, of the Jewish nation. Reasoning in their hearts—The term is graphic in the original. They started a dialogue with themselves within their own minds. Themselves spoke to themselves, as it were, but with bated breath. All at once the animosities of the scribes and Pharisees were aroused. "Was not the forgiveness of sins one of the inalienable prerogatives of the Godhead? It is nothing less than blasphemy in him to claim it." Such were their unspoken thoughts; but he whose divine claims they denied established them in the very midst of their denial. For did he not read the secrets of their heart, and hear their muttered murmurings? which none but God could do. Probably all who heard these words were startled by them; for Jesus had never yet claimed to be able to forgive sin. But to the scribes and Pharisees present such a claim seemed, not merely strange, but blasphemous.

8. Jesus perceived in his spirit—The Lord saw the reasonings of the scribes, just as he had seen the faith of the bearers and the penitence of him whom they bore. To know the hearts of men was, with the Jews, a test of the true Messiah's claims. Jesus, therefore, by thus revealing to the Pharisees that which they kept secret in the deep recesses of their hearts, shows himself to be more than man, and proves, by the very power which he possessed, as God, of tracing the secrets of the heart, that he was able to forgive sins. Why reason ye these things—The fault was not in him, but in themselves, who thus presumed to sit in judgment on him. The interrogation has the same force in both cases, namely, that of implied censure. "What right has this man to pronounce such words?" What right have you to entertain such thoughts?

9. Whether is it easier to say—That is, to say it with a clear and visible effect to sustain it. Any popish priest can say, Thy sins be forgiven thee, and the credulous may believe that a miracle of pardon is performed. But it is not quite so easy to perform the bodily miracle. When a man does heal the sick and raise the dead at will, we may then begin to believe that he has authority to forgive the sins by which disease and death are produced.

10. But that ye may know—They should know him to be the Messiah, not according to their false Messiah-notions, but according to his true demonstrations of Messiah-ship; and the expression was meant to lead them to this.

11. Arise, and take up thy bed—The forgiveness of Christ did not remove the palsy; that was the result of a separate, distinct act of Christ. It is quite conceivable that it might never have been removed at all, that he might have been forgiven and the palsy suffered to remain. Consider, too, that without a miracle it must have remained in this man's case. It is so in every-day life. If the intemperate man repents he will receive forgiveness; but will that penitence give him back the steady hand of youth? Or if the suicide, between the moment of draining the poisoned cup and that of death, repent of his deed, will that arrest the operation of the poison? A strong constitution or the physician may possibly save life; but penitence has nothing to do with it. Say that the natural penal consequence of crime is the scaffold; did the pardon given to the dying thief disarm his hands? Did Christ's forgiveness interfere with the natural consequences of his guilt?

12. Immediately he arose—Christ said, Arise, and he arose. It is the public, instantaneous succession of divine cause and effect. Glorified God—The scribes charged Christ with blasphemy—that is, derogating from the divine dignity by claiming a divine function? In fact, his act led the people to glorify God. And so, whenever Christ has been accepted as God manifest in the flesh, and as the one who forgives sins on earth, the worship and glory of God the Father has been increased, not lessened. The man was healed. He rose, lifted the light couch on which he had been lying, and, while now the crowd opened a passage for him, he went to his house glorifying God; and the multitude, when they broke up to disperse, kept exchanging one with another exclamations of astonishment not unmixed with fear: "We saw strange things to-day!" "We never saw anything like this before!"

From the Work

OPELOUSAS DISTRICT NOTES.

Rev. S. S. Keener, the active and popular presiding elder, begins his work with his usual zeal and energy. He is now serving his fourth year in the district. May the Lord make this, his last year, his best!

One thing we need—a district parsonage. Nearly all of the charges have parsonages, but no house for our presiding elders in which to shelter. Our next presiding elder may not have his own house in which to live; so let the Methodists of the district take steps to build a nice parsonage to greet the new presiding elder.

Rev. S. J. Davies, late of Opelousas, but now appointed to Dryades Street, New Orleans, left for his new field of labor, on the third instant.

We understand Rev. R. S. Isbell will be on hand to preach, the thirteenth instant, in Opelousas, his place of labor for this year. Brother Isbell served four years in Washington, only six miles from Opelousas, and is, therefore, well acquainted with his people, whom he will serve.

Rev. R. M. Blocker, late of Haughton circuit, of the Shreveport district, arrived safe in Rayne, his new work, the third instant, together with his family, and is now in the parsonage at Plaquemine Brulee. Though moved almost the length of the State, he was soon at his post of duty. We hope now, that this revivalistic preacher is in the district, to have some good revivals, such as he and the writer used to have in North Louisiana.

Bro. R. P. Howell, late of Sulphur Mine circuit, appointed to Floyd, Delhi district, had farther to move than anyone—from the southwestern to the northeastern part of the State. But, like a true itinerant, he has gone on by land with his horse and buggy. We have been feeling for him this bad weather.

Rev. Wilson Moore passed through Washington on January 2, en route to his circuit below Lake Charles—Grand Chenier.

We are all sorry to have to give up good Bro. Manly from the district; but he goes among good people at Algiers, where we trust he will do much good. He left Lafayette, his late home, for Algiers, January 2.

MT. PLEASANT CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: This itinerant system we Methodists have is a wonderful thing. Six years ago I was admitted on trial into this, the North Mississippi Conference. I was born and raised, converted and licensed to preach, and for the past six years traveled in one—the Columbus district, and spent these six years in one county (Winston), only moving eight miles during the six years. It has been said that I stuck to those people like a Leech. I felt, myself, that I was bound to these people as with hooks of steel, and that we could not be separated. I had concluded that, as we had had a great deal of sickness and, of course, a great deal of expense, and had also lost my only horse by death during the past year; and then, as I looked at my six small children, I could imagine my beloved presiding elder representing my case to the Bishop, and saying: "Bro. L. can't move far, so he must have a work near by." But imagine my astonishment, Mr. Editor, when I was read out to Mt. Pleasant circuit, Holly Springs district—a place I never heard of before, and more than two hundred miles away. The first thought was, "How am I to get there?" I thought of Abraham when the Lord told him to get out of "thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house unto a land that I will shew thee." And as Abraham obeyed, so did we; and, Mr. Editor, in less than two weeks after receiving our appointment this preacher, his wife and all six of the children had made that long move, and were comfortably housed in their new home; not only that, but we have raised money sufficient to furnish the parsonage that was entirely destitute of furniture when we came. Yes, the furniture is all in and up, and we have almost got all the new (I mean coal tar) off the stove.

We found our new home entirely empty. Our predecessors had failed to leave us anything in the way of eatables—just about in the condition our successor found his new home. But a regular Methodist cyclone struck us on the eve of our arrival. It was headed by the good ladies of Mt. Pleasant; in the rear came a two-mule wagon loaded—yes, so loaded that a large pair of mules stalled, at least, once before reaching the parsonage; and when we unloaded and examined effects, we concluded that Bishop Galloway was right in saying a Methodist preacher could move further on less, and have more left than any man in the world. We are safe in the way of eatables until our first quarterly meeting, even if it is not held until the first of April.

I am glad, Mr. Editor, that I am a Methodist itinerant preacher; and while I shall not love my old charge less, I shall try and love my new one more. We have all consecrated ourselves to the Lord, and have gone to work to put in a full year for our blessed Master. Pray for us! Yours,

J. A. LEECH.

The "Blue Laws" of Connecticut.

BY PROF. O. B. WILLCOX.

These statutes are among the curiosities of literature. Before discussing them, let us inquire where and what the "Connecticut colony" of early settlers was. The chief leaders in founding it were Rev. Thomas Hooker and Mr. Stone, of Newtown, Mass. Mr. Hooker, like most of the liberally educated Puritans, was from Emmanuel College, Cambridge, England, where the memory of them all is still cherished. A few pioneers had already sought a foothold near where now stands the city of Hartford. But, in June, 1636, Hooker and Stone, with a hundred members of their congregation, driving before them a hundred head of cattle, traveled by the compass through an unbroken wilderness to that same point. This settlement was known as the "Connecticut colony."

New Haven, or Quinnipiack, as it was at first called, was settled by a company which went by water from Massachusetts, through Long Island Sound. The "Blue Laws" purported to be mainly those of this latter colony. They were certainly unique and peculiar. We subjoin a few specimens:

No food or lodging shall be offered to a Quaker, Adamite, or other heretic.

No one shall run on the Sabbath day, or walk in the garden or elsewhere, except reverently to and from meeting.

No one shall travel, cook victuals, make beds, sweep house, cut hair, or shave, on the Sabbath day.

No woman shall kiss her child on the Sabbath or fasting-day.

Where it appears that an accused has confederates, and refuses to disclose them, he may be racked.

Whoever wears clothes trimmed with gold, silver or bone lace, above two shillings by the yard, shall be presented by the grand jurors, and the selectmen shall tax the offender, at £300 estate.

No one shall read "Common Prayer," keep Christmas or saints' days, play on any instrument except the drum, trumpet and jew's harp.

When parents refuse their children convenient marriages, the magistrates shall determine the point.

Married persons must live together or be imprisoned.

Every male shall have his hair cut round, according to a cap.

Many a reader may be surprised to know that these laws are as thorough a fiction as "Baron Munchausen's Tales," or the "Arabian Nights Entertainments."

The author of the fraud was Rev. Samuel Peters, a native of Hebron, Conn., and a discreditable member of the Episcopal Church. Figuring during the Revolution as a Tory, he was embarrassingly investigated by a patriotic society, called the "Sons of Liberty." He fled first to Boston; thence, like Benedict Arnold, he departed to more congenial surroundings in England. Once there, he retaliated on his countrymen by this mendacious book. It was published anonymously, a stab in the dark. The title was, "A General History of Connecticut, from its first Settlement under George Fenwick, Esquire. By a Gentleman of the Province. Printed in London for the Author, 1781."

Peters had been a college contemporary of Trumbull, the historian of Connecticut, who compliments him with the remark that "of all men with whom he had ever been acquainted, Dr. Peters (this title he appears to have assumed without right) he had thought from his first knowledge of him, the least to be depended on as to any matter of fact." We have a sample of his veracity in his description of the Connecticut river, at Bellow's Falls. "Here," he says, "water is consolidated without frost, by pressure, by swiftness, between the pinching, sturdy rocks, to such a degree of induration that no iron-crow can be forced into it; here iron, lead and cork have one common weight." Malte Brun, in his "Geographie Universelle," ventures the startling remark that "this statement must be grossly exaggerated."

But enough of Peters and his forgeries. Hon. J. Hammond Trumbull, of Hartford, and Palfrey, in his "History of New England," have abundantly shown that the genuine laws of the Connecticut and New Haven Colonies were incomparably more reasonable and lenient than those of contemporary governments and colonies. It is true that, on the statute-books, there were twelve crimes capitally punished. But this stern justice was explicitly declared to be founded on such of the Mosaic legislation as the Puritans supposed to be still in force. And other laws and penalties, which laid no claim to inspired authority, were so far milder as to imply that the Mosaic statutes in New England were tempered in the enforcement with mercy.

Meanwhile, the laws of the mother-country, down even to the reign of George the Third, were a disgrace to civilization. The prisons were hot-beds of vice, misery and filth. Poaching, sheep stealing, in some instances a theft of a single shilling, were punished with death. Prisoners were sent by the cart-load to the gallows. The ignorance and brutality of the lower orders of judges, who had cognizance of capital crimes, were such that a friendless man, accused, had about as fair a prospect as in the lair of a tiger.

In the Connecticut Colony a man convicted of pilfering (liable in England, as we have seen, to death), was fined thrice the amount stolen, and exposed "to other such severe punishment" as the court might decree.

There was one unwise act to compel church-going. Absence, without good reason, was punished with a fine of five shillings. But this was in accord with the notions of the best men of the age. That men can not be forced into religion was a truth which had dawned on only a few minds that towered above the common level. The law requiring the publication of intention of marriage was of such clear propriety as to need no defense. The prohibition of smoking in places of public resort ought to be re-enacted to-day. Why a man should be suffered to range the streets puffing his nauseous odors into the faces of all near him we have never been able to see.

A law forbidding extravagance in dress, and extortionate charges for commodities, would, of course, be ill-judged for a national statute. But, in their little neighborhoods, the absurdity of it was not so evident. In a rough way, it struck at two of the most perilous evils of our times.

What is the worm at the heart of the integrity of our young men? How surely, when some one of them drops into disgrace for peculation, extravagance in dress and living is the siren that has drawn him on! And what sets our merchants conspiring against the public welfare? What but the notion that they have no responsibility—that no law has a right to call them to account—for their extortionate "corners" and "trusts"?

The fathers of New England were not perfect men. They never made high claims. They sought no man's applause. But, with help from above, they did expect to accomplish something for mankind. The stuff that was in them was hewn into no graceful forms. They showed no polished surfaces. But, like the granite hills around them, they could be trusted. The tourist through Profile Notch, in New Hampshire, looks for the gigantic and famous outline of a human face. But he sees only fragmentary ribs and jags, standing out along the cliff. Reaching at last a turn in the path, whence a finger-post points significantly upward, he looks again. And there, in clear relief against the azure, stand those numberless edges and angles, blending harmoniously and sublimely into the "Old Man of the Mountain"—the grandest natural semblance, perhaps, on the planet, of the "human face divine." There were rough features, sharp angles, in the stern nature of the Puritans. A critic will discover only those. But whoever will move on to a right point of view; whoever, with broad, just comprehension, will see these austerities in their relation to the men and their times and their mission, will find them falling into as noble a type of manhood as history has had to record. Our modern civilization has flowered into a magnificence of which the fathers never dreamed. But, in the fathers, none the less, were the roots, however gnarled and uncomely, of its richest, finest life.—Advance.

The Secret Leaven.

No aspect of the divine economy of redemption is so trying to our faith as the seemingly tardy development of the kingdom of God. Eighteen centuries of Christian life, preceded by ages of moral preparation, appear to have scarcely modified the relations of man to God. The thousands have been gathered in, but the hundreds of millions still sit in darkness and in the shadow of death. Probably this is not a true statement of the case. There has been hidden in the world's heart the leaven of a new life. To what extent it has spread, how far it has assimilated that upon which it has acted we do not, we cannot know. But it is there, and the law which inexorably regulates its influence is a law of progress. Ever and anon, there are unmistakeable evidences of its activity. There are occasional phenomena in the moral life of nations which can only be explained on the theory of a latent divine force. When a people like the Japanese, for instance, steeped for ages in a peculiarly impassable superstition, suddenly develop strong tendencies in the direction of religious resolution, it is unreasonable to deny the operation of a subtle, spiritual influence, such as that to which our Lord refers in his parable of the "leaven." But if this were not so, if the only prospect of the world's conversion lay in the direct and divinely inspired aggression of the church, there would be no ground for despondency; for head over all, with unresting sympathy and omnipresent energy, there presides One, who surveys calmly, and with the assurance of ultimate victory, to which steadily and inevitably all issues are tending, the field of his labor and travail. The whole world lies under his view; with every form of misery, with every phase of wrong, with every struggle of the soul of the fallen, with every yearning of the true heart for the world's welfare, he is familiar. He sees in the "travail" of the souls of his followers the image and reflection of his own "travail;" and it is written of him to whom the salvation of the world is of such concern that for its accomplishment he "became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." "He shall see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied."—Exchange.

The end of life is not to do good, although many of us think so. It is not to win souls, although I once thought so. The end of life is to do the will of God. That may be in the line of doing good or winning souls, or it may not. The maximum achievement of any man's life after it is all over is to have done all the will of God.—Prof. Drummond.

Missionary.

Missions the Work of God.

BY A. T. PIERSON, D. D.

1. The progress of missions would have been impossible without the intervention of a higher power. When, a century ago, the church, as a body, took up the work of evangelizing the world, ten great obstacles stood in her way, to human view insurmountable. They may be classed under four heads: obstacles to approach, obstacles to intercourse, obstacles to impression, obstacles to action.

The world seemed locked against the church, and the church seemed indifferent to the condition of the world. Converts were punished with death; missionaries were martyrs; woman was shut up in harems; some races seemed too high, others too low, to be reached by the gospel. Now all these obstacles are down. Who has done it?

2. Barriers have sometimes gone down as though a continent had sunk to let the sea overflood the land. Hawaii had burned her idols while the Thaddeus was crossing the deep with the first band of missionaries. Japan was undergoing a civil revolution while Commodore Perry was casting anchor in the harbor of Yeddo. Over and over again the missionaries have gone expecting to find gigantic barriers confronting them and have found only prostrate walls. Who has done it?

3. Men and women have been prepared for the work and the work for them when no human foresight could have shaped either for the other. Who fitted William Goodell to begin in 1831 that wonderful work in Constantinople which at that very time needed just such a pioneer? Who but God knew that in 1877 a famine would overspread Southern India, and that a civil engineer would be needed to complete that canal, and so give the starving thousands work; and that the engineer must be a Christian missionary who would teach the workmen of Jesus? and who was it that raised up Mr. Clough to go there long before he knew why he was a civil engineer and felt so strangely drawn to that very station at Ongole? Who was it fitted the peg to the hole when he set Eli Smith in Syria, Robert Morrison in China, Fidelia Fisk in Oroomiah, Lindley among the Zulus, Moffat among the Boers, Duncan among the Indians of British Columbia, and Hunter Corbett among the simple converts of Cheefoo? Can all history show a more marked adaptation of the man and the place and the hour, than Robert W. McAll and Belleville and 1872, when the French nation was reacting from clericalism and imperialism and formalism, and yearning for a simple, positive, primitive gospel? Who did all this?

4. Look at the theology of inventions. How came the mariner's compass, steam as a motor the printing-press, and all subsequent similar inventions and discoveries, to be withheld from the race until theology, anthropology and soteriology had fought their battles, and sociology was coming to the front; and until the Church of the Reformation was preparing to give the Bible to every people, and the press was indispensable; and to carry the gospel to earth's limits, and the compass and steam were needful? Nay, who withheld this continent from unveiling until the pilgrims were ready to settle New England?

5. Passing by for the present many other points already briefly stated, and emphasized in previous articles, behold the crises of the kingdom turned in answer to prayer. Time was when the church itself was asleep. And such men at Gutzlaff and Carey and Jonathan Edwards lay siege at the throne of grace and the church woke, and missions began on a world-wide scale. Then doors seemed shut and a few consecrated men and women prayed, and within ten years the openings defied occupation—they were so many. Then there was need of men and money. Prayer again turned the crisis. Gifts not for amount were never before equaled began to be consecrated, and an unparalleled number of young men and young women began to offer themselves. The women began to organize till their Boards cover the Christian Church with their net-work; and the Y. M. C. A. and its kindred organizations multiplied from one in 1844 to 900 in 1888. And now signs appear above the horizon of a period of general missionary intelligence and activity more marked than any during the last eighteen centuries. These are but a minute fraction—a fragment from the vast aggregate of testimony that the work of missions is the work of God, and the march of missions the march of God.

It will be yet three years before we reach the year which marks the complete century since the Warwick Association made the first Monday of each month a "Monthly Concert" of prayer for the world's evangelization, and that first foreign missionary society sent out William Carey to India. The church might have surpassed the world already had the faith of disciples been equal to the grandeur of God's promises. But, nevertheless, God has led, ruled, moved, swayed all through this century. He has shown his Word to be all-powerful, and his Spirit all-subduing, and his Providence all-controlling. The whole history has been his story; full of mystery because full of a mysterious God; full of power because full of an omnipotent God. This needs no argument; it needs only an open eye and an obedient heart. To our own conception it is the supreme charm of missions and the supreme argument for missions. It invests the work with an awful dignity!—Missionary Review.

How Shall We Attract the Masses to the Church?

BY CHAPLAIN C. C. M'CABE.

There is nothing easier. Get your soul on fire with the love of God. Beat every unholy ambition, every desire for the applause of the world, every feeling of envy or jealousy, over the head with the flail of prayer. Get where God can bless you with great success without spoiling you, without making you think of yourself more highly than you ought to think. When your own soul gets blessed, then go to work to lead your flock. Get a Gideon's band who will stand by you in the public congregations, in the prayer meetings, in the revival that is sure to follow; then "attempt great things for God." "Expect great things from God." When success begins to crown your efforts, get lower down than ever at the foot of the cross. "The eyes of the Lord run to and fro throughout the whole earth to show himself strong in the behalf of him whose heart is perfect towards him."

When victory comes, try to get your choir converted. Pray for your organist till he will stop all voluntaries which mean nothing, and all interludes which mean nothing. Get your whole force in hand, till from the blast of the organ at the beginning of the service to the doxology, everything shall mean assault, conquest, victory.

No trouble about congregations with such a church. Every such church succeeds in this world. You have more to fear from worldliness, and the heartlessness and forgetfulness of God that comes from it, than from all other powers of darkness combined. "The church is safe in the world till the world gets into the church, just as a ship is safe on the ocean till the ocean gets into the ship."

The wonder is, that the people go to some churches at all. I was in one lately where there was a little talk by the pastor about a revival. Sitting on a back seat, I comprehended the reason of failure at a glance. Young men were there—the members of the church passed them in the aisles without recognition. There was no cordiality, no hearty handshake and "God bless you!" The pastor himself did not set the example. Oh! what is the use of talking about a revival in such a church? There's a more cordial welcome for those young men at any one of the four gates of hell than in that church. They will be welcome at the dance, welcome at the theatre, welcome at the card-table, welcome at the rum-shop. Cordiality everywhere but in the church of God! There are churches in this land, thank God! where a young man can not show himself without a dozen cordial hand-grasps and a dozen "God bless yous!" falling on his ear.

When such cold, worldly, heartless churches have wailed out, "Why don't the people come to church?" until they die out altogether, some "little one of God will become a thousand" who has learned the lesson: "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord." Let us begin anew. Go for every sinner you see. Get them to Christ. Keep the prayer meeting hot. Make it a refuge for sinners seeking salvation. Stop your wailing! Lift the shout of victory like Jehoshaphat's army, even before the battle comes on! If you "seek, ye shall find." One million converts is none too large a harvest for twelve thousand Methodist pastors to win for Christ in the year 1889.—Zion's Herald.

The Sunday Paper.

The Sunday paper is death to spiritual and religious interests—and anyone who is sincerely desirous of living in and enjoying the higher life, and who takes and reads a Sunday paper, has only to look into his own heart and reflect upon his past spiritual condition to find abundant and sad proof of this statement. If anyone has an apology for reading a Sunday paper it is an editor. It is his business to know all that is going on in the world. But one who does it will fail as the editor of a religious paper. He will become spiritually deadened, his intellectual powers fogged and dissipated and his grip of every sort weakened—almost paralyzed. A man who does original, vigorous and—saleable, editorial work has got to put original, vigorous and attractive thought into his work—and you can not pump ozone out of an exhausted receiver, or good water out of a cistern into which a sewer empties itself. The Sunday paper is destructive of mental, moral, spiritual—and, by sympathy, of physical health. All we ask of a Christian family into which a Sunday daily goes, is to try the experiment, and determine for themselves whether we speak truly. Put it aside. Take for your Sunday reading something that relates to the eternal life. Get your thoughts clear of the clamor of business and the contamination of the crime columns, and the sensations and sports and "amusements." Get out of the hot and dusty and malarious valley, and take a breath of mountain air each Sabbath day. If you do not find that you gain immensely in vigor, in enjoyment, in faith, hope, love, confidence, serenity of mind—all that is valuable and enduring—then you may say that we are mistaken.—Interior.

With Apologies to Pope.

"Then know thyself, presume not God to scan.
The proper study of mankind is man."
Place the deft touch upon the pulsing wrist.
Or at the breast unto its throbbings list.
Note thou the crimson tide in ebb and flow.
Now quick in heat and now in languor slow.
See vigor move with its impatient stride.
Or lying falot, as swells or shirks its tide.
Consider then, the air we breathe is rife
With ill or ailment of throbbing life.
With foul or poison charged, to turn the blood
A homicous flow or an infectious flood.
But bland and mollient to the sharp distress
Is nature's breath to magnetized excess.
All purient clog and obstacle to purge,
With blessings come—with weaknesses emerge,
Sweet, transient, guest, the lungs one moment hold,
To bring a glow depart with choking cold.
To urge new vig'r thrill with rare content,
Gracious, to curing, curing ailment.
Revive the weak with animation warm,
Treatment by inhalation acts a charm.

Peculiar

To itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Peculiar in its phenomenal record of sales abroad, no other preparation has ever attained such popularity in so short a time. Do not be induced to take any other preparation. Be sure to get

From a Prominent Minister.

I am fifty-five years of age.

Half of my life I have been a sufferer from a disordered liver, and the last three years a victim of that dread disease, consumption; was reduced to eighty-seven pounds, a mere skeleton, helpless, pronounced beyond recovery by my physicians, and given up to die by friends. In order to gratify my loving wife, I began taking Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, which is a cure for consumption, and to-day I am healthy, and able to indulge myself in preaching the gospel from the sacred desk. REV. T. FIGH.

Cor. Pine and Crockett Sts.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, July 12, 1888.

Dr. R. M. Davis, County Line, Miss., reports having cured a cancer of long standing that years of the most skillful medical practice had failed to benefit at all. Besides, we have numerous assurances of cures effected in Asthma, Bilious Colic, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Diphtheria, and Malarial Fever.

Rev. W. A. Mason, pastor of the Baptist Church, Crystal Springs, Miss., writes under date of July 2nd:

At your request, I will say that for about eight years I have been suffering with a sore on the back of my neck which was caused by the rubbing of a mole by my shirt collar. It gradually spread till larger than a quarter-dollar. About six weeks ago, I commenced the use of Microbe Killer. From the very beginning I felt an improvement, and it has gone on steadily till now; though I have been very irregular in taking the remedy. I am satisfied that directions closely followed would effect a speedy permanent cure. W. A. MASON.

I gladly testify that, after suffering with a severe case of malarial fever, I tried Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, and am now perfectly well. I strongly recommend it to suffering humanity.

To Whom It May Concern:

This is to certify that after taking one jug of Microbe Killer I was permanently cured of a severe attack of bronchitis and pulmonary inflammation, said illness having resisted all methods of medical treatment.

I cheerfully recommend Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer as being more than is claimed for it. HENRY V. MIELLY,

MASON & HAMLIN

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequaled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. One hundred styles from $22 to $900 or more. Illustrated catalogues free.

ORGANS $22 TO $900.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved GRAND & UPRIGHT by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "MASON & HAMLIN PIANO STRINGER," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity for standing in tune, and other important advantages.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 17, 1889.

Brief.

Have you, brother preacher, called the attention of your congregation to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE as one of the best helps to a Christian life during this year of grace?

Zion's Herald asserts that one of the prosperous papers of the Methodist Episcopal Church pays for contributions each week the sum of $1,600. Is it any wonder it is one of their best? Isn't it a greater wonder that the Southern Methodist papers do so well and pay scarcely anything for contributors?

The late election in Boston resulted in favor of the license system. It goes into effect May 1. Under its provisions there can be only one license to every five hundred people. This will allow Boston 780 saloons. There are now 2,630 saloons. That looks almost like a wholesale clearing out of the whisky business. It is, at least, a good step in that good direction.

Last week the dispatches stated that an unknown Methodist minister had been brutally treated at Springfield, La., by a party of young hoodlums. It is stated that he was a missionary of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was preaching to the negroes, when he was taken out and beat about the head, stripped and switched terribly on the bare back, and then chased into the river! Such an outrage is simply an act of barbarism, and deserves and has the censure of every decent citizen, and the perpetrators can not be too severely punished, nor too swiftly.

The Panama Canal has been the occasion of a good strong resolution of warning to France passed by the United States Senate a few days ago. As long as the scheme was confined to individuals and corporations, there was nothing to be said; but when it looked like the French republic was about to take a hand in the matter, then there came the warning, "Hands off!" The Monroe doctrine must be enunciated anew, and we again put it on record that "America is for Americans," and there must be no interméddling in American affairs by European governments. So we presume that will settle the question of France taking control of the Panama Canal; at least, during the existence of the present French ministry.

A convention of former citizens of Southern States now residing in Louisiana has been called by George Moorman, the president of the State Immigration Association, to meet in Ruston, La., February 18. The object of the convention is "to obtain from the delegates assembled their personal experiences during their residences in this State, which information is to be supplemented by data and statistics regarding the products and resources of the different parishes in Louisiana. This is to be published in pamphlet-form and sent back to their former homes, to be distributed among their relatives, friends and others." This is a good move, and will undoubtedly work good for our State. We trust that every parish will send its full complement of delegates. We know that Ruston will entertain them with a profuse and elegant hospitality.

Thoughts on Preaching.

The theory of our church in regard to preaching seems to preclude the possibility of poor preaching. The theory is, that men are called of God to the office of the ministry and qualified by the Holy Spirit to perform the functions of that office. The great work of the ministry is to preach the gospel. The Savior said: "As ye go, preach." His last word to the church was: "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." We say that men are commissioned by the Lord and qualified by the Holy Spirit to do this very thing. How, then, can there be a failure? Notwithstanding the theory, which we all believe to be true, there are many sensible people who are perfectly certain that they hear quite a number of poor sermons! How shall we reconcile these opposites? Shall we jump to the conclusion that the man who preaches a poor sermon has made a mistake as to his vocation? that he has not been called of God nor qualified by the Spirit? We have known persons to make that jump, and say they believe "the brother has answered somebody else's call." But such a judgment, if universally accepted, would more than decimate the ministry; for where is the preacher who has not often failed to do good preaching? So we are not prepared to go to that extreme which says, when we hear a poor sermon: "The brother has mistaken his calling."

Those persons who jump to the conclusion that a preacher who fails to preach good sermons is out of his sphere of life seem to have taken it for granted that all that is necessary to constitute a successful preacher is the call of God and the qualification by the Holy Spirit. We doubt if they understood either of these necessary things; and if they did, still those two are not enough. They are simply God's parts of the work. Has not the preacher something to do in the matter of his own qualification? A man may, by his own act, nullify the call of God and turn the qualification of the Spirit into a positive disqualification! It is as true in the pulpit work, as it is in the development of private Christian life, that "we are workers together with him." The Bible says that men are sinners and occupy the position of "enmity against God," and that the gospel is the remedy for sin, and a power to enable the sinner to move away from his position of enmity. Then, successful preaching is such a proclamation of the gospel as will exert an influence upon the sinner to induce him to accept the remedy and yield to that power. What the preacher needs, besides the call and qualification by the Spirit, is, to get hold of that influence—that power to move men to act.

Here, perhaps, we come upon the main cause of pulpit failures. How is it in other lines of work? Our observation is this: The invariable rule obtaining in every avocation is, that the influential men—the men who move others to act—are those who do deep and broad thinking along the lines pertaining to their work, and then present to others those deep and broad thoughts in the simplest language. The leading statesman is the man who has thought deeply and can speak clearly upon the great problems of government. The leading politician is he who studies thoroughly and explains lucidly the principles of his party. There is no other way to move men than by deep and earnest thinking and lucid proclamations of the results of that thinking. The pulpit is no exception. The preacher is called to be a leader. His vocation is to lead the people to salvation. No matter how deeply he may be convinced of his call from God, no matter how sure he may be of his possession of the Holy Spirit, he can not lead men to Christ unless he thinks earnestly and deeply upon the principles on which the scheme of redemption is built, and upon the great themes of the gospel, and then presents the results of his studies in "words easy to be understood." Just as much as any other leader of men, the preacher needs to be a thinker, and, like other leaders, he must present his thoughts in language at once clear and forcible. Deep thinking and clear presentations of thought are the preacher's parts of the work; and they are the complements of God's parts of the same work. They are necessary to give efficiency to the call of God and qualification by the Spirit. It is consummate folly for a man to rely solely upon his call to preach, and his possession of the Spirit, for effectiveness in his pulpit ministrations. That is a "hard-shell" superstition. Rightly understood, the call to preach includes a faithful and diligent study of the Word to be preached.

Trying to Stop.

We once knew a minister who, when remonstrated with by a clever steward on account of his long preaching, declared that he did not know that he preached long sermons. He said he would be willing to stop at the required length, if he could by any means know when he reached it. The steward agreed to inform him by holding his hand above his head in a careless way that would not attract attention. The compact being entered into, the sermons thereafter did not exceed the length required by the taste and judgment of that steward.

But we preachers are sometimes convinced that the time has come to quit, and yet we can't quite quit to suit us. The process of winding up a sermon is sometimes not unlike trying to land a steamboat. The pilot sounds the whistle to give notice that the landing is in sight, and everybody is immediately in expectation. Then the bell rings to stop one wheel, and the boat turns her bow to shore. Then the bell rings again, and the other wheel ceases its revolutions. Just then a breeze "strikes the boat by the head," and she turns toward the middle of the stream. Then the bells ring again, and the wheels begin a counter-motion—one going forward, the other backward; and, in obedience to these opposite influences, the steamer begins a sort of gyratory movement in mid-stream, and between the breeze and the bells and the wheels and the orders of the commander, the passengers begin to think that the boat is struggling in the swirl of a small cyclone, and will not, after all, make the landing. This process is sometimes repeated by us preachers. "Farmton" contributes his observations on this point to a late number of the Advance. He says:

Last night I heard a sermon from my friend, Dr. S——. The first half was strong in thought, earnest in delivery, easily securing and keeping the attention of the audience. In the third-quarter the intellectual grip of the speaker was lessened, and the audience became somewhat restless. In the fourth-quarter the emotional power waned, and during the concluding paragraphs I noticed that he was looking for a good stopping-place. I am aware that a great many speakers are frequently lient upon the same voyage of discovery. They find it difficult to land. It is easy to distinguish in some speeches the exact sentence where the speaker has finished what he had to say, and is hunting around for a place to end. Whateley has some good advice to offer to such elocutionary wanderers. It is with speech as with fishing or sailing: it is more difficult to land the trout than to hook him, more difficult to bring the ship into port than to sail her across the ocean. Some one has told me a story which illustrates this difficulty. I am not sure of its truthfulness, but true or not true, it illustrates the point. The elder Tyng was president of a meeting which his son, who bears the same name, was addressing. The father, seeing that his son was trying to close the address in a fitting way, whispered to him, "Sam, do stop." The son whispered back, "Father, I am trying to."

Gen. Harrison's Cabinet.

Ever since Gen. Harrison was elected the politicians and newspapers have been "making up" his Cabinet. Gen. Harrison himself has said, or even intimated, very little as yet on the subject. If he follows the lead of his illustrious grandfather, he will select the best statesmen of his party; and we hope he will follow in that lead. The Democratic papers, as well as the Republican papers, South, have made a wise suggestion, to the effect that the great and growing South ought, in this Republican administration, to have a representative of the very first ability in the Cabinet. We believe that nearly all the newspapers in this city, the Supreme judges, many leading members of the bar and mercantile firms and industrial associations have recommended Hon. J. R. G. Pitkin for a place in the Cabinet. Mr. Pitkin is fortunate in having the endorsement of such a large number of our citizens, irrespective of party, and the recommendation of our daily Press. By them he is spoken of as a man in every way qualified for the position, and one who will be an honor to our section, and contribute largely to a solution of the serious problems that now confront us. He is said to be a fine scholar, well versed in the science of government, and an eloquent speaker. These things being so, Gen. Harrison, if he desires to do justice to our section, can well afford to give Mr. Pitkin a prominent place among his advisers.

The Great Storm.

On January 9 a most destructive storm raged with great violence through West Virginia, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa. It seems to have been severest in parts of Pennsylvania. Reading and Pittsburg suffered terribly in loss of life and property. In Reading nearly 100 persons were killed and many seriously injured. In Pittsburg thirty or forty are reported killed and a number of others wounded. Many of the killed were the heads of families and, as a consequence, those families have been left in a state bordering on destitution. The citizens of those places visited by the storm have come up nobly in supplying the immediate necessities of the suffering. Some heart-rending scenes have been described in the dispatches. The catastrophe is the most appalling which has visited any part of the country for years. At Niagara the suspension bridge nearest the falls was carried away and deposited in the river. The loss is said to be $750,000. The original cost of the bridge was $400,000, and fully half that amount has been expended upon it since its erection. At Brooklyn the roof of the main barracks of the Navy Yard was blown off. In West Virginia and Ohio many casualties are reported, resulting in an immense loss of property. Through Michigan, Wisconsin and Iowa the storm raged with unwonted violence, and great destruction was left in its path every where.

From Jackson, La.

We are setting out on the new year with hopeful prospects. A dozen new students the first week after the holidays, and eight applicants for membership in the church (five of them students) the first Sunday of the year, are encouraging signs for the college and the church. Our church building has been recently repaired and beautified without and within, while an expenditure of five hundred dollars on old Centenary has brightened her countenance considerably. The moral tone among the students is very fine. Almost all of them belong to the Young Men's Christian Association; and it would do any Christian good to hear us read the Bible in alternate verses before morning and evening prayers. The boys are, I think, learning to study, which is the highest attainment in scholarship. A whole-souled man from Mississippi, who brought his son down to the college a few days ago, went away in ecstacies over the cordial religious spirit of the young men of Centenary. I believe he almost wished he could stay and be one of them.

By the way, I find by examining into the matter that more than two-thirds of the students we have, who are not residents of this place or its vicinity, come from places north of this—some from more than two hundred miles, almost directly northward; and that this has been the case for the last fifteen years. So the facts show that Dr. Marshall was utterly mistaken in his sweeping statement that people will never send ten miles southward to a college. Give us the endowment we ask for, and we will offer attractions that will draw students from the northward as well as from the southward. Call on your presiding elder, and sign an endowment note.

As we begin the work of the new year, we are reminded of the barren fig tree: "Let it alone another year; then, if it bear not fruit, cut it down." What an overwhelming thought, that a man may be cumbering the ground, occupying God's space, breathing God's air, enjoying God's sunshine, planted in the vineyard of God's love, nourished by his Word and Spirit, and kept out of the fiery burning by the sacrifice of his Son, and yet be fruitless! God requires fruit. The penalty of fruitlessness is death, and respite is granted to the fruitless only in the hope of improvement and fruit-bearing. The circularity of motion, the revolving year, and the repetition of daily duties, save us from everlasting novelty, and make it possible for us to grow better by experience. Let us break bad habits and do those things better which we have so often done amiss. Oh, for "fruit unto holiness!"

"Christian Womanhood."

Dr. W. C. Black has done the church and the nation a good service in writing this book. It is emphatically a book for the times. It is on a live subject, and its author is a live, wide-awake man. He writes like a man who had studied his subject, knew what he wanted to say, and how to say it, and knew how to stop when he had finished.

The Doctor has so nicely rounded the corners of controversy that extremists, on the one side, will feel that he went just a little too far, while those on the other side will feel that he did not go quite far enough; hence the book is bold and strong, but conservative withal. We thank Dr. Black for his exposition of certain texts of Scripture in which woman's place in the church is defined. He has reconciled Paul with himself on this subject. A man who studies the Bible, and then follows its teaching, as Dr. Black has done, will be likely to find the truth. We commend "Christian Womanhood" most heartily. It ought to have a wide circulation, North and South, East and West.

Some Corrections.

MR. EDITOR: In my article, "A Mississippi Methodist College," appearing on page 1 of the ADVOCATE, of January 3, are some errors, the responsibility for which must be divided between the printer and myself, I suppose. Instead of ten resolutions adopted, there were only two; and instead of reading, "The first effort of the funds of the enterprise," we should read, "The first effort of the friends of the enterprise." The name of that big-hearted, devout Methodist, Maj. R. W. Millsaps, was omitted from the committee. This name should have appeared first among the laymen. The enterprise is dear to his heart. The name of J. B. Streater was substituted for Hon. W. H. Sims after I had left the North Mississippi Conference. Please give place to these corrections.

T. L. MELLEN.

The above should have appeared a week ago, but was detained somewhere in the mails. After looking over the previous copy, we hardly think the printer is responsible for the mistakes made.—EDITOR.

Notes.

The Times-Democrat had recently, as it is wont, an ungracious fling at the clergy of all denominations in this city, because so few of them had taken up collections in aid of the family of James Givens, who lost his life on the steamer Hanna. Once or twice a year, maybe, the T.-D. heads a subscription for the benefit of some poor family bereft of its head. That is good. The Methodists in this city and everywhere else make it a business to raise money every year for widows and orphans. Every year in this city more than a thousand dollars are raised by us for this purpose. Give the devil his due, neighbor.

Dr. John E. Edwards, in a letter to the Raleigh Christian Advocate, writes this significant paragraph:

Randolph-Macon College has about sixty students studying for the ministry. A large number of these young men are assisted by an association, lately organized in the Virginia Conference, having for its object the raising of funds to assist such students as are not able to defray the expenses incident to college life. Is it not a curious fact that but few—very few young men studying for the ministry are able to pay their way at college? Are none of the well-to-do young men, who are in the church, called to the ministry? It is a fact, account for it as we may, that a very large proportion of the young men seeking an education for the ministry are absolutely dependent for aid in meeting their necessary expenses at college. Why is it? How is it to be accounted for? Does God never or but rarely call the rich to preach?

There are some things that need to be continually looked after. Reading the other day of the proceedings of our School Board in this city, we were alarmed at a statement in regard to some of our school-houses. The chairman of the Third District Committee, Dr. Howe, said: "Many of the school-houses of the district are of wood, and particular attention is called to the exposure from fire in certain schools. In the event of a fire the confusion and limited means of escape would result in a terrible loss of life." He mentioned five schools, averaging nearly 400 pupils apiece, provided with no means of escape from fire except by the stairs; and some of the stairs are on the outside of the building. This is a state of things that calls for immediate remedy. It will be too late after 300 or 400 children have been burnt to death!

The French government has gone to an extreme in secularizing the public schools. When we remember that the religious influence exerted in the schools was only the sectarianism of the Roman Catholic Church, we see that this secularization is simply the reaction of the public mind in France from subjection to that church. It becomes, then, not so much a rejection of religious education as such, but a rejection of that which has been imposed upon it; and, rather than submit to such domination any longer, it is thought better to have no religious instructions at all. This certainly looks like a strong testimony to the failure of Romanizing schools. In this country, according to the Catholic Review, there are many Romanists more in sympathy with the public schools than with their own schools, and we daresay for the reason that the public school lays a better foundation for the work of life than is possible with Romish methods.

Personals.

We have received a note from Rev. T. W. Fleming, in answer to Bro. Mellen's "Warning," published in last week's ADVOCATE. Mr. Fleming states that he did use Bro. Mellen's name "as a voucher, because he thought there would be no harm in it." He says: "If I have disgraced Mr. Mellen by using his name, I am sorry for it." Mr. Fleming says he is endorsed by sixteen or seventeen different Conferences, that he has used all the leading churches in Mississippi, and he refers to quite a number of distinguished men in the West; and among those in Mississippi, Rev. E. F. Edgar, Rev. T. L. Kendall, Rev. W. S. Terrell. We think it is due Mr. Fleming to state these things to the public.

The National House of Representatives presented last week the singular spectacle of "one lone man" effectually putting a stop to all business. He seems to have taken a special pleasure in showing the House its "hopeless helplessness." Those are queer rules that will enable one man to stop the legislation of a great nation like ours.

We had a pleasant visit, last Monday, from Bishop Beebe, of the Colored Methodist Church in America. He had just held the Mississippi Conference, and represents the work as growing and the prospects as hopeful. He will return in a few weeks to look after some matters in this city pertaining to the welfare of his church, and we hope all our people will give him what aid they can.

The brethren must be sure, when sending new subscribers, to state to what Conference they belong. The publisher will need that information in order to distribute the $2,000 pro rata among the three Conferences for their claimants. The year has begun auspiciously. Let the brethren take hold and push the canvass vigorously. In working for the ADVOCATE you are working for all the interests of the church, and especially for the widows and orphans and superannuated preachers.

The Magnolia Gazette, of Magnolia, Miss., has this about our new pastor on that work:

Rev. B. S. Raynor and family have arrived and are now occupying the Gatlin residence near the Methodist Church. On Monday night, last, about twenty ladies and gentlemen called upon the good man, and without any provocation whatever gave him a genuine good pounding.

Ruston Caligraph:

Rev. T. K. Faunt LeRoy, the new pastor of the Methodist Church of this place, arrived with his family from Baton Rouge last Friday evening, and at once entered upon the discharge of his work as pastor of the church. He preached last Sunday to a reasonably good congregation considering the inclemency of the weather.

This, from the Water Valley Progress, tells the whereabouts of another one of our popular pastors:

Mr. J. M. Wyatt and family, of Winona, have arrived and are located at the Methodist parsonage. Mr. Wyatt preached his first sermon to a fair congregation on last Sunday, and made a more than favorable impression. We are glad to have them with us, and hope their stay will be equally pleasant and profitable both to the church and themselves.

The Baton Rouge Advocate, January 7, says:

Rev. J. A. Parker preached his first sermon at the Methodist Church in this city yesterday. It was communion Sunday, and his audience, which was a large one, was deeply interested and highly pleased with their new minister. His subject was thoroughly studied, and his sermon well prepared. He has already won the hearts of many of his flock.

We call the attention of the secretaries of the Annual Conference Mission Boards to the notice of Dr. John, the secretary of the Board of Missions, published in another column.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. J. W. Ellison writes from Harlow, Copiah county, Miss: "On January 2, in company with Bro. J. W. Newton, a genial gentleman and faithful steward, I, with my family, left Hazlehurst for a journey of eighteen miles to the parsonage, where we met quite a number of ladies and gentlemen who, with happy hearts and sunny faces, had assembled for the purpose of giving their new pastor and his family a hearty welcome and happy greeting. Deft hands and kind hearts had arranged both table and board with a bounty that bespoke loyalty to church and liberal things for their pastor this year. This is a new thing for Bowerton circuit. Other pastors have served the work from some point on the railroad or by boarding in their midst. While it is far from the railroad, and cut off from the conveniences and comforts of town life, these good people intend to change their parsonage and grounds, and so furnish it as to vie with communities having their parsonage in town; and with liberal purse they will make it inviting to anyone who may be appointed to this field of labor. The parsonage is near the church, called Rehoboth, so that the preacher's family can attend church and Sunday-school. For the present the postoffice is two miles away. With a live church and a people who take special delight in caring for the preacher and his family, as their 'servants for Christ's sake,' unless sickness should come, we expect a delightful year with this good people, who have already shown us much love and tender respect. I was at my post and preached two sermons in the old year, and, from all that can be seen now, have a hopeful outlook for the year. In this country work we have, I believe, four live Wesleyan Aid Societies, and several ladies' foreign missionary societies, and, with a diligent Board of Stewards, and diligence on my part in the collections ordered by the Conference, I hope to make a good report next Conference."

—Rev. I. L. Peebles writes from Brandon, Miss: "I have seen glowing accounts from some of the brethren of the cordial receptions which were given to them by the good people of their new charges, and wondered and, in fact, endeavored to imagine just how they felt at such times, without ever having had the pleasure of knowing at all from experience, until we were assigned to this place by the Bishop at the last session of our Conference. When we arrived at the depot, on Monday morning, December 23, we were met and conveyed thence, free of charge, one mile to the parsonage, where we met some of the good sisters who had the parsonage in order and a nice breakfast awaiting us. After breakfast was over, we assembled them round a good fire, which a kind brother had made in the parlor, read a Psalm, kneeled down and praised God for his unspeakable goodness and invoked a continuation of his blessings upon us. After prayer, the ladies gave expressions of welcome and left us in full possession of the parsonage. Of course, we proceeded at once to apprehend our environments, and very soon found some supplies for the larder, and also that a good brother had supplied us with some wood and pine. But the best of all is, these good people have not bidden us a final farewell and left us completely to ourselves to wonder what we have done, or failed to do, to merit such a sudden and continuous breach of attention, but are eternizing their thoughtfulness and goodness, not only by visiting us, but by sending us remembrances ever and anon. One of my brethren here—a judge, by the way—has paid for a letter-box at the postoffice for me for twelve months and has given me charge of the key. My stewards have held a meeting, made my assessment, and pay me monthly. Our first Quarterly Conference has been held and we are moving off well in every respect. Our presiding elder was on time, in the health and spirits. Pray for us daily."

—Rev. H. Armstrong writes from Delhi, La.: "As you are aware, Delhi and Floyd were separated at the last session of our Conference, and I was appointed to Delhi, which necessitated a short move. On January 1, the move was made through the rain; but, notwithstanding this, the reception was so cordial, and the pounding so liberal; the cold, wet and muddy afternoon was a very pleasant one. We occupy the district parsonage, and soon after our arrival the boxes and packages, large and small, began to pour in. The dear children purchased and sent us a couple of elegant rocking-chairs. Such tokens of appreciation produce within us profound gratitude to God, for the love of his Son which dwells within the hearts of his people."

—President Hunnicutt, of Centenary College, writes January 7: "We have had ten new students in the last week, and seven students applied for membership in the church last Sunday."

—Charles E. Decker writes from Jackson, La., January 7: "In behalf of the committee who examined the trunk of the Rev. J. V. Penn, I wish to state that we found no money; simply the college notes. These I think were all correct. Please make this known through the columns of the ADVOCATE, as in your last issue it seems that you have been misinformed."

—Rev. W. E. Ballard writes from Natchez, Miss., January 11: "I will do all I can for the ADVOCATE this year. The outlook for Jefferson Street Church is hopeful. Our young Bro. Lewis at Wesley Chapel is making a fine impression on his people."

—Rev. J. H. Evans writes from Franklinton, La., January 10, 1889: "We are at home in the neat little parsonage in the town of Franklinton, Washington parish, La., after a move of 155 miles by railroad to Osyka; then to this neat little town by private conveyance—a distance of twenty-four miles. We arrived here about four o'clock, tired and weary, with sad hearts and tearful eyes; but these were soon removed by the warm reception we received from the brothers and sisters and friends of the town. We found everything that was needful for man and horse. To crown the whole, they had prepared a supper that was so delicious as to make the hearts of the weary preacher and tired wife and daughters rejoice and exclaim: 'Bless the Lord, oh! my soul, and forget not all his benefits.' The nice parsonage, the warm fire, the pleasant faces made us feel, even in the midst of strangers, that God had a people, yea, a gracious people, and kind, in the town of Franklinton."

BOOKS.

THE MENAGERIE. Collected and arranged by Rev. Dr. O. P. Fitzgerald, editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate. Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Price $1.

This is a book of beasts, birds and adventure for live boys of all ages and others. The book is composed of stories of adventure and facts and incidents of natural history, and furnishes pleasant reading and useful information. We commend it to all the boy-readers of the ADVOCATE.

FAMOUS WOMEN OF THE OLD TESTAMENT. By Rev. M. B. Wharton, D. D. E. B. Treat, publisher, 771 Broadway, New York. Price $1 75.

The table of contents contains the names of the principal women of the Old Testament history, beginning with Eve and ending with Esther. The varied qualities, work and offices of women are admirably described in this book. The beauty, intellect, power and influence of the sex in the role of maidens, wives, and mothers, are depicted by one who is a keen observer of human nature, who has enjoyed special opportunities, by travel and position, to see society in all its phases, who has wielded a facile pen in portraying what he has seen and learned, and has used it in the illustration of these lectures. The book abounds in startling incidents and rich illustrations, and, as a whole, is a beautiful portraiture of true religion as inculcated and illustrated by the saintly women of biblical times.

PERIODICALS.

—Cassell's Family Magazine, for January, has much good reading for the family circle. Its record of useful inventions is a feature that commends it to many households. It is published by Cassell and Company, New York, at the low price, $1 50, and is well worth more.

—Fashion and Fancy. The January number is on hand, and, as far as we understand the "fashions" and "fancy work," we judge that this new monthly will be appreciated by the ladies. The fashion plates in this number are many and very fine. The reading matter seems to be good. Published monthly by Mrs. B. K. Walker and Miss Heartwell-Magrath, St. Louis, Mo. Price $3.

—St. Nicholas, for January, has an inimitable table of contents, leading off with the laughable poem of the Pygmy Fleet, by Tudor Jenks, and illustrated by Birch, and winding up with the Bunny Stories, by John H. Jewett, illustrated by Barnes. Between the two are choice articles in prose and poetry suitable to the capacities of the young. Century Company, New York. Price $3.

—The January Century is full from cover to cover. Among so many papers of excellence it is hard to discriminate, but we know many readers will enjoy the Old Italian Masters, by W. J. Stillman; Pagan Ireland, by Charles de Kay; The Life of Administrative Exiles, by George Kennan; A Perverted Franchise, by A. C. Gordon; Round About Galilee, by E. L. Wilson; Pictures of the Far West; and The West Point of the Confederacy, by John S. Wise. Topics of the Time, by the editor, and Open Letters conclude a valuable number of this monthly. Century Company, New York. Price $4.

—The Report of the New York Sabbath Committee, for 1887-1888. This is an interesting document showing the work done in the interest of the Sabbath, not only in this country, but abroad. Much information on this subject may be had from this little pamphlet. 31 Bible House, New York.

—The Peloubet Series of Sunday-school Quarterlies for the first quarter of the new year have been received. In the main, these are excellent helps for the study of the Sunday-school lessons, the author being quite a popular commentator on the New Testament; but we advise all our people to use our own publications prepared by Dr. Cunnyngham, at Nashville. They are the best for us. The Peloubet Series is published by W. A. Wilde and Company, Boston.

—The Magazine of Art, for January, has engravings and photogravures of great merit and reading matter of much interest. Salisbury Hall and Expression in Drapery being the principal articles. This magazine is published by Cassell and Company, New York. Price $3 50.

Death of Rev. C. T. French.

MR. EDITOR: Rev. Charles T. French, for more than twenty years a useful and highly esteemed member of the Mississippi Conference, but for several years past local, died at his residence in this county (Claiborne) on the eleventh instant. His illness was brief. After the abundant labors of a ministry of more than forty-five years, he has entered into rest.

Yesterday evening, amid the deep regrets of a large concourse of friends and neighbors, he was laid away in the grave.

Yours truly,

E. H. MOENGER.

10,000!

Ten Thousand Subscribers is what the Publisher and friends of the ADVOCATE ask for.

Ten Thousand Subscribers is the number that all say the paper should have in the bounds of the three Conferences. How can we secure the requisite number to make up the 10,000? If each subscriber will send in one new subscriber; we will have more than enough to make the 10,000. If each preacher will send in ten new subscribers, it will give the ADVOCATE over 10,000.

THE PUBLISHER'S PROPOSITION.

Brethren and friends, if you will give the ADVOCATE a subscription list of 10,000, I will give $2,000 to the superannuated preachers, widows and orphans' fund, to be divided among the three Conferences, pro rata, in proportion to the number of new subscribers sent in from each Conference.

My object in asking for the ADVOCATE'S increased circulation is to enlarge its field of usefulness and increase its power for good in this part of our Zion.

LINENGS.

BY MAY RILEY SMITH.

Nay, nay, dear child, I can not let you slight
Those inner stitches on your gown's fair hem.
Because, you say, they will be out of sight,
And no stern critic will discover them.

You do but build a most inviting hedge,
Behind which falsehood and deceit may lurk,
When you embroider fair the outer edge,
And to the inner give no honest work.

The silken cloth of habit which you wear
So lightly now upon your careless youth
Will strengthen strand by strand; then have a care!
Else it may throttle the sweet soul of truth.

I hold that every stitch untruly set
Weaves a soiled thread along your web of fate;
And each deceitful seam may prove a net
To hurt and hinder, trust me, soon or late.

Ah, dearest child, on everything you do
Let the white seal of honor stamp its grace.
Keep all your soul as clean with heaven's dew
As the pink flower of your tender face.

God makes no clumsy linings. Mark this bloom!
A "fairy's glove;" and though it grieves my heart
To send the smallest blossom to its tomb,
We'll tear the dainty little glove apart.

In this and every flower that we behold,
From crimson robe to pansy's purple vest,
God sews the velvet on the inner fold,
And makes his linings fairer than the rest.

Is it not perfect, from the slender stem
To the brown dapples on the curling rim?
God folds not carelessly the foxglove's hem;
Then try, my little child, to be like him.

MR. EDITOR: I want to tell you about my pet cat. She is the very best mouser I ever saw, and rarely ever fails to catch one or two mice every day, often bringing in a large rat. If she happens to come in after we have gone to sleep she will mew and mew, trying to wake us up, and if she fails in this, she will jump up on the bed and rub her feet and tail in our faces until she rouses us up, and then jumps down and gets the rat and waits with it until we get a light and praise her for being a smart kitty. I am a small boy and sleep too soundly for her to wake me up, so she hides it till next morning for me to see. Several times she has hid it behind me on the bed, and as soon as I wake she gets it and brings it to me. She is never satisfied to eat her mice or rats until we have seen them and told her she was a smart, pretty kitty. When papa whistles she will jump up in his lap and try to catch his mouth. I expect she thinks it is a bird. Papa says it is the greatest compliment he ever had paid to his musical powers. She once raised a little chicken, or, at least, let it sleep with herself and kittens at night. An old hen came off her nest in the hottest part of summer and left one egg, and as it was cold when we found it, we did not think it would hatch; but the sun hatched it and when we found it, it was a fine healthy little fellow. Its mother would not have it without whipping it all the time, so I took it to raise for a pet. I forgot to put it to bed the first night after it was large enough to run around. The next morning I found it cuddled up with the cats, where it continued to sleep, the mamma cat seeming quite fond of it. My cat does a good many smart tricks besides, so we are all very fond of her; and as my papa is a preacher, I'm afraid we will have to move. Papa says we can take her with us. Some one told us it was bad luck to move a cat; but papa don't think so, and I don't think it can be to move so good a cat. Do you, Mr. Editor? With best wishes, I am,

Your little friend,

I. W. COOPER, JR.

MR. EDITOR: I have never written to the ADVOCATE, so I thought I would write. We have a nice Sunday-school here. Mr. I. S. Turner is my teacher, and I love him very much. We have preaching once a month in the Methodist Church. My papa is pastor here. All of our family are members of the church, except my youngest sister. I have three sisters and two brothers. My aunt, Mrs. Gipson, came to see us and spent two weeks with us. She has been in California twelve years. I never did see her before. We were so glad to see her. I will close by asking a question: What man mentioned in the Bible had six fingers on each hand and six toes on each foot? Your little friend,

MABEL LANGFORD.

Vossburg, Mississippi.

"Mamma," said a little girl, at the table the other day, "guess what a lady said about you at Sallie's party last night." "What was it, dear?" "She said you were the sweetest little girl's mamma in Washington."

A Boy Sheriff.

I was going down town one morning, and, passing through one of the side streets, I saw a group of boys. It was just before the school hour and the crowd increased very rapidly. As soon as I got near, I saw two of the boys standing face to face with doubled fists. I knew the nature of the attraction. As I came nearer, I turned to one side, and just then one of those doubled-fisted boys looked up and said—

"Say, Mister, won't you make him give me my whip?"

I then saw that the other boy had behind him a toy whip. I have given good advice to boys, sometimes, and I have received it as a boy; and I have had experience in both capacities of the futility of offering good advice, and I was not inclined to meddle with this question, because I knew, however wisely I might decide, they would laugh at me and go at it again. But, seeing that the others looked on with interest, I stopped and said—

"Well, boys, you have got into a difficulty, and want me to settle it for you?"

"Yes," they replied.

"Well, now," I said, "if you want to settle your trouble as men settle it, I will help you; but, if you want to settle it as boys do, I don't see any way but to fight it out. If, however, you want me to help you settle it, you must promise to do as I say; and I will decide as fairly as I can."

After some hesitation they promised, though they were both afraid that I would decide for the other boy. I knew that that wasn't enough; for I have received promises as a boy, and I have made them, sometimes. I, therefore, continued:

"Well, boys, when men settle a difficulty, if it is a serious controversy like this, they have a judge, and I understand you have asked me to be the judge; but they also have a sheriff, and I want a sheriff." I then picked out a big boy, with a good-natured face, and said—

"Will you be sheriff in this controversy?"

"Yes," he replied.

"Then," said I, "whichever way the judge decides, you are to make them obey. I have chosen you because I think you are a good-natured boy, and I don't think you would do anything cruel or wicked; but whatever I decide, you must make the boys obey. Don't you let them off, no matter if you have to go after them."

"Yes," said he, "I will do it, I will make them obey."

Then I asked their story. They both wanted to tell it at once; but I finally got it out, and found that by simply compelling them to tell it in the right way showed the boys the justice of it. The boy who claimed the whip made it. Some other boys threw it into the next yard, and the other boy found it. The affair settled itself as soon as they came to understand the facts; but this would not have settled it, if I hadn't had that sheriff. I said to the boy who had the whip:

"You must give it up."

He looked at me, he looked at the other boy, then he looked at the sheriff; and then—he gave it up.—Justin Abbott.

A Wonderful Food and Medicine, Known and used by Physicians all over the world. Scott's Emulsion not only gives flesh and strength by virtue of its own nutritious properties, but creates an appetite for food and thus builds up the wasted body. OUR MOTHER'S APRON STRINGS.

BY W. H. M'ELROY.

What's longer than Art when Art's at her longest?
What's stronger than oak when oak's at its strongest?
What in all the wide world, whate'er may befide,
Is longer and stronger than all else beside?

Pray read me the riddle, or make your surmise.
But low, as I speak how you talk with your eyes;
Naught's longer or stronger, you tell one another,
Than the strings of the apron that's worn by our mother!

They are longer than Art, for knowledge shall fail,
But Love shall abide, though the planets grow pale;
And Love, who as school boys together here tarrings,
Is the twister that twisted these wonderful strings!

There's a great flowing girdle which Puck in his mirth
Let's loose when he'd lasso the swift-bounding Earth,
But the strings of this apron, which bound us entwine,
Have a length quite eclipsing this much-vaunted line.

They are strong as they're long; lo! the oak will decay,
Or the woodman you pray to, to spare it says—nay;
Other strings will unravel, will break or will fray,
Will snap or at best will in time wear away.

The anchor chain rusts, the sea cable parts,
E'en the bond has been burst that encircles twin hearts,
But the strings of this apron the years have defied,
They hold us more firmly each day they are tied!

Politeness at Home.

Should an acquaintance tread on your dress, your very best, and by accident tear it, how profuse you are with your "never mind—don't think of it—I don't care at all." If a husband does it, he gets a frown; if a child, he is chastised.

Ah! these are little things, say you? They tell mightily on the heart, let me assure you, little as they are.

A gentlemen stops at a friend's house, and finds it in confusion. "He don't see anything to apologize for—never thinks of such matters—everything is all right—cold supper—cold room—crying children—perfectly comfortable."

Goes home, his wife has been taking care of the sick ones, and worked her life almost out. "Don't see why things can't be kept in better order—there never were such cross children before." No apologies except away from home.

Why not be polite at home? Why not use freely the golden coin of courtesy? How sweet they sound, those little words, "I thank you," or "You are very kind." Doubly, yes, thrice sweet from the lips we love, when heart smiles make the eye sparkle with the clear light of affection.

Be polite to your children. Do you expect them to be mindful of your welfare? To grow glad at your approach? To bound away to do your pleasure before your request is half spoken? Then, with all your dignity and authority mingle politeness. Give it a niche in your household temple. Only then will you have the true secret of sending out into the world really finished gentlemen and ladies.

Again we say unto all—be polite.

HOW TO BE GRACEFUL.—A schoolgirl misses a great deal of valuable education who hurries away to school, morning and afternoon, without having used her muscles in helping her mother. She misses something else, which, in a few years, she will know to value better than she does now—grace of movement and carriage.

What makes a girl graceful? It is using all her bodily powers. A student who is nothing but a student soon begins to stoop, and the habit, once begun, grows inveterate and incurable. Half our schoolgirls can not walk with ease and grace.

We see this very plainly on commencement days, when the members of the graduating class are obliged to walk a few steps before the audience. Their dresses are often too costly and splendid; their hair is beautifully arranged; their pieces are creditably written: one thing only they lack—they can not walk!

A girl who would have a graceful carriage, a sound digestion, a clear complexion and fine teeth, must work for them every day, and no work is better for the purpose than the ordinary work of a house done with diligence and carefulness.

G. M. SCOTT, of Okoloua, Miss., wrote to Dr Shallenberger: "Your Antidote for Malaria is certainly the best thing for chills and fever that has ever been sold in the South. I have been selling it for twelve years, and know it to be the best medicine I have dealt in. It is perfectly harmless, and a sure cure in every case." Sold by Druggists.

"About a year ago I began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for debility and neuralgia resulting from malarial exposure in the army. I was in a very bad condition, but six bottles of the Sarsaparilla, with occasional doses of Ayer's Pills, have greatly improved my health. I am now able to work, and feel that I cannot say too much for your excellent remedies."—F. A. Pinkham, South Molunous, Me.

"My daughter, sixteen years old, is using Ayer's Sarsaparilla with good effect."—Rev. S. J. Graham, United Brethren Church, Buckhannon, W. Va.

"I suffered from

Nervous Prostration,

Mrs. Ann H. Farnsworth, a lady 76 years old, So. Woodstock, Vt., writes: "After several weeks' suffering from nervous prostration, I procured a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had taken half of it my usual health returned."

MADDOX—MARIE MADDOX, daughter of Dr. A. Maddox and Jennie Osteen, his wife, was born June 8, 1870, and died, November 10, 1888, in Claiborne county, Miss.

The death of this young lady has brought great sorrow to a devoted family and to a large circle of friends. Frank, winning and gentle, she was a bright example at home, and her brief life was so replete with acts of kindness to others that she became the center and object of love to all about her. She had the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, and grew up tenderly cared for and loved. In the providence of God she was called away early, but not before there had been developed in her character the rarest Christian graces.

She was a member of the Episcopal Church, and had given her heart to the Savior, whose cause she loved, and whose praise she loved to sing. She was practically a Christian, firm in her religious faith, and took all occasions to instill holy principles into the minds of her younger brothers and sisters. Her character, beautiful by nature, was rendered still more so by the grace of a regenerated spirit. She knew what it was to walk with the Savior, and hence when he called her the grace of God abounded, and she was ready to go. Death was but a transition from this earthly life to the heavenly one. The Savior fulfilled his promise—"I will come again and receive you unto myself."

Naturally shrinking in her temperament, she yet met the summons with composure, touchingly saying to her father, whom she deeply loved—"Papa, take my hand, and help me through the deep waters." Thus, with that uplifting of thought and faith, which the presence of the blessed Savior inspires, her pure spirit passed away.

To that stricken home the deepest sympathy flows forth, but, better still, they have the assurance that God is still wise and good, though we can not explore and understand all his ways. Beautiful with the soul's expansion, and clothed with celestial grace, the blessed face shines upon them from the peaceful realm into which she has entered. There she waits the coming of those who are left behind; and it is her mission yet to draw them nearer to the things unseen.

E. H. MOUNGER.

MADDOX—How sad to record the death of one who for so long we had known but to love; yet it hath pleased Him, to whom we should submissively bow, to call to himself our dear Sister HARRIET MADDOX, wife of Dr. G. W. Maddox. She was born in Macon county, Ga., August 13, 1833; was married in January, 1853; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, before she was ten years old. In which she lived a consistent member until her death, December 10, 1888, at her home in Claiborne parish, La. Amiable in childhood, lovely in womanhood, she was all that could have been required of a Christian wife and mother. Although timid and reticent, she was ever ready to counsel and advise the young, and on some occasions caused the stout-hearted to tremble and weep by her fragrant prayers even in the public congregations. Her influence was greater at home among her children, relatives, neighbors and servants, to whom she was, indeed, the saving-salt. She was the friend of all, the enemy of none. Careful and diligent in health, patient and lamb-like in sickness, she quietly fell asleep. May the aroma of her sweet life fall like a mantle on her bereft daughters, the answer of her many prayers be realized by her sons, and the same Spirit guide and comfort her grief-stricken husband whom she confidingly trusted!

J. H. J.

DOWNS—THOMAS ELDER, only son of J. R. and S. J. Downs, died December 21, 1888, aged two months and fifteen days.

Once more a budding flower has been plucked while in the bud to bloom in that land of everlasting fidelity. Parents, faint not; though your life be filled with affliction and sore bereavements, "the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away; blessed be the name of the Lord." May the Lord bless the sorrowing father and mother in this sad hour of sore bereavement, and help them to prepare to meet with their precious little sterling in that land of everlasting rest!

W. R. INABNET.

FORTNER—Mrs. FANNIE L. FORTNER was born September 13, 1864. Many of our old school-companions will be grieved to know our sweet friend is no more. In school life, Fannie Lum was one of those bright, merry natures that are so wingsome. Home was the place she loved best in the world. We shall all miss her. After a long illness, during which she suffered much, the brave struggle of life was given up, December 3, 1888, and the freed spirit crossed over into the country of rest.

Just a year and two days from the happy hour, when she stood in her bridal robes and promised to be a help-meet and companion for the husband now desolate, tender, loving hands arranged her once more—this time for the bridegroom, Death. She was always so bright, so merry, so full of the sunlight of life, it seemed strange, unnatural, to think of her as an invalid. It was hard to think of a spirit so free, so buoyant and joyous, as helpless and suffering. A few days before her death I was with her, and, though sadly changed by the hand of disease, the cheerfulness of her nature would still assert itself sometimes in glimpses of brightness that awakened new hope so often in the hearts of the loved ones about her. For five months she suffered, though for some time was not confined to her room. Though life was precious to her, and she was hopeful that health would return, yet she feared not to enter the valley of the shadow of death, for the Comforter was there, and, trusting in her Savior, she passed over Jordan into the "sweet fields of Eden." She leaves a devoted mother most sadly bereaved; for her cup of sorrow has been filled, to overflowing in this last affliction.

Fannie was an only daughter, and her brief married life was spent in the old home. She was a faithful friend and loved exmdor, honesty and sincerity. In her professions she was quiet, living rather than asserting them. She joined the Methodist Church in 1878, and was ever willing to work for its cause, and never refused to aid in any good work. Her mother told me she paid her minister this year with money earned by herself since her illness. As long as strength remained, she wanted to be useful and employed in some way. But, dear friends of the dear departed, let us not think of her too much as she suffered here, but as a bright being, purified, but otherwise unchanged—a joyous spirit that will make heaven a brighter place for her being there.

ONE WHO LOVED HER.

SANDERS—Sister ANN SANDERS was born March 30, 1815; was married to Richard G. Sanders, March 14, 1833, and died December 22, 1888. She professed religion and joined the church in early life, and was a consistent Christian until death. She was one of the charter members of Friendship Church, which was organized by Rev. J. A. Fife, in the house of M. D. Foster in the year 1859, and was always one of its most devoted, punctual and liberal members. As a Christian she was not very demonstrative, but she always experienced the secret peace of religion in her soul. It was my privilege to know her all my life. She exerted an influence for good upon all with whom she came in contact. She lived her religion at home.

Sister Sanders was the mother of eleven children. One died when young, three were given to the "Lost Cause," and seven still abide. One daughter, now a widow, lives away out in the State of Kansas; the other children were present at her burial.

Her daughter in Mississippi is now the wife of a Methodist local preacher, and her sons are among our best citizens. God has been gracious and merciful to Sister Sanders by giving her all her children to journey with her to the better land. But she is gone! Although she had passed threescore years and ten, she was mother still! In the morning of the day she died, she seemed to be perfectly well, and conversed with her son about the day's work; and all at once she ceased to work and live, her heart ceased to act and she died without a struggle.

It was my sad duty to preach her funeral. I was almost overwhelmed with grief as I stood to speak to my former schoolmates and neighbors about one who had been a mother in Israel to me. Let me mention one of the grandest traits of Sister Sanders' character: She knew how to welcome the tired itinerant preacher and give him a place to rest. God bless the children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren, and bring them all to heaven at last!

T. W. LEWIS.

GAY—CHARLIE CRITTENDEN GAY, infant son of Louis H. and Lula Gay, was born July 17, 1887, and died in Robeline, La., October 6, 1888, aged one year, two months and nineteen days. Dear little Charlie was remarkably sprightly for one so tender in years, and of that age most interesting and attractive. Friends who visited the family were always attracted to him, and father and mother loved him with almost idolatrous devotion. God saw that it was best to take dear Charlie to his own home in heaven, and by this means to lead the devoted parents near to Him. Yes, my dear brother and sister, God will sanctify this deep affliction to your present and eternal good if you will ask him for grace to help you to bear it with a meek and humble spirit. "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God." R. S. L.

Movement of the Washington Monument.

Great care is taken to note the movements of the Washington Monument, for it does move. The law of contraction and expansion of material by heat and cold operates here as well as elsewhere. When the sun shines full on the eastern face in the morning, the stones on that side expand and throw the shaft slightly to the west. Then the sun goes round to the south, and the apex of the monument makes a corresponding swing to the north. As the orb creeps about the sky to its final setting in the evening, the glittering point on top of the monument makes a contra-movement around half a circle, gradually setting back to its normal position after the rays of the sun have lost their power. This movement has never been calculated, but is undoubtedly very slight. The wind, too, has an effect upon the structure. From the centre of gravity of the shaft, located 174 feet and 10 inches from the floor, is a cross-beam, from which is suspended a fine steel wire, protected by a galvanized iron tube about four inches in diameter. This hangs to the floor at the northwest corner of the elevator well. At the bottom is a plumb-bob, weighing twenty-five pounds, suspended by means of the wire, and hanging in water. An iron cylinder protects the instrument from injury, and a little iron house, about four feet high, keeps off the draught. Through the cylinder is a telescopic eyepiece, in one end of which are two vertical wires about one-quarter of an inch apart. When a candle is held at an opening in the side of the box and the eye is applied to the outside end of the tube, the plumb line can be seen—a fine line between the vertical marks. Any movement in the shaft is recorded by a corresponding movement in the line. When the structure is at rest, and in its normal position, the line hangs still, midway between the others, but when the shaft is disturbed by the action of the wind, it sways back and forth like the pendulum of a clock, always coming to rest in the centre. This is observed every day, and if the custodian should ever notice the line hanging still at any point outside of the two cross-lines, he will then know that the monument has been permanently moved from its level position. Until then, however, no one need be alarmed by the oscillations of the shaft from the action of the wind or the influence of the sun.—New York Star.

A Medical View of the Value of Fasting.

It requires, in our time of self-indulgence, some struggle to make a trial of fasting, but everyone who does so will soon be convinced that it has a very salutary influence upon health and working power, and not by any means only in those who indulge in luxurious meals, but in everyone down to handicraftsman and peasant.

Where fasting is a religious ordinance, there is a weekly fasting-day appointed, besides a yearly fasting season. Both are useful from a hygienic point of view.

During the fasting-time the body has time to get rid of the coarse or fine sediments of the daily food. This alone is a kind of recreation, and the other recreative element is that it disturbs the condition of unvarying weight; this latter generally produces a lowering of the energy of life, while its disturbance revives it.

By fasting anyone may raise his reduced working powers. In short, I advise everyone either to fast regularly, if only to the extent of going without dinner one day in the week, or to fast a day the moment he realizes a certain diminution of enjoyment of life and labor.

Especially may fasting be recommended as preparation for greater mental activity. I say this from personal experience: During my lecturing tour I have followed the rule, for years, of keeping one fast-day beforehand, and on the lecturing day to take nothing besides breakfast before the lecture, except something to drink; and every lecturing tour corresponds, with me, to a fasting season, though not of an absolutely correct kind. And I ascribe it to this system that, in spite of all wear and tear involved, I retain bodily and mental freshness.—Dr. Gustav Jaeger.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS
J. G. GRANT
50 and 52 Baronne Street,
OFFERS THE FOLLOWING SUGGESTIONS:

THERE are two ways to make money. One is to earn it; the other is to save it. There are two ways of saving money. When you save a dollar by putting it in the bank you do well, but when you save a dollar by shrewd purchasing you do better. The first is saving; the second is in reality earning. So there are two ways of earning money--by labor and by wise purchasing.

LET ME SAY A WORD ABOUT PURCHASING:

The FIRST THING to learn in order to become a successful purchaser is that price means nothing until you have seen the goods. The fact that Bedroom Suits, for instance, cost $100 in one store and $65 in another tells you nothing. The $100 suit may be worth $125, while the $65 suit may not be worth carrying away. It is only when you have compared the goods as well as the prices that you are in a position to judge of what is cheap and what is not. Goods may be too cheap sometimes. Prices don't always tell the whole story. Either know the goods or know the dealer. If he has a reputation for liberality and straightforward dealing, people soon find it out. When you learn that he is carrying a larger and better stock, and that his trade is increasing rapidly, both in the city and the adjoining states, why it means something. It means that his business methods have been approved, that people have discovered his liberal ways and taken advantage of them, and it points you the direction for your next purchase.

The SECOND PRECEPT in successful purchasing is that the best is always cheapest in the end. Many people who have never visited my warerooms have the idea that only cheap goods are sold because I do not put on much outside style and occupy a showy and very high priced store, but one visit will prove that this is a great mistake. Remember that there is a big difference between CHEAP GOODS and GOODS CHEAP. Go elsewhere for cheap goods, but come here for goods cheap. The man who sells cheap goods sells his customers at the same time. I am not in that line of business. The public are beginning to understand the difference, and my trade proves it very clearly. A word to the wise is sufficient. Call and see how cheap fashionable furniture of the best quality can be sold.

ROBERT HANDLE, P. E.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the Insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia R. R.

Well known as the Great Kenesaw Route, is now making twelve hours quicker time to Washington via New York and eastern points, with Pullman Buffet Sleepers from New Orleans to Washington without change. The mountain resorts of East Tennessee are reached in twenty-four hours, and Virginia resorts in thirty hours. For tickets, sleeping accommodation, circulars, schedule, etc., call at Kenesaw ticket office, 29 Carondelet street.

From Most Rev. Bishop Ryan, of Philadelphia.

I can testify to the efficacy of J. & C. Maguire's Cundurango. It having been my favorite medicine for several years past. I believe it to be the best Anti-Bilious Cathartic and Corrector of Liver, Blood and Kidney derangements that can be taken, and its general use in families would no doubt avert attacks of sickness.

HE GIVETH LIGHT.

BY PROF. C. S. HARRINGTON.

How the glorious sunshine gladdens;
How it lights the earth with smiles;
When all else around us saddens,
How it every care beguiles.
How the bald old mountain blushes
To receive its wooing kiss;
How the evening forest flushes
In its golden flood of bliss.

How the gleaming lakelet glitters
In the sunshine's shimmering rays;
How the fountain frets and frlitters,
Leaping up to catch their gaze.
How the valleys mourn in sadness,
Dimples deep in Nature's cheek;
How the hill-top laugh in gladness
In the joyous light they seek.

How the earth with myriad voices
Hails the light with matin song;
How her countless host rejoices,
Singing praise with cheerful tongue.
Blessed be the God who lighteneth
All his world with glorious rays!
Blessed be the God that brighteneth
All the toil of earthly days!

Evangelical Preaching.

A notable conference on this important subject was held recently in London. Many eminent ministers and laymen were present, and took part in the exercises. Dr. Newman Hall has given the Congregationalist a pretty full account of the speeches made, from which we take some extracts for the edification of our readers. The unanimity of sentiment shows that the "glorious gospel of the blessed God" has a firm hold upon the hearts of evangelical ministers and laymen the world over.

Dr. Allon said:

When a man preaches the loving Father, the perfect Human Example, the sanctity of Christian discipleship, he does not teach distinctive Christianity. The answer of Christianity to the question, "What must I do to be saved?" is the true evangel; the forgiveness of sins through the atoning sacrifice, and the new life by the Holy Spirit. A religious life that is practically impossible is not an evangel, but a teaching of despair. To prove the verity and influence of Christianity is not the gospel itself, the distinctive note of which is, "Behold the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world!"

Dr. Stevenson:

The divine life is marvelously inclusive with differences in forms of opinion, but the true way of preaching Christ is to preach him as God incarnate, as the Crucified, as gathering the sin and misery of the world on his divine shoulders, and in modes more numerous than we can tell, and more mysterious than we can fathom, bearing that sin away, so that as a barrier between man and God, it shall be no more forever.

Dr. Joseph Parker:

The heart calls for God, and evangelical preaching says: "Thou mayest find him here at the cross. Thou wilt always find him at a place called Calvary." To get at God by the intellect only, is like reaching the stars by a ladder instead of a telescope. Seen through conscious sin, he is around us, lovingly, redeemingly; and if we say, "Lord, I believe, help thou mine unbelief," there is nothing in his infinite heart that he will keep back from us. The evangelical spirit is one of yearning for the lost. Without the tenderness of Christ what wonder there should be mockers! Only he who lives the Christ-life can preach the Christ-gospel. We must "preach to the times;" but this is not verbiage which no one can understand, nor the vanity which, from its own quarry, sends polysyllables to the bogs of other men's ignorance, but appeals to the innermost thought and love; he preaches to the times who preaches to broken hearts. The cross will overcome all ignorance, superstition and sin, and the Lord Christ shall have a soul that is satisfied.

Dr. Clifford:

Christ is Christianity; its standard and life. Theologies must not be put in the place of the divine Redeemer. The old story must be applied to new interests. The "old gospel" certainly, but not necessarily the old fashions. Clothes are not life. Sympathetic reverence must be wedded with fearless investigation. Only life can minister life.

Dr. Munroe Gibson:

We join in the outcry against dead orthodoxy, but it is not the orthodoxy, but the deadness of it, which is to be deplored. A sermon without the Spirit of Christ pervading it, though doctrinally sound, is dead; also when safety hereafter has been made the immediate motive, instead of salvation now, present life by the obedience of faith. We rejoice in the work of those who aim chiefly to improve the environments of human life; but they also should recognize the work of those who, with the same object, devote most attention to the life itself, bringing to weary hearts the love of God the result of which is sure to be better homes and surroundings. To complain of gospel preachers as unpractical is as unreasonable as to blame an engine driver for getting up steam instead of going forward.

Rev. J. G. Rogers:

We must often repeat ourselves if we would be faithful and rivet the old truth on the hearts of men. No theology can exhaust Christ. We must preach him, not only for comfort and pardon, but for guidance of conscience and government of life. The intellect should be enlisted. Evangelistic addresses of revivalists have their use; but there is a prevalent lack of a firm, intelligent grasp of doctrine. Christ should be preached so that the intellect shall be interested and convinced. The central force in St. Paul may be ours also—"Christ liveth in me."

Mr. Percy Bunting:

It is impossible for a preacher to the same congregation to produce highly finished and strikingly original sermons every Sunday, year by year. He must, and should, repeat himself in some measure. The true genius of preaching is expressed in the description of Christ's preaching—"full of grace and truth." Argument should be so put as to reach the heart.

Mr. Fowler, M. P.:

The new's advice to the pulpit would be, Avoid controversy. The old Adam in the hearer begins to criticise and find a flaw in the argument. Avoid party politics—not the great questions of morality, temperance, freedom, peace, but questions on which Christians may be divided. Draw rather than drive. The main object should be, not to tickle the intellectual palate, but to expound the Bible. Avoid wearisome length. "Never bring a bucket to fill a pint." Wesley once said: "You preach your sermon in the first half-hour, repeat it in the second, and unsay it in the third." Sermons were never so much read. The pulpit is not limited to the walls. Spurgeon's preaching is not confined to the Tabernacle, nor that of the City Temple or of Christ Church, Westminster Road. Preaching is not as easy as a young curate thought, who said to a late Bishop: "I take my text the evening before, and write my sermon straight off, and think nothing of it." "Ah!" said the Bishop, "and I expect your congregation think the same."

Dr. Newman Hall:

Every true preacher is himself reconciled to God, and feels constrained to beseech others. Granting a true vocation, then preaching, like other arts, should be cultivated, the more diligently because of that vocation. Timothy was to "give attention to reading." Paul was anxious to get his "books and parchments." His sermon at Athens was a masterpiece of connected and adapted reasoning. His epistles bear no evidence of haste or indolence. His great Master was a supreme example of plainness of speech. Every true preacher seeks to be understood. That is the best preaching which sends hearers away saying, not, "How clever, original, witty, eloquent; what a preacher!" but, "What a sinner I have been! What a Christ I've got! 'Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?'"

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes:

We must not preach plans of salvation, but a living Savior. Robertson said the highest function of the preacher is to bring a man face to face with Christ, and then get himself out of the way. The only test of orthodoxy is personal loyalty to the living Son of God. You must get rid of every such Christian before you can get rid of Christianity. The upper classes of this country are heathen—seldom hear the gospel, or open the Bible. It is vain to give these people creeds; they want Christ, and can formulate creeds afterwards. Some modern skeptics have judged Christianity by our mistakes. The people will have no more sham, and consider that all the ecclesiastical tomfoolery and unreal Christianity of the Middle Ages are buried forever. A living Christ is in every real Christian, that we may carry on the work he began, not only in saving our own souls and the individual man, but in saving society and reconstructing it on a Christian basis; and to be like himself, every day, in business, pleasure, politics, striking down the accursed forms of selfishness which are desolating the households of the poor. Since the world began there has never been any power which has lifted the masses of the people except the power of Jesus Christ, to which the artisan and laborer owes his very position as a free man.

From the City of Mexico.

BY J. M. WEEMS, D. D.

MR. EDITOR: We left your city on the morning of January 5, via the Southern Pacific railroad, for the City of Mexico. To attempt a description of our feelings and emotions as the Queen City of the South faded from sight for, it may be, years to come, would be but a poor effort to make public a sacred experience that only the initiated could appreciate. To everyone there are experiences in life too sacred, even in their deep pain and sorrow, to be revealed to the dearest of friends. So of that hour. We talked to God about it, and then carefully folding it all in his rich promises, we have laid it away till the fullness of time shall bring the reward. The Lord was gracious to us, and not one thing occurred to cause the slightest apprehension of danger on this long journey to the far West. The railroad men and officers are so thoughtful and polite that even a child might make the journey from New Orleans to the City of Mexico alone in perfect safety. Surely these great lines that so effectually unite the interests of these two republics are destined to become popular with the citizen traveling from one to the other.

Of the things seen and heard by the way, I can not now speak. There may be an hour when memories of the past shall awaken inspirations that slumber, but not now. I must, however, speak of a few things personal. After parting with Bishop Galloway and his good wife on board the Enterprise, we had the good fortune to meet with Bro. Cook, of Atlanta, who remained with us far into Texas. We found him a pious Methodist and a great lover of the church. When he left us we felt the loss of his presence; but the savor of his blessing remains.

The next person of interest we met was the Mexican official, who claimed the right to unpack and examine our baggage. This was done so quickly and gentlemanly that we felt like thanking the authorities for this first expression of Mexican urbanity. Then, as we hurried along on board the train, we met Bro. Grimes and his family on their way to San Luis Potosi. His greeting was so warm and enthusiastic as to cause us for a time to lose sight of the fact that we were in a strange land and among a strange people. His family is an orthodox one; five or six children, and as many Mexican children who are being cared for and educated by his good wife and himself.

At about eight A. M., on the morning of the ninth, we reached the City of Mexico, and were met at the depot by Bros. Carter, Watkins and Blanco, who welcomed us to our new field of labor in the spirit of the Master. But how helpless we felt! On every side was heard the call of the cabman in an unknown tongue. But soon one was selected by Bro. Carter, and, after we were seated, he called out: "Avenida Balderas Numero Tres," and in a little while we were warmly greeted into the home of Sister Carter and the little ones. Here we have been cared for with thoughtful tenderness, and will remain until a house can be secured. We were sorry to find Sister Watkins sick, but hope she may soon be up again.

On our arrival we were glad to learn that this was the week of prayer, as that would give us an opportunity to meet the missionaries of all the churches. We have met most of them, and their earnest words of welcome have made us feel "we are a band of brethren." We were especially gratified at meeting with Bishop Walden, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, who is now holding their Conference. His earnest prayer for our safety and success drew us to him in everlasting remembrance.

Of the future I do not know, only as I feel the inspiration of the promise, "I am with you," thrilling the whole of being and arming me for the work. Next Sabbath, at eleven A. M., I am to preach in the English-speaking church, and the Sabbath following I am engaged to preach to the English congregation in the Methodist Episcopal Church. So the opportunity for doing good is opening before us. The Lord be praised.

My address for the present is, City of Mexico, Avenida Balderas No. 3, Mexico.

Cheap Reading.

I was very glad to see your editorial leader, of January 10, on "Cheaper Religious Newspapers;" and write to record my hearty endorsement to every word you said. It is not wholly unknown that I am something, in my feeble way, of an advocate for wide distribution of cheap religious literature; but I do not think that to reduce the present prices of our weekly papers is the way to do it. The subscribers to the Advocates are not the class of persons on whom we wish to operate in this line of enterprise.

In a town or neighborhood where half a dozen Advocates are taken, there will likely be found four times that number of accessible families who take no religious paper, and who would not be reached with a paper fifty cents cheaper. That is the class of persons we want to reach. They are able to take a paper, or half a dozen, if need be, but they do not want any religious reading because they have none, and they have none because they want none. We must push cheap reading on that class of persons gratuitously, or nearly so, in order to show them that there is such a thing in the world as useful reading of a religious character. This crowding of cheap reading where there is none is the great present need. This can be done by means of a colportage system, and in no other way that I plainly see.

It is to be hoped we may yet some time inaugurate a colportage system that will have the threefold effect of, first, distributing cheap reading where now there is none, in order to create an appetite for such reading; second, the advertising of our Publishing House, in order that its catalogue issues may be somewhat commensurate to its ability and the wants of the church, and those looking mainly to our ministry; and, thirdly, the more wide circulation of our weekly newspapers and Quarterly.

The great need of the church now is a colportage system. Why don't you editors and the rest of us agitate that subject?

R. ABBEY.

To the Members of the Louisiana Conference.

DEAR BRETHREN: I beg leave to call your attention to the resolution passed by you at the recent session of your Conference in reference to the Bible cause. Said resolution makes it the duty of each pastor in your Conference to present the Bible cause, and take a collection therefor on the second Sunday in February; and it is to be hoped that each one will observe the day according to the resolution. Let the people to whom you preach know what a great work the American Bible Society is doing for the cause of humanity and Christianity, and urge them to contribute something to the support thereof. Get Sunday-school superintendents and the pastors of other churches to join you in the good work, and call on everybody, both old and young, to help. The work of the American Bible Society is purely unsectarian in every sense of the term, and it should receive the hearty and substantial support of all who believe in spreading the Bible. Bear in mind that the work is both benevolent and missionary in the most important sense of the terms, and that the society is doing a great work in your State, expending, as it is, on an average of nearly $800 per month in furnishing the destitute therein with the Word of God, to say nothing of the great work it is doing throughout the nation and throughout the world for all the evangelical churches of this land. Thirty dollars paid at one time makes one a life member of the American Bible Society, and every such member, in addition to receiving a large, beautiful certificate of his membership, which he can have framed and hung up in his parlor, will be entitled to that which is equal to $2 in value every year as long as he lives, to wit: one dollar's worth of Bibles, of his own selection, at the cost of manufacture, and the Bible Society Record, a sixteen-page monthly filled with interesting reading for all who are interested in the spread of the Bible and Christianity in the earth.

Money can be sent either to me, at 165 Camp street, New Orleans, or to William Foulke, Jr., Bible House, Astor Place, New York.

Trusting that God may stir up the hearts of all who love humanity to help in the great work of spreading his Word, I am,

Yours in Christ,

J. W. M'LAURIN,
Dist. Supt. for the A. B. S. in La. and Miss.

To the Chairmen of Joint Boards of Finance.

BRETHREN: Will you please inform your book agent now of the number of widows and orphans of deceased traveling preachers in your several Annual Conferences? It is important to have this knowledge, that an intelligent distribution of the interest on the Calvin Fund may be made; and it is important to have it early, that all the work preliminar to the distribution may be done by the Book Agent before the earliest Conferences of the approaching season begin. Last year few of the chairmen of Joint Boards reported at all, but the present year some have already reported. And now will the rest of the brethren please to report at their earliest possible convenience?

The chairmen of Joint Boards will also please send to the Book Agent the number of superannuated preachers in their respective Conferences, as they are claimants on the proceeds of the Publishing House as well as the widows and orphans of deceased preachers; but none but widows and orphans of deceased preachers are claimants on the Calvin Fund. In answer to an inquiry which has been made, it is proper to state that the children of deceased preachers are orphans according to the intent of the Calvin bequest, whether their mothers are living or not.

J. D. BARBEE,
Book Agent.

Raise It.

After a whole day of earnest conference with others equally anxious with myself, followed by an almost sleepless night, I said at our breakfast table, a few mornings since: "How can we pay $20,000 of appropriations when we have but $10,000 of money?" Our fifteen-year-old boy promptly answered, "Raise the other ten thousand dollars." And this must be done if the appropriations of last April are not all paid soon. We gave warning last summer, and have been pressing our plea in every way we could ever since, and yet we lack near ten thousand dollars of enough to meet these cases, not one of which ought to be deferred. And it can be raised if, with one heart and purpose, our preachers will everywhere go at once to work, and secure and send to their Conference treasurers, not to me, every possible dollar on the present year's assessment. A long pull, a strong pull, and a pull altogether will bring us through. In the name of the Master, and for his cause, let it be done.

Directions How to Send Missionary Money.

All preachers, or others, having money for foreign missions, will please send it to the treasurer of their Conference Board of Missions, who will send it to the Book Agent, who is also treasurer of the Parent Board of Missions. Do not send your money directly to the Book Agent, but to the treasurer of your Conference Board of Missions. And will every treasurer of a Conference Board of Missions promptly forward the money thus received to the Book Agent? If the brethren will kindly observe these directions, it will simplify bookkeeping in this office, and greatly facilitate business.

J. D. BARBEE,
Treasurer.

Rev. Luther Lee says: "Sanctification is that renewal of our fallen nature by the Holy Ghost, received through faith in Jesus Christ, whose blood of atonement has power to cleanse from all sin; whereby we are not only delivered from the guilt of sin, which is justification, but are washed entirely from its pollution, freed from its power, and are enabled, through grace, to love God with all our hearts, and to walk in his holy commandments blameless."

THE SEASONS.

BY WILLIAM G. HAYNE.

I'm sure they are brothers and sisters—
The children of Earth and Me—
And the wonderful story of each is told
By a nurse whom we name the Year.

Spring is the fondly darling,
Because she is pure and sweet,
And the flowers and leaves awaken
From the touch of her hands and feet.

Summer is regally lovely,
Yet vigilant, night and day,
To keep the bloom that her sister reared—
The legacy left by May.

Autumn is mournful, and yearns to be
With his beautiful sisters dead,
And oftentimes his tears of blood
On the perishing leaves are shed.

Winter looks stern, but he sometimes dreams
Of Summer's fount of grace,
And he secretly worships his sister Spring,
Though he never has seen her face.

Sunday-School Lesson.—Feb. 3.

THE PARABLE OF THE SOWER.

Mark iv, 10-20.

GOLDEN TEXT.—If any man have ears to hear, let him hear.—Mark iv, 23.

TIME.—A. D. 27. We can not realize the spectacle (at that season and spot so natural), a sower in early spring scattering his handfuls of grain in the upturned furrow.

PLACE.—The shore of the Sea of Galilee.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. xiii, 1-23; Luke viii, 4-15.

10. When he was alone—This refers to a temporary withdrawal, when his disciples "came" to him, for he evidently spoke further to the multitude. (Matt. xiii, 24-35.) They that were about him—What now follows was addressed neither to the vast mixed multitude, nor to the twelve apostles only, but to an intermediate body, smaller than the first and larger than the second, but composed entirely of disciples or believers in his doctrine. Asked of him—The question shows the newness of this method of teaching to the disciples. Matthew says more definitely: "Why speaketh thou unto them in parables?" and Luke: "What might this parable be?" The answer in all three accounts is: first, a reason why he thus taught, and, secondly, the exposition of this particular parable. Both questions must have been asked, as is implied in the definite statement of this verse.

11. Unto you it is given—"To you" is emphatic. A gift of God is here said to be bestowed on one class of hearers and not to another. On account of your superior docility and singleness of heart; "but to them it is not given" on account of their perverse prejudices which made them unwilling to attend to the gospel truths, and incapable of understanding them. They obtained a solution, not because they were friends, but because they were inquirers; sight was given to them because they were willing to see. In this saying of the Lord is summed up the double force—the revealing and concealing properties of the parable. The mystery of the kingdom of God—Mysteries to others, but plain truths to you, because I furnish you with the key. It is to be noted that these seven parables all have for their subject the kingdom of God; its planting principles, developments, and final victory. Them that are without—The division between the within and the without was a very customary one with ancient philosophers. Those within were the people who listened and received their philosophy and became learned; those without were the common mass of men who remained in unphilosophical ignorance. This appellation the Jews were accustomed to give to the heathens.

12. That seeing they may see, and not perceive; and hearing they may hear, and not understand—I speak to them in parables, natural representations of spiritual truths, that they may be allured to inquire, and to find out the spirit which is hidden under the latter; because, seeing the miracles which I have wrought, they see not—that is, the end for which I have wrought them: and hearing my doctrines they hear not, so as to profit by what is spoken; neither do they understand. It here indicates that parables were used for the purpose that men who chose might remain blind. Not that their blindness is a primary purpose of the Almighty; but that blindness, which is their choice, may be accorded to them. These negative verbs, not perceive and not understand, express intentional unintelligence. These men do not fall into passive ignorance, but they actively ignore. Lest at any time they should be converted—His meaning is not, these things are done in parables lest they should be converted; but, their eyes they have closed, etc., lest at any time they should be converted. That is, men willfully close their hearts to the truth, lest they should be led to repentance and reformation. They will not, therefore they can not.

13. How then will ye know all parables—The first parable of the kingdom is the basis of all the rest. If they understood not this, they could not understand any that followed. If they had the explanation of this, they had the key for the understanding of all others.

14. The sower—The seed of truth, of which Jesus spake, has been sowing ever since in his Word, and the diversity of soil is the same now as then. The success depends not on the seed sown, but on the soil that receives the seed. The sower is, first, the Son of man, then his ministers and servants to the end. He sows over all the field, unlikely as well as likely places, and commands his sowers to do the same. His entrance into the world was his going forth to sow. The Word of the kingdom, which Word he first proclaimed, was his seed; the hearts of men his soil; others were only able to sow because he had sown first; they did not carry on the work which he had auspicated and begun.

15. They by the wayside—Through the whole parable we must embrace in our view the field with the seed on it. In Luke, the idea of seed predominates; in Mark, the idea of ground sown over; in Matthew, there is an alternation. In the first instance, the view of the ground sown predominates; in the last, the view of the seed scattered. Our interest in it may, perhaps, be quickened if we think of it as reflecting what had actually been our Lord's experience. The classes of hearers who had gathered round him were represented roughly and generally by the four issues of the seed scattered by the sower; and all preachers of the truth, from that day to this, have felt that their own experience has represented analogous phenomena. Word is sown—"The ordinary roads or paths in the East lead often along the edge of the fields which are uninclosed. Hence, as the sower scatters his seed some of it is liable to fall beyond the plowed portion, on the hard beaten ground which forms the wayside." Satan cometh immediately—Through his emissaries, symbolized by the fowls. Temptations have wings and they come in flocks, and they have open beaks to snatch up the Word of life and carry it off or devour it up. And how easily the seed of the Word does go! People on Monday have forgotten both the sermon and the text of Sunday. The birds have come and devoured them both up. Observe that in the parable it is the fowls of the air which carry away the seed, and that in the application Christ imputes those wandering thoughts which do the work of truth-robbers to the evil one, whose agents and instruments they are. Taketh away—"Snatches." It is done in a moment—by a smile at the end of the sermon; by a silly criticism at the church door; by foolish gossip on the way home. These are the "fowls of the air" whom the evil one uses in his task. It would not be difficult to exemplify this by specimens drawn from the records of his dealings with men; but it will suffice now to give point to his descriptions by recalling the divers effects produced by his claims to the Messiahship. There were men hardened by Jewish prejudice, and seared with worldliness, who looked only for material advancement by the establishment of a new kingdom, and yet flocked to hear his words, meek and lowly as he was. They might possibly have been impressed, had not the Pharisaic enemies of the cross, the emissaries of Satan, stepped in with their specious arguments and caught away the seed before ever it found any lodgment in their hearts.

16. Sown on stony ground—A soil mingled with stones is not meant; for these, however numerous or large, would not certainly hinder the roots from striking deeply downward, for those roots, with an instinct of their own, would feel and find their way, penetrating between the interstices of the stones, till they reached the moisture below. But what is intended is ground where a thin, superficial coating of mold covered the surface of a rock, which stretched below it, presenting a barrier beyond which it was wholly impossible that the roots could penetrate to draw supplies of nourishment from beneath. While the seed had not fallen into deep earth, therefore, the plant the sooner appeared above the surface; and while the rock below hindered it from striking deeply downward, it put forth its energies the more luxuriantly in the stalk. It sprang up without delay, but was not rooted in that deep, moist soil which would have enabled it to resist the scorching heat of the sun, and, being smitten by that, withered and died. The second type of character stands in marked contrast with the first. Rapid change, strong emotion, a quicker show of conversion than is the case when it is more real—such results, it need hardly be said, come under the notice of every earnest preacher. Receive it with gladness—But, alas! the joy thus suddenly conceived is not, as the sequel too surely proves, a joy springing up from the contemplation of the greatness of the benefit, even after all the counterbalancing costs and hazards and sacrifices are taken into account, but a joy arising from an overlooking and leaving out of calculation those costs and hazards. It is this circumstance which fatally differentiates the joy of this class of hearers from that of the finder of the treasure, who, "for joy thereof," went and sold all that he had that he might purchase the field which contained the treasure—that is, was willing to deny himself all things, and to suffer all things, that he might win Christ.

17. No root in themselves—The "root" is obviously the conviction which ripens into a purpose and strikes its fibers deep down into reason, conscience, and will. The root gives the plant both life and stability. The hearer now described depends for both on others, not on sources within himself. Affliction or persecution—The words explain the "time of temptation" in St. Luke's report. (Luke viii, 13.) As the heat, had the plant been rooted deeply enough, would have furthered its growth and hastened its ripening, fitted it for the sickle and the barn, so these tribulations would have furthered the growth of the true Christian and ripened him for heaven. If a superficial professor does not drop off from mere cessation of excitement, a little trouble, a little opposition or contempt of the world, brushes him off. There may be much lukewarmness and much inconsistency in the church, but perhaps less permanent hypocrisy than many suppose. Offended—Ensnared and led into evil. Take offense, and fall away from the truth; fall into sin.

18. Sown among thorns—"Everyone who has been in Palestine must have been struck with the number of thorny shrubs and plants that abound there. The traveler finds them in his path, go where he may. Many of them are small, but some grow as high as a man's head. The rabbinical writers say that there are no less than twenty-two words in the Hebrew Bible denoting thorny and prickly plants. The prevalence of such shrubs, say agriculturists, shows a luxuriant soil. If proper care be not taken, they soon get the upper hand, and spread in every direction. 'I went by the field of the slothful; and lo, it was all grown over with thorns, and nettles had covered the face thereof.'" (Proverbs xxiv, 30, 31.)

19. Cares of this world—Care has precisely the same effect on the heart as riches; clinging to the things of earth keeps the poor as well as the rich from coming to Christ. The cares of this world—its petty, trifling distractions, not wrong in themselves, simply dissipating—filling the heart with paltry solicitudes and mean anxieties—wearing. Martha was "cumbered with much serving." Her household and domestic duties, real duties, divided her heart with Christ. The time of danger, therefore, is when life expands into new situations and larger spheres, bringing with them new cares. Every care must be considered as worldly which has not some tendency to piety and the worship of God, even though it be not mixed up with what is positively prohibited. The deceitfulness of riches—This class is not confined to the rich; riches in Scripture is not riches absolutely, as possessed, but riches relatively, as estimated by the desire and value for them. Lusts of other things entering in—Lusts about other things. The cause seems to be "the desires exercised about the rest of the goodes of life" (to use an old English term). Choke the word—The image of an evil growth strangling a nobler is permanently embodied in our language in the name cockle, given to a weed well known in our fields—derived from the Anglo-Saxon ceocan, to choke. It becometh unfruitful—There is nutriment enough in the ground for thorns, and enough for wheat; but not enough in any ground for both wheat and thorns. The agriculturist thins his nursery-ground, and the farmer weeds his field, and the gardener removes the superfluous grapes, for that very reason; in order that the dissipated sap may be concentrated in a few plants vigorously. So, in the same way, the heart has a certain power of loving. But love, dissipated on many objects, concentrates itself on none. God or the world—not both. "No man can serve two masters."

20. Bring forth fruit, some thirtyfold, some sixty, and some a hundred—Herodotus mentions that two hundredfold was a common return on the plain of Babylon, and sometimes three; and Niebuhr mentions a species of maize that returns four hundredfold. That no hearers are in Christ's account good hearers of the Word but such as bring forth fruit answerable to their hearing; that a person may be a good hearer of the Word, in Christ's account, if he bring forth the best fruit he can, though it be not in so great a proportion as others do. The fruit thirtyfold seems to represent the case of those who fear; sixtyfold, the case of those who hope; the hundredfold, those who love. The last class was composed of those whose hearts the Baptist had prepared, and the Lord had opened, who were "waiting for the consolation of Israel," men like Saints Andrew and John and Nathaniel, or women like the devout band who "ministered to him of their substance," and in varying degrees of productiveness bore fruit in their lives. This is but a single application of the parable, adapted to a special time, but the language is so pregnant and comprehensive that those who have rejected or received his Word from whatever motion, throughout all history, can see their image reflected in some portion of its fourfold division.

The Conference Claimants.

I see the Annual Conferences of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, have all been held. In looking over the reports of the preachers representing every enterprise of the church, I see there is a very encouraging advance in all, except one, and that is at a kind of a standstill. I mean the providing for the worn-out preachers, and widows and orphans of preachers who died in the regular work. Why is that so? It may be supposed they are well enough supplied already; but is it expected that an old superannuated preacher will step down and out, and rent a house, buy all his provisions, clothing, wood, and pay doctors' bills, medicines, taxes for self and family, with forty, fifty or, perchance, one hundred dollars? He is now worn-out and no longer gets marriage fees, presents, compliments, but has the privilege of taking care of himself. Yes, that is so; but how is he to do that? Let a preacher start out in the ministry when young, and spend his long life devoted to his work until old and worn-out, then turn him out in the world without a dollar or a board to shelter him and his from the storm! He knows but little how to make money, but that is not the worst. Nobody wants him for any business, for he is worn-out. Who wants any man worn-out for active, responsible work? Who wants anything worn-out? Here are thousands of men all over the land, shrewd and sharp, failing because they have passed the line of life to make money. The fact is, no old worn-out man can make money. I believe in all civilized countries public servants worn-out in the service of their country are retired on their regular pay; a soldier worn-out in his country's service retires on full pay. So with the judges of government courts; so with all except Methodist preachers. Why is it so? I believe it is admitted the Conference collection is the easiest raised of any in the church. I believe the people outside of the church would support every old worn-out preacher in the land if they were called upon to do so. Is it not a burning shame and a disgrace to the great Methodist Church, South, for the way she treats her old worn-out preachers? There are causes for these things; and until those causes are removed it will not be any better. One thing is, old self. The sore only hurts those that have to endure it; and a preacher thinks if he was cut loose, he could make a fortune. Let him try it, as many have done, and his conceit will soon ooze out of him at every pore. Another drawback is, the Conference collection is regarded as a charity by many of our church people as well as by the world; and you know old Miss Charity when young was so miserably poor and ugly that no one wanted anything to do with her, and now she is old, wrinkled, toothless, gray-headed, bent over, hobbling along, everybody is trying to keep out of her way. And as long as it is looked upon as a charity, it will be a poor miserable thing. Another thing, a superannuated preacher is looked upon as worthless, laid aside; whatever he may have been, he is of no service now.

A young preacher said to an old superannuated preacher: "You ought not to complain; you have had your day." "Yes," said the old man, "I did, and it was a glorious one. When I started, I had to furnish myself with horse, saddle and all outfits. My salary was laid down in the Discipline—one hundred dollars; if I could get it. I did the first year, for we took into the church over four hundred members. My second year my circuit was three hundred miles round sixteen appointments. I organized six churches, got up a camp meeting; and though I was the first preacher that would stay on that circuit for several years, the next year two preachers were sent to it. I got seventy-three dollars quarterage. The next year I had twenty-six appointments, organized six churches, lost two horses. Two other preachers followed me. I got on that circuit seventy-seven dollars. I have gone into a territory where there was no circuit or mission, and in two years handed over at the fourth quarterly meeting seventy-three official members—most all of them answering to their names at roll-call. I did better than that. I went on an old broken-down work that would not support the preacher, and in two years it was divided into three circuits. One part paid its pastor eighteen hundred dollars; another, twelve; third, don't know. So, young man, you see we did have a glorious time. I would not exchange it for a king's crown. You get seven hundred dollars a year, as much as I was promised in seven years, but did not get it. But, glory to God! I got better than all—hundreds of souls; and can count, at least, seven ministers gone out from my ministry. But hold on until our leading preachers have to step down and out from a thousand-dollar salary to a claim of forty, fifty or, it may be, a hundred!"

ONE OF THE OLD CORPS.

From the Work.

GREENSBURG, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: You ask us to write from the work. So, as I seldom write for the public eye, and as the scribes seem to be slow to begin their scribblings, I will say to those whom it may concern, that after some delay, caused by personal and family sickness, we loaded our wagons at our dear home at Centreville, Miss., and rolled out, on the twenty-seventh ultimo, for our new field of labor at Greensburg, La., reaching here on the twenty-eighth. The people here, being apprised of our afflictions and consequent indefinite delay, our arrival was wholly unexpected; so the usual and anticipated formal reception was not extended. Its equivalent was, however, soon met in the way of many kind expressions, both in word and action; though not in the form of a "parsonage storm," but in that of the more pleasant and healthy zephyrs of a sea-breeze, which continues to fan our larder, keeping it in good and healthy state.

We feel that we have truly "entered into other men's labors," and are reaping their fruits; for, in addition to a clever Methodist people, we find here a real Methodist parsonage—a plain, comfortable house, with all the necessary appendages most conveniently arranged, and furnished with plain furniture. So we conclude that our predecessors for the last decade or more have had this part of church work well in hand. The late incumbents, Bro. J. W. Ellison and his good wife, have left many legible footprints of true Methodism along these shores of our Zion. Prominent among the things that we find, that seem to be significant and suggestive to all parsonage tenants, are a yard tastefully arranged, and set in flowers and fruit trees, a hot-house well filled with the more delicate members of the floral family, winter vegetables in the garden, forage in the barn for the parsonage cow and calf, fire-wood in back yard, kindling and stove-wood under the shed, chickens in the poultry-yard, with one hen setting under the pulpit (though not in the church). Is that not orthodox?

But, stop! there is another side to this picture. And, would you believe it, that after all the good things they have left us, that they could be so cruel as actually to steal the people's hearts and carry them off with them! Yes, this is the real state of things. And still we have one glorious relief left us—the conscious fact that the Methodist heart is like an omnibus, "always room for another." Every time "the iron wheel" turns over, it expands and opens to receive the new-comer as the sent of God and the church. So, if we prove ourselves worthy, we may hope to find a lodgment also. But when we look out over the broad field, we are constrained to say, "Who is sufficient for these things?" Only think of it—seven churches, with seven hundred members, spread abroad over the whole of St. Helena parish, and the preacher down with rheumatism!—and you have the whole picture. Still we cherish hope of a better day. When we can get out to work, then we will remember the ADVOCATE. Pray for us.

P. HOWARD.

SUMMIT, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: I am indebted to the Lord for the good appointment he has given me through the Bishop and his Cabinet. With such appointments, I trust to keep off the superannuated list as long as I am able to travel. The munificent offer of our worthy publisher to the widows and orphans of deceased preachers and superannuated preachers touched a tender cord in my heart. Come, brethren, let us try to measure up to his liberal heart in getting the number he asks for. To do this is to help ourselves in many ways.

Wife, myself and a grandson are comfortably situated in our parsonage at Summit. The good brethren and sisters of Summit had a nice supper ready for us on our arrival—things new and nice, and provisions in the larder, and wood ready cut and in place, a new stable for the gospel horse—Frank—and buggy-house. They have given their pastor a good send-off. I have three churches—Summit, Bogue Chitto and Johnston; all on the railroad. I need all the locomotive power I can get; so I keep the horse and buggy to aid in pastoral work. I find my members, as a general thing, at all three of the churches ready for our work.

Bro. W. B. Lewis held my first Quarterly Conference at Bogue Chitto last Saturday and Sunday. He is the right man in the right place. As we had to give up our very efficient presiding elder—Bro. Weems—and it was rather hard to fill his place, we are glad we have Bro. Lewis in his place. He preached three gospel sermons to the edification of all present. We took up the collections ordered by the Conference, and cleared the decks for Bogue Chitto. Pastor and presiding elder received an amount on Saturday for their support. May the Lord bless you and the publisher in your work!

WATERFORD, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: The Lord, in his providence, has returned us to the same circuit, with this change in the name: from Holly Springs to Waterford. We have received many tokens of love and kindness already from our people, for which we feel very grateful. We had a nice Christmas tree at Waterford—thought to be worth about $300. We introduced the tree by a short talk about our precious Savior and his advent. The pastor and his family were very kindly remembered on this tree. We had another tree on the circuit which was quite a success also.

We have secured $20 50 to purchase us a bell for Waterford Church, and have sent for the same. Our congregations were large yesterday, as the Lord gave us a most beautiful day. We had a real spiritual day. But this is not uncommon, as we have his spiritual presence every day. We think the outlook is good for the present year on this work. We mean to look after the renewals and obtain new subscriptions for our Conference organ this year.

Yours, etc.,

W. M. ADAMS.

The Place of Christ in History.

The subject of the last of Dr. Fairbairn's Sunday evening addresses was "The Place of Christ in Universal History." He said we could form no true idea of Christ if we limited him to Judea or to the first century; we must look at him in his relations to the whole of history. In history the ultimate forces are the persons who realize ideas and create new conditions; and we shall find that of all who have shaped and guided history, the supreme person is Christ.

It has been said that the personal grandeur of Christ is better illustrated by the times that came after him than by the gospels themselves. The history after Christ is the best comment on his person. There entered into history a new and immense vehicle of moral force, which has remained constant, creating character, institutions, thought, motive, atmosphere, and society, all approximating to the original idea; and this vehicle or bearer of moral force was the person of Christ. Men who stood outside the circle of professed followers nevertheless appealed to Christ, and felt his pre-eminence. Goethe, who has originated the modern literature which seeks to comprehend the whole of life, was reluctant to believe there had been only one "bird of paradise," but when asked for instances of perfect morality, he could only point to Christ. Schiller, in poetical mood, regretted the decay of the old mythologies; but turning to the moral side of man's need in history, he declared holiness to be the supreme thing for man, and that that stood for all time incarnate in Christ. Strauss, when construing his abstract idea of humanity being the eternally generated Son of God into religious form, confessed that Christ stood alone in the religious history of the world. Renan, too, when he left his fanciful sentimentalism, confessed that Christ was the one author of a divine religion that left men nothing to do but follow in his footsteps.

Dr. Fairbairn then referred to the marvel that Christ should make men capable of believing in his resurrection, and thereby creating a religion that should move the world. Strange that Peter, the Galilean fisherman who was mocked even by a serving-maid for his provincialism, should be changed into Peter the apostle; and that Paul, who has been described as a bleareyed, ugly little Jew from Tarsus, mingling with tramps and artisans, should become the founder of a faith and the author of the epistles to the Romans and Corinthians. The New Testament literature was made by such men, yet it has stood up to these days of most fastidious criticism, still inspired and alone in its pre-eminence.

Christ created a spiritual religion, appointing no priest or priestly function except the priesthood of the collective society. This society grew against all opposition from ancient thought, civil power and social custom, and in 250 years had carried the world before it.

Another peculiarity of the religion was its universality. As no state or penal code has ever done, Christ changed sinners into saints; conspicuously with such as Paul, Augustine, Luther and Bunyan. In thus changing persons, Christ changed man. Another wonderful power in this society was its ability to change and purify itself, yet in all change remaining faithful to him and prospering in proportion to that faithfulness.

Christ made, it may be said, the great discovery of the commanding power that is in common human love. Previously the poets had praised it only as a sensuous thing; Christ made it a power constraining to righteousness. To make love perfect he became its object. To love him is to love universal man; not the liar in his lie, or the hypocrite in his hypocrisy, but the ideal, "the possible God in the actual devil." In the record of the progress of the world since Christ, there would be little left if we took out all that has resulted from a love of him.—London Christian World.

Historical Sketch of Japan.

BY M. METAUI, OF JAPAN.

Japan, once the unknown and far away, is now, as Griffis says, "your nearest western neighbor" across the Pacific highway of travel and commerce. Our countrymen live in your "great republic," study in your schools and colleges, hold commercial relations with your people, and are bound to you by many ties.

Our government was established two thousand five hundred and forty-eight years ago. In the middle ages our ancestors borrowed largely from China, language, letters, education, laws, politics, sciences, arts, and the accumulated treasures of Chinese civilization; but to-day we are entirely distinct from the Chinese, ethnologically, physically and morally.

Japan's political system was an absolute monarchy in the beginning, but gradually changed to the feudal system till about twenty years ago, when the government, which had passed into the hand of an usurper, was again restored to the emperor, who became really, as he had been nominally, the ruler of Japan. After the restoration of the Mikado to power, feudalism was abolished. But America's relations with Japan began before the restoration of our emperor. On the evening of July 7, 1853, a column of smoke clouded the sky over Yeddo Bay, and a huge American steamer anchored in the harbor of Uraga. Those who saw the fleet wondered at seeing mighty ships moving swiftly without the aid of wind, tide or oars. They fancied, as one of your writers has told you, that the western foreigner was not man, but half beast, half sorcerer, and had by his magic tamed a volcano, condensed its power in his ships, and controlled it at will. When the usurping general, called Shogun, signed the treaty with Perry, our country went wild with indignation; first, because this had been done without the emperor's consent, and, second, because it would bring the foreigner to our shores. The cry rang throughout the land, "Honor the emperor, and expel the foreigner." Civil war broke out; some of the best blood of the nation was shed, but from this struggle our civilization emerged triumphant, to enter upon a higher life.

The railroad and telegraph wire stretch through the valley, and over river and mountain in "New Japan." And we have an army and navy, with trained soldiers and strong ships, to defend our shores.

We have also local assemblies, and in 1890 a National Assembly is to be established, thus assuring greater liberty to the nation; while educational institutions and the press are preparing it for its political duties.

This is our present status; but unless our civilization advances to a higher plane of spiritual life, what can we hope for it except such corruption as destroyed ancient Greece and Rome?

In Christ and his pure gospel alone is our help. Christianity as taught by the Roman Catholic Church entered Japan early in the sixteenth century; but though the history of that church in Japan is one of intense interest, I can not dwell upon it in this article.

Thousands of Japanese accepted its creed with simple faith, to die, at last, the death of martyrs, and the religion of Christ seemed banished forever from our land. Not so, however; for two centuries later, in 1859, Protestant Christianity, as represented by the American Episcopal, the Presbyterian, and the Dutch Reformed Churches, entered our country to proclaim there the "kingdom of Heaven."

Government decrees would not allow the missionaries to preach the gospel publicly; and the people not only would not accept Christianity, but were hostile to the missionaries. Owing to these circumstances the Christian teachers were obliged to call to their own homes those who were hungering and thirsting after righteousness, to tell them the story of Jesus and his wonderful love.

In 1870 there were probably less than ten Protestant Christians in Japan, and it is said that these few disciples were poor, blind men and uneducated women; still they stood up for Jesus, bearing his "royal banner"—the vanguard of a Christian army. In 1880, ten years later, there were about five thousand Christians, I suppose, throughout the country; but these weak soldiers of the cross were bravely fighting, in the name of their Savior, with the enemies of the gospel. Though some were often cast down, the sound of victory was heard every day, and at last the cross of Jesus was firmly fixed on our shores, and the banner of salvation waved victoriously under oriental skies.

In 1887 the ranks had increased to twenty thousand professing Christians, with probably a Christian constituency of fifty thousand. The churches number two hundred and twenty-one; of these one hundred and forty-four are partly self-supporting, seventy-three entirely so. Contributions by Japanese Christians in 1887, for various purposes, reached the sum of $41,570.

Now thousands are giving their hearts to Christ, our Savior; teachers and missionaries are welcomed everywhere in Japan, and the people are earnestly seeking the truth. I believe that in a few years, all over the empire, in every city, town, village and hamlet, churches will be erected, (although, only thirty years ago, to preach the blessed gospel was prohibited), and all idolaters converted to Christianity, and all heathen temples swept away from our country. It is my personal belief that Japan will become the dominion of Christ within twenty-five years. Our national institutions and laws will be set upon the foundation of the blessed Bible, and mountain and valley throughout all Japan will echo the praise of "God our Father in heaven."

Soon may your stars and our sun, joined under the cross of Jesus, rule the night and day, and shine in the dark places of this world, until all lands that border the Asiatic sea, shall hail Jesus as a "Savior," and "crown him Lord of all."—Gospel in All Lands.

Religious Literature in the Home.

The following is from a sermon by Dr. G. H. Ide, pastor of Grand Avenue Church, Milwaukee, on a recent Sunday, in connection with a business-like effort made toward securing the Advance in every home:

"I think that we are unconsciously neglectful in this particular. There should be a Christian literature in each home. What is a Christian literature? It is a kind of literature which proceeds on the supposition that Christianity is true; that puts Christ at the head of all things, in heaven and earth, and makes him the goal of all true civilization and success. There are but few secular newspapers that rest on any such basis. You may find a sermon reported in them now and then, if there is some peculiarity in the theme, but when you turn to the editorial page, you may find the teaching of the sermon counteracted by the inculcation of aguosticism or some other skeptical philosophy. The secular newspaper is unreliable as a medium for imparting a knowledge of Christian work and influence.

"You will find people in the community who have the idea that the church is doing nothing of any moment for the renovation and uplifting of the world on its moral side. Where did they get this idea? They have had access to that kind of literature only, which is superficial and unsympathetic concerning the interests of the Christian Church. The church to-day is the conservator of all our highest concerns, national, social and domestic; but there are lots of people who have no conception of this fact. They think that a base-ball club takes the precedence of a church! The cause of this is largely due to the literature with which they have come in contact. The literature which they read says nothing about the church in any favorable mention, and so they conclude that its voice has ceased to make itself heard, and its life is well-nigh extinct.

"There are others who need to have their views broadened and deepened upon religious subjects. They do not appreciate the great schemes of Christian enterprise which have in view the extension of the kingdom of God on earth. Their point of view does not take in the whole field, does not sweep the whole firmament of light and truth, and so their vision fails to embrace the brightness and glory which is beyond. But few people keep up with the times in the Christian world. They are up in politics; up in commerce; up in material things; but behind in the affairs of religion. What is the present state of religion in the world? What are the signs of the times? What is the outlook? What are the achievements of Christianity in our own country and in other lands? Is the light spreading? How far has it spread? What are the reports from the frontier? What is the news that comes from over the sea? Is help needed at any point? Are the nations ripe for an onward movement? What questions break out of the sky, and reach our listening ears? How can we know what is going on unless we read? And how can we read unless we have a literature? And how can we have a literature unless we take the papers? And how can we have papers unless we subscribe for them? As a pastor, I want to see Christian papers and magazines in all our homes. I shall have a much easier time then, in some respects. You will not only get preaching on Sundays, but you will get the same during the week; for I look upon every religious newspaper and magazine as a preacher in the best sense. They are able to supplement the regular preacher, and furnish the details which would be difficult to supply in any other way. Every Christian should go out into the world armed with religious knowledge. Paul says that he should wear the girdle of truth. How can he put that girdle about him unless he keeps himself abreast of the progress that points to the ultimate triumph of Christ on earth? I fear there are many families in our congregations which have neither a religious paper or magazine in their homes.

"Those are good Christmas presents which take the form of a subscription for a religious family newspaper."—Advance.

FILL YOUR STATION.—If your station is a humble one, fill it to the best of your ability, and that is all that will be required of you. God only wants now and then a Paul, a Luther, a Calvin and a Moody; but he always wants, and the world always wants, a multitude of men and women ready to bury their lives in the tunnels and mines of society, away from the gaze of those who seek a less noble and a less enduring work. To a vast number of such self-denying, humble workers, like those "of whom the world was not worthy," the state, the church and society are most deeply indebted to-day; and though their names are unknown and their deeds are unsung, yet in the world to come they may have a fuller joy and a more blessed inheritance than many who are occupying a more conspicuous place, and seem to be doing a larger work in the world.—Christian Inquirer.

Beware of counterfeits. Salvation Oil will cure your aches and pains. Price 25 cents.

It is important to check a cough at once. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup will do so. 25 cts.

The cause of Christ needs wise workers. There is a best way to do everything, though it be but to boil an egg, as Emerson somewhere suggests. If slip-shod work is not good enough for yourself, it is not good enough for God. We should realize that it is not only our duty to do what God sets us to do, but to do it in the very best possible way. There is no excuse for ignorance where intelligence is possible. The boy or girl who has the advantages of school has no excuse for using bad grammar. The Christian who can sit at Jesus' feet and learn of him has no excuse for ignorance of his will and way. We want to reach the day of development when it shall be considered a disgrace for the owner of brains not to use them, and in every part of the important work of life. To do less than one's best is a crime against oneself and one's Maker.—Standard.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

From a Prominent Minister.

I am fifty-five years of age.

Half of my life I have been a sufferer from a disordered liver, and the last three years a victim of that dread disease, consumption; was reduced to eighty-seven pounds, a mere skeleton, helpless, pronounced beyond recovery by my physicians, and given up to die by friends. In order to gratify my loving wife, I began taking Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, which is a cure for consumption, and to-day I am healthy, and able to indulge myself in preaching the gospel from the sacred desk. RUFUS FIGH,

Cor. Pine and Crockett Sts.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, July 12, 1888.

Dr. R. M. Davis, County Line, Miss., reports having cured a cancer of long standing that years of the most skillful medical practice had failed to benefit at all. Besides, we have numerous assurances of cures effected in Asthma, Bilious Colic, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Diphtheria, and Malarial Fever.

Rev. W. A. Mason, pastor of the Baptist Church, Crystal Springs, Miss., writes under date of July 2nd:

At your request, I will say that for about eight years I have been suffering with a sore on the back of my neck which was caused by the rubbing of a mole by my shirt collar. It gradually spread till larger than a quarter-dollar. About six weeks ago, I commenced the use of Microbe Killer. From the very beginning I felt an improvement, and it has gone on steadily till now; though I have been very irregular in taking the remedy. I am satisfied that directions closely followed would effect a speedy permanent cure.

W. A. MASON.

I gladly testify that, after suffering with a severe case of malarial fever, I tried Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, and am now perfectly well. I strongly recommend it to suffering humanity.

To Whom It May Concern:

This is to certify that after taking one jug of Microbe Killer I was permanently cured of a severe attack of bronchitis and pulmonary inflammation, said illness having resisted all methods of medical treatment.

I cheerfully recommend Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer as being more than is claimed for it.

Briefs.

If you know a family in your charge, brother pastor, where this ADVOCATE does not go, could you do that family a better service, or one that would last longer, than to persuade the head of it to subscribe for the paper?

Stanley has been definitely heard from at last. A letter has been received at Brussels from him, dated Bumba, August 17. Though old, it is really the latest reliable news from the intrepid explorer; and all the information it gives us, that Stanley was at the above place, and well at the date given.

The Sunday-school is a very important part of the church, and pastors and superintendents should pray for special wisdom in selecting teachers. The infant class is the most important part of the Sunday-school, and requires the best teacher that can be found, because there is the proper beginning-place for nurture for the church. Lessons learned there are ineffaceable. Be wise, oh! ye pastors and superintendents, in filling these important places.

The disturbances at Wahalak, Miss., still continue. Lawless people seem bent on defying all law; whipping people and driving them from their homes. Gov. Lowry has instructed the sheriffs of Kemper and Noxubee counties to call out sufficient force to put down the lawlessness and bring the offenders to justice, promising all the aid in his power. Let the same promptness to put down such barbarism be shown in every such case, and the trouble will soon cease.

Thirty-one persons in Bath, Ohio, purchased tickets in the Louisiana Lottery to the amount of sixty-two dollars; and when the drawing came off, they were winners to the amount of twenty dollars! When people are assured by repeated trials that they can win nothing at this lottery, why do they persist in experimenting? Louisiana is the reproach of the world on account of this lottery, and yet it is kept up by persons beyond her boundaries. The abomination was foisted upon us by political trickery and bribery, and it is kept upon us by the covetousness of the people in other States. If left for us to support, it would surely die!

The General Missionary Committee of the Methodist Episcopal Church, at its recent session in New York City, passed this resolution:

Resolved, That each Bishop and each member of the General Committee be requested to make it convenient and part of his plan of work during the current fiscal year to attend and speak at twelve district missionary conventions.

If this resolution is carried into effect, there will be held about six hundred district missionary conventions during the year at which a Bishop or a member of the General Committee will speak on the subject of missions. There is nothing like rallying the people at such mass meetings. We might adopt something of that kind to our advantage. Our people need to be aroused, too, and we believe such meetings would be a means of arousing them.

Thoughts on Preaching.

These are the days in which "knowledge is increased." The ratio of general intelligence is much greater now than it has ever been. The increase of knowledge and intelligence is awakening thought in every direction. There are far more persons thinking now-a-days than ever before. Still it is true now, as it has ever been, the earnest thinkers are the leaders in every department of life. The preacher is called to be a leader, and, if he fulfills his call, he must be a thinker. Now, thinking is a very serious business, and it is very hard work. Emerson asked the question: "What is the hardest task in the world?" And his laconic reply to his own question was: "To think." It is much easier to skim along a placid surface and pluck floating lilies, than it is to put on the diver's helmet and go down into the depths after the pearls. To think to purpose requires the unsparing use of our best abilities, and demands the unstinted expenditure of our best energies.

When we reflect upon the object of preaching, that it is for the salvation of spiritual beings, any one of whom is of more value than the whole material universe, we see that the preacher has an incentive to think that other men do not have.

Not long since, the Wesleyan Christian Advocate spoke of "much random talk that is called preaching." The use of such a phrase is justified by the fact that a good deal of the preaching of the day shows a lack of deep and earnest thinking. If a man thinks, he will hardly talk at random. We know that it is the deliberate judgment of the pew that there is a good deal of such "random talk" in our pulpits. It avails nothing to say that the pew can not judge of the quality of a sermon. The preaching is done to the pew, and the pew is a pretty good judge as to the effect of the preaching upon itself; and when it says that much of the preaching is poor in quality, it is time for the pulpit to seek for the causes of that poverty and endeavor to apply the remedy.

When a man is called of God to preach the gospel, and is in conscious contact with the Divine Spirit, there can be but one cause for poor preaching, and that is, superficial thinking along the lines of gospel facts and truths. If a man don't know these, he can't preach, no matter how learned he may be in other things. The facts and truths of religion constitute the preacher's capital. They must be the essentials of his knowledge. Other kinds of knowledge are of value to him only as they can, by the processes of mental and spiritual assimilation, be saturated with the spirit of the gospel. We are getting out of patience with the never-ceasing exhortations to the preachers to learn everything. We say, "No; don't do it!" The "intermedlers with all knowledge" somehow don't round-out well. The habit that seems to be coming in of lugging everything into the pulpit is creating a sort of preaching that is making infidels by scores! Men and women go to church to hear the grand facts and consoling truths of religion proclaimed as the messages of a loving Father to his heart-hungry children, and they are treated to a "discussion" of a subject that has wearied their patience during the whole week in the newspapers and magazines, and they go away from the house of God unfed, disappointed and disgusted. Of all the travesties in the world, "discussions" in the pulpit take the palm. And the idea of discussing truth, God's propositions, is an absurdity. Nothing can be discussed without throwing doubt upon it. When the hearer listens to a preacher trying to prove the truth of his message, the wickedness of his heart causes him to incline to the other side of the question, and then doubts begin to come in and to grow. The preacher's business is to proclaim the truth, not to discuss it.

Of all men in the world the preacher needs to be a specialist. He is called and qualified to do one thing. His Maker and Master says to him: "Preach the gospel!" That is his only work. He is to know the gospel, and then proclaim it to his fellows. To know it, he must think himself down into its lowest depths and up into its loftiest heights. Gospel themes are the greatest of all themes! Gospel facts are the grandest facts in the universe. Though they appear plain and simple, when earnestly studied they are seen to be pervaded through and through, and permeated in every direction with the nature and character of God. The simplest gospel fact is a record of God's presence at that point. The simplest gospel truth is a revelation of God in the exhaustless riches of his grace. The truth and the fact are to be studied until this grand discovery bursts upon the soul. When that happens, the preacher has got hold of something to preach. We too seldom study our text for the purpose of finding "God in Christ, reconciling the world unto himself," in that text; and yet that is the gospel that underlies all Scripture. Sometimes the very simplicity of the themes and facts causes us to pass over them in a superficial way, when, if we would look closely, we would see God beaming upon us out of that simplicity. When he shines upon us out of our texts, we can not preach otherwise than with power. The truth is, Christ is at the bottom of every fact and theme of Scripture, but it takes earnest and thorough and, sometimes, painful thinking to get down to that point; but the freshness and power that come over a man who has got down to where Christ is compensates him richly for the toil of the passage, and furnishes him grandly for his pulpit effort. He who halts in his thinking before he reaches that point may give his hearers an "interesting discourse," but it will not be a proclamation of truth filled with the throbbing life and intense love of Christ.

Comparative Growth of Populations and Religions.

We have been much interested in two articles on this subject in the January number of the Gospel in All Lands. The comparison is made between the years 1786 and 1886. In regard to population, the increase in China, Japan, Korea and their dependencies in 100 years has been, in round numbers, 157,500,000; in the Greek Church Powers, 90,400,000; in the Roman Catholic Powers, 72,900,000; and in the Protestant Church Powers, 311,700,000. There has been no increase in populations belonging to Mohammedan Powers. There has been a decrease in nations holding Polytheism from 70,000,000 to zero, and in those holding Fetichism from 175,000,000 to 130,000,000. So that the populations of these various countries have increased in one hundred years about 600 millions. The population of the world, then, has increased at the rate of 6 millions a year. The population at this present time is reckoned by the best authorities to be about 1,430 millions.

The prevalent forms of religion are: Christianity, Mohammedanism, Buddhism, Hinduism, Judaism and Parseeism. Christianity is seen under three forms: Protestantism, Roman Catholicism and the Greek Church. Protestantism claims 130 millions of adherents; Roman Catholicism, 190 millions; and the Greek Church, 75 millions—making 395 millions of adherents to Christianity. Mohammedanism claims 185 millions of adherents; Buddhism, 420 millions; Hindnism, 190 millions; Judaism, 7 millions, Parseeism, less than one million; and the idolators are estimated at 230 millions. From these figures these facts are brought out: Protestantism is the profession of 1 in 11 of our race; Romanism, of 1 in 7⅔; the Greek religion, of 1 in 17; Mohammedanism, of 1 in 7½; Buddhism, of 1 in 3½; Hinduism, of 1 in 7 5·6; Polytheism, of 1 in 5¾. Buddhism has three times as many adherents as Protestantism; Polytheism has twice as many, and Romanism, Mohammedanism and Hinduism are each numerically stronger than it is. Buddhism numbers as many disciples as all forms of Christianity united. Thus it appears that Christianity is received by less than one third of the human family. Thus more than 1,000 millions of our race are yet without a knowledge of the true God and his blessed gospel. Multiply the population of the United States by 17, and we will have the number of heathen in the world at the present time. This is an appalling picture. But there is a gleam of light even in these figures.

Counting from the day that Luther nailed his 95 theses on the door of the Church of All Saints, at Wittenberg, to the end of 1888 is just 371 years. At that date there was not a Protestant in the world; now there are 130 millions. This is an increase of over 350,000 for each year of the 371 years. No other form of religion can show such a rate of increase. The rate of increase is growing with every year; and though the odds are largely against her, Christianity has started out to conquer the whole earth, and by the gospel of Christ's love she will do it; and let every reader of the ADVOCATE lay to a helping hand. God has said: "As I live, my glory shall fill the earth."

The Parker Loan Fund.

We are indebted to Bro. I. Z. T. Morris, the secretary, for a copy of the Minutes of the last session of the Texas Conference. The Minutes are in good style, and conveniently arranged for reference. We call the attention of the Louisiana Methodists to the action taken by the Texas Conference on the subject of the Parker Loan Fund:

Resolved, That this Conference will unite with the Louisiana Conference in the effort now being made by that Conference to raise a loan fund of, at least, $5,000, to be known as the Parker Loan Fund, and designed as a memorial of Bishop Linus Parker, deceased, and to be paid to and administered by the Board of Church Extension, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, as are its other named loan funds under the provisions of the Discipline and the loan fund rules of said Board.

Resolved, That the Board of Church Extension of this Conference be, and it is hereby authorized to provide for a canvass of our territory by the secretary of the General Board, and one or more of the Bishops during the ensuing year, and that Bishop Duncan and Dr. Morton are hereby invited to make said canvass.

Resolved, That our Conference Board is hereby empowered to make such other arrangements as may be necessary to carry out the design of the Conference in this matter, and secure the raising of said Parker Loan Fund.

This movement, inaugurated by the Louisiana Conference a little more than a year ago, is now taking definite shape, and the promise of success is hopeful. As we have already informed our readers, over one thousand dollars were pledged at our last session, and Bro. Morris writes us a private note, saying that he intends to start the proposition in the Texas Conference to be one of ten to give a hundred dollars to this fund. When he gets his hundred, we hope the brethren over there will keep the proposition going on up into the thousands. Meantime, we hope our own Board will provide for a canvass of Louisiana for the same fund. Dr. Morton and Bishop Galloway, on a canvass in Mississippi for the Paine Loan Fund, raised between 7,000 and 10,000 dollars. We do not see why more may not be raised in Texas and Louisiana for the Parker Loan Fund. It is the most beautiful and lasting monument that can be reared to the memory of our sainted Bishop; and his memory is worthy of the most beautiful and lasting monument that can be reared. We trust that every Louisiana Methodist will contribute to the building up of this fund to proportions that will make its influence felt all through the coming years of Methodism in the Southwest.

Constitutional Amendment Needed.

The newspapers and the lawyers are now discussing a question of vital importance to the whole country—the question of marriage and divorce. When we consider that the family relation is the most sacred relation on earth, and that the home, which that relation creates is the foundation, and only foundation, of good society and good government, and that both the family and home have their origin in marriage properly guarded by law, we at once see the necessity of some uniform law on that subject, which shall govern alike all the citizens of this great country. The diversity of State laws on this subject has brought the country to a condition of things that is deplorable and wicked in the extreme. What is a crime in one State may be lawful wedlock in another. Can anybody give a reason why "marriage should not be one and the same, or why divorce should not be one and the same all over the country"? The New York Herald, discussing this subject, says:

The evils that result from these loose and conflicting laws are simply national perils. They are rapidly increasing, and must continue to increase until checked.

The only remedy is a uniform law—one system of marriage and divorce from ocean to ocean, from lakes to gulf. Such a law can come only from Congress. To enable that body to enact it, the Constitution must be amended.

An amendment requires a two-thirds' vote of Congress and the approval of three-fourths of the States. Let it be carried through Congress at once and submitted to the States for ratification.

Congress is now empowered to pass uniform laws relating to money, mails, commerce, bankruptcy, naturalization and copyrights. Are matters of trade more important than the relation which touches the very foundation of our social institutions? Is the shop of more concern to the nation than the home—pursuit of gain more sacred than purity of domestic life?

Let the press and the pulpit of the country arouse the people to the danger that threatens them. Let every State Legislature demand of Congress the constitutional amendment so essential to the national welfare.

The continued use of certain members of the body creates ease in their use and development in strength. A long use of certain mental faculties develops facility in use and growth. So in the faculties of the soul. The reverse process is also just as true. Failure in use begets weakness and death. In spiritual life failure to use the soul faculties generates backsliding, and backsliding glides imperceptibly into spiritual death. How many thousands are using their physical and mental powers to good advantage, and, at the same time, are failing to use the faculties of their souls, and are slowly dying the death? Reader, how are you using your soul powers?

Notes.

The Presbyterian is a paper published in Philadelphia. The subscription price is $2 65, less 65 cents to ministers. At the head of the obituary column is this sentence:

"All obituaries over three lines to be paid for in advance at the rate of ten cents for every six words."

There are seven obituaries in the issue from which the above words are clipped, and the seven make just seventeen lines. That has some resemblance to Scripture obituaries.

No doubt many of our readers have made new resolutions for the government of the conduct during the present year of grace. A valued exchange gives the following list of things to make better this year:

(1) Yourself; (2) your home; (3) your neighborhood; (4) your church; (5) the mid week prayer meeting; (6) your social gatherings and entertainments; (7) your Sunday-school; (8) the value of your own personal influence; (9) the prevailing public opinion; (10) to some extent at least, the world itself.

One of the best recipes for a happy year is contained in the following extract from an exchange. Will not every reader of the ADVOCATE commit it to memory and practice it daily?

Pleasant smiles; gentle tones; cheery greetings; tempers sweet under a headache, or a business care, or the children's noise; the ready bubbling over of thoughtfulness for one another—and habits of smiling, greeting, forbearing, thinking in these ways, it is these above all else which make one's home "a building of God, a house not made with hands."

It has always seemed to us that the prayer meeting is a most valuable means of grace. Coming in the middle of the week, when we begin to grow weary with the struggle, it has strengthened the soul just when it needed power. By some it is considered a pretty good spiritual thermometer, showing the real condition of the spiritual state of church members. By another it is spoken of on this wise:

You can tell a real bee, as some one has said, from the cleverest bee of artificial make by simply putting a drop of honey down in front. The real bee will go for the honey. You can tell a true spiritual Christian from one for convenience or "for revenue only" by just dropping a prayer meeting down in the forefront. Other things being equal, the genuine Christian will go to the prayer-meeting.

How is it, reader? Do you go for the honey? It will do your pastor good, and your family good, and your neighbors good, and your own soul good to be a regular prayer-meeting goer.

The Southwestern Methodist, in a ringing article which discusses one of the greatest of church problems, says this:

We believe the best thing to do is lay upon the hearts of our church members the needs of the unfortunate, and the duty we owe even to the vicious and the vile, and inspire that missionary spirit that seeks the poor. We meet in elegant churches and discuss this problem of the poor when the poor are not sought by us, and are not even welcome in our congregations. If our own members take us to be in earnest in our pleading for the poor, and go out to seek them, and are found laboring in missions, or holding prayer meetings Sunday evenings, they are, perhaps, reminded that it were better to be in their pews at the church service.

We can not substitute any sort of machinery for personal sympathy, nor any effectual methods to take the place of God's spirit in its operations upon the heart. What we can do by public movements should be done, but the greatest and best work is after all, just that quiet work of faith and love to which the way is always open.

There never was such a demand for ministers of the gospel as there is today, and the burden of the cry is for ministers of a peculiar kind. We clip the following note from the Congregationalist with the hope that our young ministers, as well as those who are candidates for the ministry, will give it a prayerful pondering:

We have been specially impressed lately with the almost uniform demand on the part of churches for the minister who shall have attractive qualities as a speaker, such as will draw in a congregation. After making sure that a man preaches the real gospel, the next query is almost certain to be, Can he interest and hold the people? This demand seems to come both from city and from country and from the small churches as well as the large ones. Good pastoral and social qualities are desired, of course, but the most imperative demand of all seems to be for a man with positive pulpit power. The question is not whether he has taken the fourth year in the seminary, or even the full regular course, or whether he is familiar with the higher criticism, or what he knows Hebrew and Greek thoroughly, but rather whether the common people will hear him gladly. Young men who have the ministry in mind will do well to make note of these facts and give them due weight in their preparatory work; for while some may thus be turned away into another calling, other young men who have gifts as thinkers and speakers may feel a new inspiration to fit for the ministry, even though they can not take a full course of study.

Personals.

We are indebted to Dr. Witherspoon for an invitation to the Upper Bethel, to-morrow night (Friday), to hear a lecture by Rev. David Sessums, on "Agnostic Fiction and the Infidel Biographers of Christ." The progam has this significant item: "Lecture, one hour." The admission fee is fifteen cents.

The New York World has dispatched the celebrated Thomas A. Stevens, who made a tour of Asia on a bicycle, to Africa to look up Stanley and some other things in the "Dark Continent."

The last Interior gives its recipe for a quick reformation of the world. It says, "The quickest way to reform the world is to go in for a thorough cleaning up of one's own neighborhood."

Bishop Galloway passed through our city last week from the Florida Conference. We did not see him. We remind our readers that the Bishop has several letters about Mexico and some other matters in store for them

A private note from Rev. Wilson Moore, of our Conference, says he is now in Monticello, Ark., on leave of absence for his health. We trust our young brother will find entire restoration.

A dispatch from Arcadia, La., last week, announced that about 100 families of immigrants had arrived there within a week, and as many more were expected within the next week.

We have received an invitation and ticket of admission to the Florida International and Semi-Tropical Exposition, which opens at Ocala, Fla., January 29, and closes May 1. Our thanks are hereby tendered to George W. Wilson, president, and J. O. Clarke, secretary, of the Exposition Association.

A brother, who this year occupies an entirely new field, writes to us: "I am deeply in sympathy with your work and will get every subscriber I can. I see no reason in the world why 10,000 subscribers may not easily be gotten for so excellent a paper as our ADVOCATE." That expression of sympathy cheers us. If the preachers will work heartily, the 10,000 will be reached, and thou the paper will be "more excellent" than it is now!

Don't forget the request of the publisher to send him on postal card, sent you for the purpose, the names of the postoffices within your work.

We see that the editor of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE has been treated to a new and handsome beaver overcoat, and now he says that he needs a slick silk hat to go with his overcoat. When the new hat is secured, Bro. Carter intimates that he will be the best-looking editor in the church. We suggest that some one send him the hat; for we are certain that he needs all the improvement that a new coat and hat can give him.—Alabama Advocate.

Bro. McCoy "slipped up" that time. We said not the "best-looking," but "the most distinguished-looking editor in the church." That word may look either way. And we have received the hat!

Postal Card Reports.

—Mrs. A. Lou Edgar writes from Waynesboro, Miss., January 14: "Enclosed please find $5, as proposed, to purchase an organ for the church at Nantziang. Thanks to you for publishing my letter, and that of Mrs. Wilson, by way of emphasis to mine. Please accept my best wishes and best efforts for the circulation of the ADVOCATE."

—Rev. A. T. Galloway writes from Bellevue, La., January 13, 1889: "Preacher and people are at work in good earnest. The good people of Bellevue, where we have but twenty-seven members, and but few people in all, but harmony, gave the occupants of the parsonage a pleasant surprise in the way of a pounding on the eleventh. So many good and wise things were brought—supplies for the temporal wants. We appreciate them for their material worth, but, most of all, as tokens of the esteem and sympathy of these good people. How these things draw and bind us to them! How they lighten and cheer and brighten! How they help the preacher to bear his burden and do his work. God bless those people!"

—Rev. J. W. Malone, writing from Minter City, Miss., January 15, says: "I am sent this year to Minter City and Strathmore, two churches on the Talahatchie river. This is my first appointment in the 'bottom.' The weather so far has been very fine, so I have had opportunity both to preach and see. The land is most certainly the richest of the rich, and I have found the people the cleverest of the clever. In addition to being warmly received and having every need supplied on my arrival, the first Quarterly Conference, on last Saturday, assessed $1,000 for my support, with the assurance that every cent of it will be paid. May this auspicious beginning be but the prelude to a happy and prosperous year! I hope to do a good work for the ADVOCATE in my new field."

—Rev. W. Wimberly writes thus from Donaldsonville, La: "We are moving off well with the work on this charge. One new Sunday-school has been organized; twelve new members received into the church; some missionary money collected, and a fine outlook for building a Methodist Church at Bayou Goula. My first subscription was a round hundred-dollar bill. You may be called on to dedicate another church before September on my work. Consider yourself invited to preach the dedication sermon. If my health improves, and it has for the last three months, the church will be built and paid for before our next Conference. My faith is unwavering, my charge is strung, and I expect to do great things for God and the church this year. Oh, for a baptism of the Holy Ghost all over our Conference!"

FUTURE PROBATION EXAMINED. By Rev. William DeLoss Love. 12 mo, cloth, pp. 332. Price, $1 50. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

The author's purpose is to disprove the dogma of after-death probation. In the discussion of this subject he takes in the status of infants, condition of the heathen, intermediate state, resurrection of the dead, day of judgment, destiny of the wicked, etc. As usage determines the meaning of language, the author has evinced profound research in collating a great mass of testimony, bearing on these points, from the four following sources: (1) Christ, the great Teacher; (2) the inspired apostles; (3) uninspired writers before Christ; (4) the early Christian fathers. This Patristic testimony alone is well worth the price of the book. The work belongs to the realm of dogmatic theology, and some of its positions are debatable. But every Bible student can afford to examine both sides of so vital a question.

Adriance's article on The Child at the Family Altar, are each full of important, suggestive, timely thoughts worthy of very serious consideration. The Editorials on The Broad Range of the Gospel and on Gospel Duties show the wide latitude of pulpit teaching. All departments are well filled. Yearly, $2 50. Clergy, $2. Single copies, 25 cents.

—The Sidereal Messenger. If any of our readers are interested in the study of the heavens, we suppose this monthly will be a good periodical to read. It can be had for $2 a year. W. W. Payne, Carleton College Observatory, Northfield, Minn.

—Wide Awake, for January, is the New Year's number, and is full of good things which will delight all our little cousins. The adventures of David Vane and David Crane are continued. There are also Chapters III. and IV. of Five Little Peppers Midway. The Legend of William Tell is specially interesting. A new department called, Men and Things, has been added which will give an added interest to this popular young people's monthly. D. Lothrop Company, Boston. Price, $2 40.

—The Gospel in All Lands. The January number of this missionary monthly is decidedly the best we have seen lately. The articles are all timely. The Missionary Ships is a very interesting paper, giving the picture and history of each ship that has gone into missionary service. Religions Affecting National Progress, and Religious Condition of the World, are articles to be closely studied. They contain valuable information. The What and Why of Missions. The Missionary Spirit. Religions Outlook of the World, are all papers of value. This is the organ of the Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, published at 805 Broadway, New York. Price, $1 50.

The Quiver, for February. Christian Work Among the Cree Indians, is the title of the opening article, and this is followed by A Sermon on Salt, by the Rev. Michael Eastwood. And, then, we have a paper of purely theological nature on God's Preventing Goodness. Santa Claus at Clifton Cottage, is a very pretty story, which is followed by a paper, on The Joy of Christ. Prof. Church's thrilling papers, To the Lions, are continued. Prof. Blaikie writes of Presbyterians in Council. There is an illustrated paper on Some Little-Known Biblical Treasures, and a bundle of Short Arrows of more than usual interest. Cassell & Co., New York, 15 cents a number, $1 50 a year, in advance.

—Boston Musical Herald, for January, besides other good things in the musical art, has an appreciative article on that prince of music publishers, Oliver Ditson, lately deceased. There is a paper on, The Adaptation of Tunes to Hymns, which contains some ideas that ministers and choirs ought to read. There is also a fine tune set to Thomas Moore's hymn:

"Thou art, oh, God, the life and light
Of all this wondrous world we see."

Musical Herald Company, Franklin Square, Boston. Price, ten cents a number.

—The January Home Maker sustains the high character achieved by the former numbers of this new monthly. The different departments are well filled with choice matter, suitable for developing a real home. We commend the Home Maker to all our households. Edited by Marion Harland. Published by the Home-Maker Company, New York. Price $2 a year; 30 cents a number.

PAMPHLETS.

—The Sign of the Times. This is an address delivered at the First Methodist Church in Chicago, under the auspices of the Western Society for Psychical Research, by Prof. Elliot Coues, M. D. Religio-Philosophical Publishing House, Chicago. Price, fifteen cents.

—The Coming Slavery, The Sins of Legislators, and, The Great Political Superstition, by Herbert Spencer. Humboldt Publishing Company, New York. Price, fifteen cents.

Encouraged.

The publisher here acknowledges the many letters and words of encouragement he is daily receiving, and begs to assure the writers that he values these good wishes and benedictions more than money. These letters of kindly words are invariably accompanied with new subscribers or renewals for the ADVOCATE, which means greater prosperity for the ADVOCATE and help for the orphans and veterans of God's church.

Make an early start, brethren; let there be no disappointment at Conference when the publisher is expected to divide the $2,000 among the three Conferences. Give him the 10,000 subscribers, and he will not fail on his part. Begin early. Do not put the claims of the ADVOCATE off until the middle or last of the year. Send in the new subscribers at once.

Important Notice.

All applications for aid to the General Board of Church Extension must be on file in our office on April 1, 1889. They can not be tabulated so as to give a full and fair hearing to each in less time than ten days, and hence the rule of the Board, which is inexorable, and will be rigidly adhered to.

Blanks for applications for help, by gift or loan, for churches or parsonages, can be had free by addressing

DAVID MORTON, Secretary.

That Organ.

MR. EDITOR: I noticed Mrs. Edgar's letter in ADVOCATE, of last week, and write to say that the ladies of the North Mississippi Conference are raising money to buy that organ. Mrs. Fant, of Holly Springs, wrote to us, saying they had raised fifteen dollars at Holly Springs for that purpose. We expect to send on twenty dollars, which will include a contribution from the juveniles.

We have not heard from other societies, but do not doubt that they will follow the good example set by Holly Springs and Greenville.

Respectfully yours,
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY,
Greenville Aux.

Notice.

By this time each preacher knows the amount of his educational collection. Please collect the money at once, and send to Rev. T. K. Fnunt LeRoy, treasurer, Ruston, La. Send by registered letter or by postoffice money order. Do not wait till the close of the year. The entire amount is already appropriated and should go at once into the designed channel.

J. A. PARKER,
Pres't Board of Education, La. Conf.

The New York Herald seems to have sharp eyes, as witness the following:

The clergyman sees more of the under than of the upper side of human experience. If there is a skeleton in any family, it is always exhibited in his presence; any fond, it is generously bestowed on his attention. His memory is simply a museum of bric-a-brac, rare specimens of monstrosities, dwarfed, twisted, broken hopes, and an assortment of miseries which would drive most men into the madhouse. He is the honey that attracts all the bores and nuisances within the radius of a day's travel. New schemes for redeeming the world in twenty-four hours; double-back-action, patent-lever reforms; spiritual crankism in its infinite variety of shapes, each more stupid than the last; revelations by people who were foreordained to turn the world upside down, and who want to begin the work next Sunday in that minister's pulpit—these are only specimens of the ugly, outrageous, bungling matters with which he has to deal.

Prevent Attacks of Fever.

We ask but a glance at this, and it will pay any sufferer from liver complaint, enlarged spleen or ague cake, bilious affections of any kind, deranged secretions, prostration from dissipation, constipation, dropsy, or any affections where liver, bowels, blood and stomach are involved. A guaranteed cure for all this class of diseases is offered in J. & G. Maguire's Cundurango. Doctors are astonished and invalids delighted.

Publisher's Department.

Notice.

If this notice reaches the eye of any preacher who has not received a circular letter from the publisher, enclosing a postal card for reply, it is because of some failure in the address or mails; and the publisher would be pleased to know of such.

Respectfully,
J. G. GRANT,
Publisher.

Our Young People.

EARN IT.

Of course you are proud that your fathers were good:
'Tis a pleasure to know they were great
In the field, on the bench, or in science or art,
Or as leaders in matters of state.

But we all should remember our ancestors' fame
Is not for their children to wear;
To the fame of the great man the family name
Is the only legitimate heir.

The fame that is yours is the fame you have won;
If you have not won it yet, look ahead,
But don't claim an honor because you're the son
Of ancestors centuries dead

Of proud ones who live on the fame of their sires
Examples in plenty are found:
Like the turnip, and parsnip, they seem not to know
That the best of them lies underground.

Look ahead to the future—the past is not yours;
For your prize trust the future alone.
The fame of the past is another's reward;
Make the yield of the present your own.

Inherited titles of honor are vain,
In the heat of fame's handicap chase
The plain man looks forward, the noble looks back
And oftentimes loses the race.

Look forward, toil onward, and when in the end
Well-merited honors you've won,
Be proud that your claim to the prize did not lie
In being a somebody's son.

—Harper's Young People.

Let every one of our little cousins read this, and try to profit by it:

Bantam Show.

You can make all the show that is necessary, provided you have something in you in the way of a manly or womanly mind and heart that is fit to make a show with. When I lived in the country I was very fond of chickens, and took care to get quite a variety of choice kinds—leghorns, brahmas, and other kinds whose names are familiar to poultry-dealers—and among them all was one little bantam. It never was more than half a chicken—you would have had to put it on a cricket before it would have stood as high as the rest—and even when it grew up it was nothing but a bantam; in fact, it did not grow up much—even when it was two years old you could almost have put it into the little egg-shell that it first hatched out of. And yet that little bantam would make more fuss and parade about scratching, about flapping its wings, and about crowing, than all the brahmas and cochins in the whole hen-yard put together.

So you see that what we are thinking about is not your trying to make a greater flourish than other boys and girls; flourish is cheap. Did you ever happen to have among your playthings a little drum? Do you know why it is so easy to get so much noise from a little drum? Because it is hollow—nothing inside of it. Big drums are made on the same principle. What we want, then, is not the show and flourish and noise, but we want that by the time you get to be old enough to do much of anything, there should be great quantities of manly or womanly stuff in you that shall make you able to do it well and handsomely. You can not do something if you have nothing to do it with. Only God can make something out of nothing; you can not.

Those third-rate big brothers of his could club together and put little Joseph in a pie; but in the long run he beat the whole of them, and goverued the whole great country of Egypt, while they were watching cows, shearing sheep and tending asses in miserable little Goshen. And that was not because Joseph was "lucky," but because, whenever a chance came, he had already gotteu a good "ready" inside so that he could take hold of the chance and make the most of it.

My little friend, if you are going to do a good thing in the world, and stand up head and shoulders above the meaningless crowd around you, you have got to work for it. There is no luck about it. If you want to be lazy and just drift along; be taken care of; lean on your father and mother while they live, and then lean on the money they leave behind when they die; one of a crowd, sheep among the sheep—why, then, I suppose you will. But if this is your style, may the Lord pity you!

There ought a great many grand men and grand women to come out of this congregation, and you can not be a grand man when you are forty or fifty unless you begin to be a grand little man when you are a youngster. If, like Joseph, you are able to do something large for the world when you get grown up, it will be because, like Joseph, you began to get the stuff together while you were growing up. If your father goes about to build him a large brick house, you know he will have to get together a great many little bricks before he can build it. So if you are going to do a great, noble work, you will have to be a great noble man or woman in order to do it; and such greatness and nobleness have to be built up out of a great many littles, just as your father's house has to be built out of a great many thousands and thousands of bricks. Great words and great deeds can no more be done by a man that from his youth up has been lazy and shiftless and vulgar, than the Brooklyn bridge could have been built out of a skein of yarn and a half dozen pounds of tenpenny nails.—Dr. C. H. Parkhurst.

His First Earnings.

"Father, may I have a piece of ground for my very own?" asked a bright boy ten years of age.

His father looked surprised.

"Why do you wish a piece of ground, my son?"

"I would like to raise some potatoes, father."

"Potatoes! What will you do with them, Willie?"

"Sell them, father, and send the money to the school in Cornwall, where heathen boys are educated."

The gentleman smiled at the boy's eager face.

"Hoeing potatoes is not easy work, Willie," he said, doubtfully.

"I know that, sir, but I am not afraid of work. It will make me strong to know that I am helping some poor heathen poor to become a Christian."

Willie's face was full of earnestness, and his father laid his hand gently on his head as he said:

"You shall have the ground, my son, and do with it as you choose."

Willie went to school that morning with a very light heart. He soon told his plan to a little playmate, and the two lads entered into a partnership for the cultivation of the promised plot of land:

It was a dry, hot summer, and the ground which Willie's father gave him was very difficult to hoe. It was full of upturned pieces of sod. The boys were not to be discouraged in their good work, however. Throwing aside their coats they toiled with a will, and the sod which gave them so much trouble proved their best friend in the end. It served to protect the growing potatoes from the fierce heat of the sun. The little plot devoted to charity yielded a fine crop, while many broad fields produced almost nothing.

It was a proud moment in Willie's life when he drove his wagon load of potatoes to market and gave his first hard earnings to the Cornwall school.

He afterwards became very wealthy, but he never forgot his boyish ambition to do good. Willie E. Dodge, for he was the noble boy, will long be remembered for the many deeds of mercy with which his long and useful life is filled.

There is no more mystery in the mind living forever in the future, than in its having been kept out of life through an eternity in the past. It is far more incredible that from not having been, we are, than that from actual being we shall continue to be.—James Martineau.

Let a man breathe out but one hour of the charity of God, and feel but one true emotion of the reconciled heart, and then he knows forever what is meant by immortality, and he can understand the reality of his own.—F. W. Robertson.

Household.

Chairs in the Living Room.

It is the same rule that arranges the chairs of the living room in an entirely different manner. There are again easy chairs for tired men and rocking chairs for busy women, mixed with the ubiquitous light chairs that can be carried about to every corner. One is mother's chair, and that has its particular corner, by the table and the window, with the work-basket in front of it. There is no center to the house—not even the much-vaunted open fire—like "mother's chair." Here come all the worries of life, here flock all its joys, here we look for sympathy and direction, and we never look in vain. We do not need to search to find; we know where it is; and years after, strong men will remember that corner with wet eyes, and elegant women, in homes of their own, will cherish tenderly an old rocking chair, "the one my mother always used." In all the philosophy of chairs there is no precept so much to be repeated as the value of a chair and a corner for the housemother.

The living room needs chairs that can be used to work in—low chairs for sewing, high chairs for use when something must be done at the table. How often has the broken toy gone unmended for tedious weeks because there was no convenient chair, and the matter was put off until father should go into the dining room next time! And there must be easy chairs in which to read the paper. He is an extraordinary man who withstands the attraction of the club if no comfortable chair is ready for him when he comes home tired and cross; or what woman is there who could help being irritable when her aching back finds nothing to lean against save Queen Anne mahogany?—Good Housekeeping.

FORBEARANCE IN THE HOUSEHOLD.—Don't scold at meal time. Sometimes it requires Christian strength and fortitude to bear up patiently under the vexation of overdone beef and underdone vegetables; to smile when salt is absent and coffee tasteless; to talk about the sunshine and the "flowers that bloom," when unsavoriness in every side dish assures you they have nothing to do with the case.

One conscious irritation so readily suggests another. In cool moments of calculation there seems to be slight reason for a dull carving knife to put a man in a fury; for a tea cup accidentally upset to mar the peace of an entire family and cast a cloud that hours only can dispel. It is parental patience with the annoying details of daily life—the details that Charles Lamb referred to in the "total depravity of inanimate objects"—that causes a child in after years to look back upon a perfectly happy home. It takes so little to make a child happy. Children are rarely epicures in the matter of diet. Their naturally good appetites and cheery table talk makes life very sunny to them, and many a woe is forgotten in the balm of a spoonful of sugar.

Misdemeanors should not be brought up at meal time. A lump in the throat is never an appetizer nor an aid to digestion. In absence of guests, don't prohibit childish conversation. It all takes time; and time and laughter during the dinner and tea-table hour are deadly enemies to dyspepsia. These occasions of sociability are the links that bind families together, and their memory never fades.—Woman's Chronicle.

The history of the Marshal Neil roses is said to be this: After his heroism in Italy the then Gen. Neil, while returning to France, was given a basket of roses by a peasant. In it was a bud with a root attached to the stem. Niel kept the shoot and gave it to a noted horticulturist, who obtained from it four of the loveliest lemon-tinted roses the world had ever seen. Niel carried them to the Empress Eugenie, who remarked with vivacity: "I will christen this rose for you—the Marshal Niel," and from that day Gen. Niel was a marshal of France.

Best of All

Cough medicines, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is in greater demand than ever. No preparation for Throat and Lung Troubles is so prompt in its effects, so agreeable to the taste, and so widely known, as this. It is the family medicine in thousands of households.

"I have suffered for years from bronchial trouble that, whenever I take cold or am exposed to inclement weather, shows itself by a very annoying tickling sensation in the throat and difficulty in breathing. I have tried great many remedies, but none does as well as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral which always gives prompt relief in returns of my old complaint."—Ernest A. Hepler, Inspector of Public Roads, Parish Terre Bonne, La.

"I consider Ayer's Cherry Pectoral the most important remedy

For Home Use.

I have tested its curative power, in my family, many times during the past thirty years, and have never known it to fail. It will relieve the most serious affections of the throat and lungs, whether in children or adults."—Mr. E. G. Edgerly, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

"Twenty years ago I was troubled with a disease of the lungs. Doctors afforded me no relief and considered my case hopeless. I then began to take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, before I had finished one bottle, found relief. I continued to take this medicine until a cure was effected. I believe that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life."—Samuel Griggs, Waukegan, Ill.

"Six years ago I contracted a severe cold, which settled on my lungs and soon developed all the alarming symptoms of Consumption. I had a cough, night sweats, bleeding of the lungs, pains in chest and sides, and was so prostrated as to be confined to my bed most of the time. After trying various prescriptions, without benefit, my physician finally determined to give me Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took it, and the effect was magical. I seemed to rally from the first dose of the medicine, and, after using only three bottles, am as well and sound as ever."—Rodney Johnson, Springfield, Ill.

ONES—Bro. Silas and Sister Polkie es are in deep sorrow. Death has ently visited their once happy me and made it sad by the death, in uccession, of three, out of four, their precious little children: First, le STELLA DEAN, aged two years, ven months and one day; second, le CLAUDE, aged four years, seven nths and one day; and, third, le HARDIE EVANS, ten months and ven days. Thus in the brief period nine short days were torn, by death's sistless hand, three precious little nbs from the loved embrace of fond rents. They were stricken by that ead disease, flux, and after several s of very severe suffering, and all t loving hands and a skillful physi- n (and uncle) could do, they ed away, one by one, to the ght mansions prepared by our ing Savior for the little children. t will, doubtless, be at the beautiful e waiting and watching for papa d mamma and the little one left be- nd. May the good Lord bless the r parents and little one, so that y may finally meet on the shining es of immortality, is the prayer of r true friend, A. D. MILLER.

ALL.—Mrs. FRANCES V. HALL was n August 6, 1817, and died in Tate nty, Miss., December 31, 1888. e was married to Mr. S. H. Hall, vember 27, 1869. She joined the thodist Church in the year 1881. ister Hall was a pious, consistent useful member of the church. e was a devoted, industrious and f-sacrificing wife and mother, and ospitable and generous friend and ighbor. She spared neither pains labor to make her family and nds comfortable and happy. Sister ll was never too busy to attend urch, or the calls of the sick and fering in the community where she ed. She, with her husband, was a and active member of the Grange, is day, and of the Farmer's Alli- ce at the time of her death. It d be no matter of wonder, then, t she was ready for the summons en it came. She leaves eight therless children and her husband a host of relatives and friends to rish her memory and her many tues. GILDEROY.

LLEN—Little LULA ALLEN was n July 8, 1885, and died November 1888, being at her death three rs, four months and fourteen s old. Her mother died when she two months old, and her grand- rents, Luella and Nancy Russell, k her to their house and kept her she died. Little Lula was a clous, sweet little girl, too pure sweet for earth's sorrows and s, and the Lord took her to the e of the good beyond the river. ere this, doubtless, she has met fond embrace of her glorified ther and a loving Savior. Every- ng was done by a skillful physician loving hands to stay the ravages death, but all to no effect. May bless the relatives and friends and them in heaven!

A. D. MILLER.

SHIPMAN—Mrs. TRYPHENA CLARK SHIPMAN (nee Harkey), wife of Rev. W. S. Shipman, of the North Mississippi Conference, was born in Itawamba county, Miss., September 25, 1857, and died at McNutt, Miss., December 25, 1888. Her father, Rev. David Harkey, was a local Methodist preacher and a man of great influence and power in the community where he lived. Her mother was a woman of deep piety and constant devotion to God.

Sister Shipman was religiously trained and received a Christian education under Dr. T. C. Wier, at Verona, Miss., where she graduated in June, 1875. She professed religion and joined the Methodist Church in August, 1871, before she was fourteen years old. She spent ten years teaching school, in which profession she was eminently useful in training the minds and hearts of her pupils, leading the children to Christ, as well as to be fountains of learning. She was married to Rev. W. S. Shipman, March 31, 1887, and went immediately to his charge, McNutt and Sunnyside. She was a help every way suitable to the itinerant life of her husband. She was loved and admired as a Christian young lady, and all the more so as the pastor's wife. Sister Shipman was full of burning zeal for God and souls, and for every enterprise that concerned the prosperity of God's kingdom among men. She was wise in planning and in leading the Sunday-school, Woman's Missionary Society, Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the Ladies' Prayer Meeting. She had finished her work, and, at daybreak, Christmas morning, fell asleep on earth to celebrate the birth of Christ in heaven. She leaves an afflicted family, a stricken and sorrowing husband and a beautiful baby-boy, just one year old.

GILDEROY.

HIGGINBOTHAM—W. G. HIGGINBOTHAM was born in East Feliciana parish, La., March 7, 1819, and died in West Feliciana parish, March 9, 1888, aged sixty-eight years.

Bro. Higginbotham was noted for his social traits of character and hospitality at his home. He joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in middle life, and was converted under a sermon preached by Rev. R. J. Harp at a camp meeting before the war, held at Bethel Camp Ground, in Wilkinson county, Miss. After his conversion there was some vacillating in his experience, which is frequently the case with those who have had to contend with strong besetments. In the latter part of his life he seemed to have gotten the victory over his strong enemy. As he grew older there seemed to be a deadness to the world about him that is common to good men and women who seek a city out of sight. His chief delight was in reading his Bible, meditation and prayer. The social prayer meeting was a means of grace to him, which caused his heart to overflow with joy. The disease which dissolved the earthly house of his tabernacle admonished him to set his house in order; and I think in his case there were no hurried preparations to make. He had arranged his earthly business and seemed to be waiting calmly for the summons to come. In social intercourse with his brethren he was genial, but humble, and was always glad to meet with his brethren beloved. He leaves an aged widow and five children—two sons and three daughters—to mourn for him. With Bro. Higginbotham we have a marked case in which the grace of God triumphed over strong besetments. May his children be admonished of his errors and try to imitate his virtues and godly walk in his last days!

P. S. PETTY.

DORTCH—On October 17, 1888, death invaded the happy home of Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Dortch, in Abilene, Texas, and took from them dear LIZZIE, the idol of fond parents and the light and joy of devoted brothers and sisters. The home that was made bright and happy by her presence is now dark and gloomy. But by faith they can see her afar, in that land, "where the flowers bloom forever, and the sun is always bright." She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and a true, devoted Christian.

Yes, Lizzie is gone from us, but sweet memories cluster around her name. My mind naturally reverts back to the pleasant visit spent at her happy home last summer. I was impressed with the sweet spirit of that loved one, and the many untiring efforts to make all around her comfortable and happy. I fancy I hear her playing and singing her favorite song, "Beyond the sunset's radiant glow," etc.

Truly the family has been called to pass through the fiery trial, in giving up their loved one. May the Star of Bethlehem shine for them more brightly when no other star is visible, and rays from the Sun of Righteousness heal their bleeding hearts, and enable them to say, "Father, not our will, but thine be done!"

How the Rainfall Is Measured.

The signal office yesterday received a new self-recording rain gauge, which will be set up and replace the instrument now on the roof of the Custom-house. The new instrument is similar in principle to the heretofore standard gauge used by the signal service, except that a float is added, and that for each .05 of an inch of rainfall a contact is made, the electrical circuit is completed, and a registration is made on a sheet on the triple self-register in the signal office.

The gauge proper consists of three parts, viz: the collector, the receiver and the overflow. The collector is funnel-shaped and 8 inches in diameter at the top. The receiver is cylindrical, 2.53 inches in diameter and 20 inches deep. The overflow is 6 inches in diameter and 22 inches deep.

The sectional areas of the receiver and collector being only as one to ten, the depth of water measured is ten times as much as should be recorded. Ten inches of water in the receiver are equal to 1 inch of actual rainfall, 1 inch to 1-10 of an inch of rain, and 1-10 of an inch to 1-100 of an inch of rain.

There is another self-recording gauge lately invented by Mr. S. P. Fergusson, of Blue Hill Observatory. In the construction of this instrument the object was to devise a simple apparatus for recording unmelted snow as well as rain. The precipitation falls through an 8-inch aperture into a receiving pan supported by a spring balance. The weight of the precipitation depresses the balance, and a lever carrying a pen records the amount fallen on a cylinder revolved once in twenty-four hours by a clock. The record obtained is continuous, showing the times of beginning and ending, rate of fall and amount.

The instrument requires attention weekly to wind the clock, and after each day that precipitation occurs, to change the charts and empty the receiver. The action being direct there is no loss from evaporation, as there would be if the snow was melted before measuring. The motion of the recording lever can be easily adjusted for any change in elasticity of the spring, also the pen is adjusted to the zero of the scale by suitable means.

The instrument is placed out of doors for use, an outside metal case protecting it from damage by wind, etc.—Picayune.

CURIOSITIES OF MAGNETISM.—Most well-informed people are, doubtless, aware that the globe on which we live is a great ball of magnetism; but few have an idea of the influence this property is continually exerting. Many common, but strange phenomena can be traced directly to this source. Statistics show that as many as thirteen steel rails will become crystallized and break on a railroad track running east and west, before one of those on a north and south track is similarly affected. This is entirely due to the magnetism generated by friction, and the fact that the polarity of the magnetic current is resisted on the east and west track, and not on the one running north and south. Another strange effect of this peculiar force is that exerted on the watches of trainmen. A time-piece carried by the conductor running a train twenty miles an hour, however accurate it may be, will, if the speed of the train is increased to say fifty miles, become useless until regulated. The magnetism generated by the flight of a train may be said to be in proportion to the speed with which it is propelled, and the delicate parts of a watch, peculiarly sensitive to this influence by reason of the hammering and polishing they have received, are not slow to feel the effect.

PAPER BOTTLES.—It is announced that paper bottles are to be manufactured on a very extensive scale. Their weight is less than glass or stone ware, and they are less liable to breakage. Paper being also an excellent non-conductor, fluids stored in air-tight bottles will withstand a more intense degree of heat or cold than when put in ordinary bottles.

We value everything in this world by comparison. Water and air have no intrinsic value, and yet Jay Gould, if famishing in the desert, would give all his wealth for a pint of the former and think it cheap; hence, life and health are the standard of all values. If your system is full of Malaria you will be very miserable; a few doses of Shallenberger's Antidote will make you well and happy. Is one dollar a high price to pay?

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The Virginia Farmers' Assembly has adopted a resolution favoring unlimited silver coinage.

The sugar bounty proposition passed the Senate on January 18. This is an amendment to the Tariff Bill reported from the Finance Committee, allowing a bounty of one cent per pound on sugar produced from beets, sorghum and sugar cane grown in the United States.

Prominent physicians and druggists of Jackson, Miss., pleaded guilty in the circuit court, on January 19, to an indictment for selling Hostetters' Bitters. The presiding judge fined each $50 and two months' imprisonment for violating the prohibition law. The grand jury petitioned the governor for a pardon, and he responded by remitting the fine.

In an attempt to lynch some prisoners under guard, near Graham, Texas, on January 19, by a mob, a desperate battle ensued, which resulted in the death of six persons.

An accident on the Northwestern railroad, near Elmwood, Mich., on the nineteenth instant, caused the death of three persons—among them the lieut-governor of Michigan—and the injuring of many others.

Secretary Fairchild transmitted to the Senate, last week, the report of T. A. Byrne, special agent of the Treasury Department, of frauds in sugar at New York and Philadelphia. He presents a table showing the loss to the revenue on sugar imports at the two cities from June 1, 1883, to June 1, 1886, by reason of the lower duty paid—that at Boston, to have been $4,045,300.

The present week will witness the close of an almost continuous debate of nine months in Congress on the tariff question. By agreement, the Senate is to proceed to a vote upon the substitute for the Mills Bill at one o'clock Tuesday afternoon, but if that limit is not extended, some important provisions of the bill will have to be voted on with little or no consideration in the Senate.

A bill was introduced, on January 21, in the Minnesota Legislature for an amendment to the Constitution to permit three-quarters of a jury to render a verdict in civil cases.

The colored people of the South are arranging to send a delegation to visit General Harrison to present their views on the Southern question.

Barker Brothers, building contractors, who have been boycotted by the Bricklayers' Union of Cincinnati, were awarded $3,700 damages against the union by a jury yesterday.

FOREIGN.

A letter from Henry M. Stanley has been received in Brussels. The explorer and his men were well and safe in August, last.

Costa Rica was shaken by an earthquake on December 30. The latest estimate of damage throughout the country exceeds $5,000,000. Many lives were lost. In San Jose both the national Capitol and the magnificent cathedral fronting the public square, which required ten years of labor to erect, at an expenditure of $1,000,000, are in ruins. The presidential palace, city hall, national postoffice and a dozen other public buildings were almost wrecked.

An attack was made by the insurgents in Zanzibar on a German missionary station. One of the missionaries was severely wounded, but escaped and succeeded in reaching a German man-of-war. The other persons at the station, among them a hundred natives who had been freed from slavery, were all captured by the insurgents, who sold them into slavery in the interior.

An explosion of fire-damp occurred, on January 18, in the Hyde colliery, near Manchester. Seven bodies have been taken from the mine. One hundred persons are still entombed. A later estimate places the number of killed at thirty.

The Manchester Cotton Spinners' Association have passed a resolution, by a unanimous vote, to form a fund to be used for trying in the law courts a test case relative to the excessive dampness of American cotton.

The Free Masons in France have issued a pronunciamento against Gen. Boulanger, and invited the members of the Order to support M. Jacques, his opponent, for the vacant seat in the Chamber of Deputies for the Department of the Seine. The Radical Federation of 1789 has issued a manifesto urging the electors of Paris not to support Gen. Boulanger.

Mr. Gladstone finds the air of Naples so invigorating that he has resolved to stay in that vicinity until the end of his tour. He will not visit Rome.

It is stated that all of the English steel rail makers agreed to form a trust, and that the French, German and Belgian makers consent to join the ring. It is expected that the movement, if successful, will cause an advance in prices of 20 to 25 per cent.

Pilgrims from the south of Berber reported that El Mahdi, after suffering a sore defeat at the hands of regular troops (presumably Emin Pasha's), abandoned further hostilities, and has since suffered in civil wars.

The German war-ship Eber, which left Samoa on the thirteenth, arrived at Auckland on January 21. The officers denounce the reports sent from Apia by way of San Francisco, and declare that the statements regarding the alleged tearing down of American flags, burning of houses of Americans and firing on British officers are unfounded.

Mr. Gladstone's decision not to go to Rome causes general regret among home rulers. Cardinal Manning and other eminent persons pleaded that an audience with the Pope would result beneficially for Ireland, but Mr Gladstone was obdurate.

A majority of the German sovereigns will visit Berlin on the occasion of Emperor William's birthday anniversary, which occurs on Sunday next.

Dropping out of the hair, with itching of the scalp, prevented, and the scalp made cool and healthy by the use of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer.

ROBERT RANDLE, P. E.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They light for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

THE CALENDAR CROP.

At this season of the year the Calendar harvest is at its height. From time immemorial calendars have been considered an indispensable article, but if our grandfathers could see the productions in this line in the latter days, their astonishment would be indescribable. Of the making of calendars there is no end, and they appear in all sizes, shapes, colors and designs, the makers of them vieing with each other to produce something which shall surpass all previous efforts. So plenty have they become that a calendar must possess unusual merit to retain year after years prominent position. The calendar issued by N. W. Ayer & son, Newspaper Advertising Agents, Philadelphia, is one of the latter sort, and each succeeding year brings an increasing demand for it. Combining beauty of color and finish, it is also so plain that the various dates can be read with comfort. For counting-house or home it has not been surpassed if equaled. On receipt of twenty-five cents they will forward their calendar securely enclosed and postpaid to any address.

A HANDSOME COMPLIMENT.

A letter from Ritzey Bancker, New York correspondent for the Montreal Herald and Daily Commercial Gazette, in Saturday's issue, December 15, among other things, says:

"Yucca for the hair is the most fashionable dressing of the day, and judging a tree by its trails so to speak, Yucca deserves to be highly praised in every thing that it says it can accomplish. Your correspondent highly recommends the product of the company of Burlington, Vt., and not only are young men and maidens delighted with the great Mexican compound, but the bald-al-ball a century, both male and female mankind, appreciate Yucca. At night, no matter how tired one feels, an application of Yucca to the roots of the hair cools the heated head and refreshes the feverish brain, so calming the thinking seat that delicious slumber is speedily produced. This is my experience, and I feel fully justified in eulogizing a really intrinsic article."

after prolonged and ve-

tomb; so silent, so palpitating ebony, and is shut with a bang.

y the room assumes
d outline, and the dead stare at the intruder ir guided settings on the walls. The air is heavy, and nearly cotemporary with the faces that look through it from the walls. The owner of the room is evidently no spendthrift—of air, at least. Shivers are coursing up and down the pastor's spine as ebony enters with chips and coal. The fire is fractions, and sputters loudly its claim for oxygen. "Misstis" must count time the cheapest thing in her possession. The pastor's amiability is fast vanishing. In vain he tries to hold his mind down to his next Sunday's discourse on "The King's Business Required Haste." Real ugly feelings try to take possession of him. He hears a footstep! False alarm! Twenty minutes gone. Outside the sun is shining, the birds are caroling, the flowers are blooming; nature is in her carnival season while the pastor is a sorry, self-endungeoned man. Relief comes at last—in sleep. He is a mummy, and the room a sarcophagus, and centuries pass over him. The opening of the door half-way awakes him, and, turning, he sees advancing one of the stately queens from the palace of the Pharaohs; her robes rustle; he is dimly conscious of a sweet, penetrating odor as she extends a jeweled hand, and he, at last awake, hears profuse apologies. "Sorry to have kept you waiting so long; but, you see, since the war we have had to do our own work, and one can not be servant and lady, too." Pastor tries, in a sickly fashion, to be sweet and yet inwardly true. He could not record in his note-book that day, "Paid a very pleasant and protracted visit at the House Waiting;" and I suppose if he could have heard Sister Waiting, as she disrobed, making comments on the pastor's visit, he would see the wisdom of Christ's words, "Go not from house to house."

House No. 2 I shall call

HOUSE INQUISITORIAL.

The click of the latch on the gate unnerves him. The door opens before he reaches the steps. He knew it would. A voice, shrilly clear and sarcastic, interrogates him, "Have you really come at last?" Emphasis strong on "really." There is a peculiar smile on the pastor's face, and a strange feeling about his heart. For a week he had been gathering courage for this occasion; but, lo! the sight of the inquisitors drives bravery to the winds. He has a fellow-feeling for Cranmer and Ridley, and realizes that Smithfield Market has overgrown its geographical limits! But, in the name of the Lord, he seats himself before half a dozen female inquisitors. He can not recall with any degree of clearness all the torturous happenings; but in moments of lucidity he remembers fragments of their stinging words and cruel sarcasms, and how utterly they misconceive his mission. The pastor could stand this, but they summon to the board of torture his other and dearer self, and adjust their ropes and pulleys to stretch her on the rack. "Too proud she is and stuck-up to come and spend the day with us!" Enough, enough! The hot blood coursing through his veins, a Vesuvius of malediction stirring within him, he departs, saying to himself, "Surely that must be one house upon which Christ placed his inhibition."

House No. 3 I shall call

HOUSE VOLUBLE AND GOSSIPY.

Into this house the pastor goes as seldom as possible. The inmates have a way of speaking to him as if he was deaf. They also imagine that his ear is a hopper, into which they must pour their gossip. By no art or stratagem can he betray them into religious conversation. Religion is for church and funerals and prayer; well, it may do no harm to the dying. I record below a literal transcript of a visit to this house not long ago. Note, if you please, the variety of topics discussed, and imagine the size of the mind needed to measure up to this strain unharmed. The end man in a show was described; witticisms born in the sawdust ring were indulged in; their neighbors' business discussed; the utter godlessness of all ministers' sons elaborately dealt with; names of next persons to get married straightened out; number of people wearing false hair, eyes and teeth, gone over; names given of specifics for different diseases, and comments on treatment—pathological, allopathic and eclectic; case of divorce found, pros and cons; maladministration of State and parish officers held up to light; the inefficiency of school funds; the size of holes in the public road; the virulence of the measles and the Sunday Law—each received treatment and their meed of blame. Very difficult, indeed, the task of the pastor to call to prayer minds absorbed, nay, reeking, with such subjects. So he departs with the Lord's disapprobation upon him, and his words tolling in his ears, "Go not from house to house."

The Cross to Come.

BY "ASTERISK."

It is to-morrow's cross that crucifies. Concerning it, our Savior has no word of cheer; and experience is equally barren of comfort to those who sink under the weight of anticipated burdens. And yet how do we persist in borrowing trouble of the future only to pay interest on the debt in unnecessary distress of mind and weariness of body! "In to-day already walks to-morrow," wrote the gloomy Carlyle. To many of us, as to that dyspeptic philosopher, the coming day is a sad companion, bringing always evil tidings of "fenced cities" and "sons of Anak," and a "land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof." We are too apt to forget that our Savior's teachings are eminently practical. The emphasis he puts upon the present, the importance everywhere in Scripture attached to to-day, is doubly justified by the fact that he who carries none but the present burden is both stronger for the work in hand, and braver and more buoyant for that which awaits him. It is sad to think that quite half the harder life-history written in our faces is the record of events that never happened, the impress of trouble that never came; that more than half our strength, perhaps, is wasted in throwing up barricades against a future that never meant us harm. It was not childishness, but child-likeness that the Savior recommended to his disciples; not that silly credulity of fear which, in spite of the friendly revelations of the day, repeats each night the folly of the night before in peopling familiar places with frightful forms, and investing familiar objects with awful possibilities of evil, but the trust which uses the intervals of rest and the suggestions of hope and the promises of God for all that they are worth. Do we not provide too much against the future and too little for it? "Take, therefore, no thought for the morrow"—is the teaching of our Savior—"for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself." It was wisely merciful that he should direct the anxious thought of his disciples to the pressing duty and the sufficient burden of to-day. The morrow held some startling revelations for them; and he alone of the sons of men knew what it is to look squarely into the face of the future, and to forecast with certainty the impending sorrow. Do we not forget in our study of that gracious life the awful burden of his prescience? Gethsemane darkened about him amid the festivities of the wedding at Cana in Galilee. The cross was in sight from the beginning of his public life. It went with him in the way; it confronted him as he sat at meat with his disciples; it was never behind him until its cruel work had been accomplished. In our worst forebodings there is seldom lacking a sense that these may be but fancies after all. The love of Christ, the abundant mercy of God, are always rising up between us and our "phantoms of fright," brightening sometimes, even against our will, the darkness of the way. But nothing interposed between him and the agony of the cross. He could not fall back into comfortable consciousness of safety and rest, like one awaking from a nightmare. Calvary was as real at his baptism in Jordan as when the nails were driven into his quivering flesh. "Tempted in all points like as we are," had reference to kind, not to degree of temptation; for we may not estimate the capacity of the Son of God for suffering or enjoyment.

But there is a sense in which thoughts of the morrow may become a strength and inspiration. There are messengers from that land of promise that tell of a fair and fruitful country, and bring a fresh taste of "milk and honey" and "goodly grapes of Eshcol." The same power which, perverted, crushes us beneath a load of expected care may, if properly used, enable us to draw upon an exhaustless store of joys more fresh and full than our largest anticipation. To the trusting soul the Savior himself opens the door of each successive day, and bids him enter with joy.

Preaching the commencement sermon at a female college some years ago, one of our Bishops gave to the young people before him this quaint advice: "Make you up a pleasant face—one that will tell a good story in old age." Who has not seen such faces—faces in which may be read the history of a life-long trust in God and man, whose very wrinkles seem to have been arranged by the hands of angels; whose whole expression, line by line, has been touched by the Divine Artist and transformed into the likeness of him who was altogether lovely. It is not an easy lesson, yet it may be learned, that faith in Christ is the great sweetener of life as well as the only salvation from sin; that holiness of heart is the best cosmetic, and the robe of righteousness far more becoming than goodliest raiment of purple and fine linen. The lesson of the lily is full of beauty, but it is the beauty of common sense. The philosophy of the sparrow's fall has something in it more profound than gravitation, but the "wayfaring man" may comprehend it.

Consider the lily, brother, and take courage from the providence that watches the sparrow's fall. Rejoice to-day; to-morrow we may be in heaven.

A Book for the Times.

BY REV. J. M. ROLAND.

The year A. D. 1888 was noted for nothing more than for the remarkable books that were published. Of those that have fallen into my hands, I wish to call special attention to "The Social Influence of Christianity, with Special Reference to Contemporary Problems," by David J Hill, LL D. Silver, Burdett & Co., 50 Bromfield St., Boston. Price, $1 25. This volume consists of eight lectures delivered before the Newton Theological Institute, in May, 1887, and is equal to the very best volumes of the celebrated Bampton Lectures, which have been delivered at the University of Oxford, England. Of the many problems now being discussed, none are more vital than "The Social Influence of Christianity." The subject and the man met in the "Newton Lectures for 1887."

Dr. Hill shows that the current agitation of mind over social questions is the best token that the hearts and consciences of men are stirred as they never have been before; and that the postulates underlying the discussions of these social problems are derived from the teachings of Christ. In addition to ten years' experience as a teacher of political economy and sociology, Dr. Hill supplemented his general preparation by travel and observation in Europe, with these lectures constantly in view, and by six months of special reading in the literature collected before and during his tour. Thus the author took time to gather his material, and has shown himself a master-workman in the use he has made of it. The book is not a mere compilation of current thoughts, thrown together for a temporary occasion, but a profound discussion of the nature of society from a Christian standpoint. It is a complete outline of sociology, free from fanaticism, true to the Bible, written in pure English, which flows smoothly along the level of a transparent style, but rising now and then to the height of Websterian eloquence. Dr. Hill sees truth through an atmosphere of light, and seizes the strong points of his subject with intuitive sagacity, and then drives to his conclusions with a logic that is irresistible. I rose up from reading the book profoundly impressed with the fact that, of all the books now before the public, in which the problems of society are discussed, Dr. Hill's book is the most unique, clear, profound, philosophical and biblical. This book can not fail to attract attention, and it will do good wherever it is circulated and read.

Entertaining Annual Conferences.

BY "JEAN PAUL."

Is the present practice of holding the Annual Conference at different places wise? Is the mode of entertaining the Annual Conference now in vogue founded in wisdom? In answering these interrogatories negatively, I beg the reader not to exclaim disdainfully, "Away with innovations!" until the following has been considered:

1. Annual Conference sessions are now solely devoted to business. Of late years it is of very rare occurrence that such sessions are conducive to revival influence. Committee work, multiplied anniversaries, etc., leave no opportunity for revival effort. Said sessions are, hence, of no special benefit to the community where they are held.

2. The selection of a centrally located place, easily accessible for annual convocation would save much money and time. Much exposure, too, would be obviated.

3. At present the privilege of entertaining the Annual Conference is enjoyed exclusively by the churches in towns large enough to accommodate so large a body of men. The membership of small villages and sparsely settled neighborhoods are debarred from ministering to the necessities of the saints at Annual Conference. If this is a burden, should not the entire membership assist in bearing it? If it is a privilege, should not all equally enjoy it?

4. Meeting annually at the same place, the entire Conference should be accommodated at the different hotels; expenses to be met by a Conference fund, annually created for that purpose, by a collection in all our churches. If need be, a minimum of the amount to be raised by each pastor could be fixed. If I pay one, ten or twenty dollars for the entertainment of the Annual Conference, I'm no less hospitable than the brother who entertains a preacher at his home.

5. Many other, though, perhaps, minor advantages would result from this change of entertaining Annual Conferences. At the hotel the fleeting hours are all at our disposal, with ample facility for the preparation of necessary reports, etc. No late breakfast detaining us from the Conference floor until after prayer; no dinners at the time of committee meeting; no impatient waiting on the ladies of the house, who solicit our company, deeming us to arrive at church after the text has been announced; no mortification from observing that our presence in a private family is a source of discomfort and worry to our host and hostess.

Reading.

BY "A JUNIOR."

It is astonishing that so few people know how to read; yet it is the first thing a child is supposed to learn, and it is really the last thing some public men, preachers, lawyers, etc., learn. By reading I do not mean an attempt at dramatic impersonation of the supposed author, nor flexion of body, but a clear and distinct enunciation and inflexion of the voice. Why is it that you have no difficulty in getting the sense, as well as the sound, in the conversation of some people?—and let the same person read you an article, and you get neither sense nor sound. I have heard persons read whose voice was as unvarying in its tone and as monotonous in the even tenor of its flow as the continued patter of the rain, slowly dripping through the gutter, that now reaches my ear from my window near by. This is the monotonous specimen. There are other kinds. Some mouth; get the words in their mouths, and there they remain, as far as the listener is concerned. There may reach the auditor some sounds betokening the break-up of the gorge; but they are more frequently meanings without words. From this man you get no words, only symptoms. There is the man who rushes like the torrent, breaking down all barriers, such as commas, semicolons, colons, periods, etc., placed in his way, to give music to the sound and rest to his voice; and we are startled by hearing something on this order, "Le' 'im 'chew evil, an' do good." He brings forth nothing but words upon words, and makes you long for a lodge in some vast solitude, in order that, being at rest, you may try to solve the phonetic riddle. There is another, and he, though last, is by no means to be overlooked. He is a greater evil than the others—the deliberate—de-li-b-e-ra-te reader. Takes him as long to read about the creation as it was in being made. You can feel yourself growing old under the hesitating melody of his dulcet voice. It is a great pleasure to hear a good reader, one who combines sound, sense and sentiment. It is like reading as in singing—must be with spirit. Grasp the sentiment of the thing read, and give it the interpretation of a living man, and not render it as the echo from a sarcophagus.

The Gretna Church.

Our friends on the other side of the river are endeavoring to build a house of worship in Gretna. They have two fine lots of ground donated by a friend, and in cash and subscriptions about $800, with the promise of $250 from the Board of Church Extension of our Conference. The Building Committee has had a meeting and effected an organization. The sum of $2,500 is the amount estimated to build and furnish the house. It was resolved, however, not to begin work until $1,500 cash is in hand. Our people, over there are few and limited in means, and need all the help they can get. We heartily commend this enterprise to the liberality of our people on this side and everywhere else. We ask, in the name of the Lord, that everyone who reads this will send us a contribution for this enterprise. Send either to the editor of this paper or to F. L. Matthews, Gretna, La., or to F. A. Daniels, 28 Olivier street, Algiers. Here is a fine investment for a rainy day—an investment that will meet you with its accumulated interest when "flesh and heart shall fail and mortal life shall cease."

The more perfect the sight is, the more delightful the beautiful object. The more perfect the appetite, the sweeter the food. The more musical the ear, the more pleasant the melody. The more perfect the soul, the more joyous the joys of heaven, and the more glorious to us that glory.—Richard Baxter.

WHEN WORK IS DONE.

BY MARIANNE FARNINGHAM.

It is as if the world were glad:
Whether in light or darkness clad,
The heart is never sad or sad
When work is done.

The very voices in the street
Are tuned to gentlest music sweet;
We love all things we chance to meet
When work is done.

The gentle music of the breeze,
The tender whispers of the trees,
And every sound has power to please
When work is done.

Upon each dear, familiar face
Rests some new fruit of whitest grace,
And joy lights up the old home place
When work is done.

Life's round suddenly grows still,
And love and gladness and good-will Come with their peace the heart to fill
When work is done.

But when the hours of labor close,
And earth is wrapped in sweet repose,
And all things sleep—alas for those
With work undone!

Oh, kind Taskmaster, let thy rest
Be to tired workers manifest,
And unto all who do their best,
Say thou, "Well done!"

(Hurlbut and Simpson's Lesson Commentary, Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

Sunday-School Lesson.—Feb. 10.

THE FIERCE DEMONIAC.

Mark v, 1-20.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Go home to thy friends, and tell them how great things the Lord hath done for thee, and hath had compassion on thee.—Mark v, 19.

TIME.—A. D. 27. This took place immediately after the miracle of stilling the tempest.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. viii, 28-34; Luke viii, 26-39.

1. They came over—The disciples of Christ with him. The country of the Gadarenes—The city of Gadara is three hours to the south of the southern shore of the lake, and the miracle could not have been performed in its vicinity; and it is hardly probable that the citizens of so distant a city would have turned out en masse for a journey of three hours to see the one who had wrought this miracle. But recently Dr. William Thomson has discovered a Gergesa, now called Cheesa, or Gersa, on the eastern shore of the lake, and on the borders of the district or province which took its name from Gadara, one of the chief cities of Decapolis. This Gersa, or Gergesa, so insignificant that it has escaped the attention of most travelers, was unknown to the Roman world. Mark and Luke, therefore, who wrote for the Gentiles, described the miracle as occurring in the country of the Gadarenes, a description which would have been readily comprehended, since Gadara was one of the chief Roman cities of Palestine, and widely known. Matthew, who had been a tax-gatherer on this very shore, was familiar with every village and hamlet, and wrote for Jewish readers, described it as occurring in the country of the Gergesenes, thus fixing its locality more definitely.

2. Out of the tombs—These places of tombs being outside the towns, and, being avoided by the Jews for fear of contracting pollution from the contact with human bones, formed secluded retreats acceptable to those who, from demoniacal possession, madness, crime, or other causes, shunned the society of men. A man—It may be proper here to note that between the two accounts there is a difference in regard to the number of demoniacs dispossessed. Matthew mentions two; Mark and Luke note but one. There is variation, but not contradiction. He who says there is two, of course, includes the one. He who mentions the one does not deny the other. The two evangelists, doubtless, specify the one which was the more bold and prominent. There was a second less marked, whom they pass over, but Matthew mentions. With an unclean spirit—This is one of the most equivocal instances of supernatural possession.... No one is said to be possessed by Satan or the devil; but, in the original, by demons or unclean spirits, or spirits connected with specific diseases, as a deaf or dumb spirit. The whole system of Bible demonology presupposes one arch enemy of God and man, Satan, yet powerful, an archangel of evil, who is the mightiest finite representative of wickedness revealed to us in the universe. He stood in a totally different position from the abandoned, wicked man, who morally is given over to the devil. This latter would be a subject for punishment, but the demoniac for deepest compassion. There appears to have been in him a double will and a double consciousness, sometimes the cruel spirit thinking and speaking in him, sometimes his poor crushed self crying out to the Savior of men for mercy; a terrible advantage taken, and a personal realization, by the malignant powers of evil, of the fierce struggle between sense and conscience in the man of morally divided life. It has been not improbably supposed that some of these demoniacs may have arrived at their dreadful state through various progressive degrees of guilt and sensual abandonment. Lavish sin, and especially indulgences in sensual lusts, superinducing, as it would often, a weakness in the nervous system, which is the especial bond between body and soul, may have laid open these unhappy ones to the fearful incursions of the powers of darkness.

3, 4. No man could bind him—Efforts had been made to put him in restraint, but neither ropes, nor the chains used, had sufficed to hold him. Night and day he wandered the mountains, driven hither and thither by the mysterious possession that had him in its power, filling the air with his howls and shrieks, and cutting himself with sharp stones in his frenzy. This man was possessed of that extraordinary muscular strength which maniacs so often put forth (Acts xix, 16), and thus all efforts to bind and restrain him (and such had been often repeated) had proved ineffectual. St. Matthew alone relates how he had made the way impassable for travelers. Chains had been plucked asunder—This is nowise incredible: for there are still some forms of mania in which the sufferer, notwithstanding the constant exhaustion of mind and body, gains a daily increase of muscular strength, and is able to break the strongest bonds, and even chains. Neither could any man tame him—It is often the case that very violent maniacs are quite calm and submissive under the authoritative eye and bearing of instinctively commanding natures. But the Gerasene demoniac had not met anyone who had power to soothe or subdue him.

5. Crying himself with stones—This wretched man often vented vengefully upon his own person the irritation of his perturbed spirit, which finds a parallel in some cases of insanity.

6. He saw Jesus—This must refer to the more distant sight of him, as the ship was approaching the land. Afar off—St. Mark alone tells us this. While, as a mass, he is attracted toward the Holy One; as possessed by the legion, he desires to withdraw from him. He ran and worshiped him—The spirit recognized with a supernatural discernment our Lord's superior nature, and did him reverence. The overruling power of Christ dragged the foul spirit into his presence. Guiltiness would fain keep out of sight. The limbs of so woeful a head shall once call on the hills and rocks to hide them from the face of the Lamb; such lion-like terror is in that mild face when it looks upon wickedness. Neither shall it be one day the least part of the torment of the damned to see the most lovely spectacle that heaven can afford.

7. Cried with a loud voice—Then, like some ferocious beast submitting to the power of his subduer, he runs and kneels, protesting all the time. In the name of the spirit of which he is still the organ, against the power which is exercised over him. What have I to do with thee—A common Jewish phrase, signifying a wish not to be troubled by the importunity or the interference of another. Jesus, thou Son of the most high God—And he did homage to him, and addressed him by a title of exceeding dignity, used only once elsewhere, in the prediction of his birth, by the angel. It is said that the title of the "most high God" was the one commonly adopted formula of exorcism, and possibly the demoniac was prompted to use it as that with which he was most familiar, from its frequent invocation over himself. I adjure thee by God—This is the language of the demon, not of the man; not mere blasphemy, but a plausible argument. Nothing is so common as swearing by God on the part of the ungodly, the infidel, and the atheistic. The better self, in its enlightened season, discerned a helper; the hostile power, when it gained the predominance, saw a judge.

8. For he said—The Greek verb is in the imperfect tense, he was saying, as though the demoniac had interrupted our Lord even while the words were in the act of being uttered. Come out of the man—The facts appear to be that the maniac made a rush toward Jesus and the twelve, perhaps, purposing to destroy them; that Christ stopped him by word of command requiring the evil spirits to leave the man, and that the expostulation given in this verse was the devils' response to that command.

9. What is thy name—Christ asked the man (not the demon) his name, in order to call out his personal consciousness, and aid in restoring him to himself. The demon snatches the man's organs, and answers the question for himself, giving his own name. He is a host by nature and by name. A legion in the Roman army was a division embracing six thousand men. The demon, perhaps, assumes that name for this whole number, as being their leader. My name is Legion—The man was asked, but the demon answered, showing his entire mastery over him. For we are many—They were many, yet they say, My name, not our name; though many, they speak as one, they act as one, in this possession. There is a marvelous accordance even betwixt evil spirits. That kingdom is not divided, for then it could not stand. I wonder not that wicked men do so conspire in evil, that there is such unanimity in the broachers and abettors of errors, when I see those devils, which are many in substance, are one in name, action, habitation.

10 And he besought—It is a demon's prayer. And it is heard. But he utters no petition to have his diabolical nature changed. He only asks a boon suited to his demoniac nature. Not send them away out of the country—Where they found themselves so much at home; especially, as Luke adds, into the hateful abyss of hell. The lawless nature of the country (where Jews lived mingled with Gentiles), which pleased the demoniacs well, Mark denotes by the circumstance of the two thousand swine, emphasizing the greatness of the herd. The petition of the devils may be regarded as equivalent to: "Send us anywhere, anywhere but to perdition; send us to the most shuttered man; send us to the lowest creature, into man or beast, bird or reptile, anywhere but to hell."

11. Herd of swine feeding—The rabbinical law forbade the keeping swine. Whether this herd was kept by Jews or by heathen is a matter of uncertainty. The cities of Decapolis were largely filled with Romans, with whom swine's flesh was deemed a luxury.

12. Send us into the swine—From this we should infer, (1) That the infernals prefered a human residence to a bestial one; but they preferred a bestial one to their own infernal home. (2) That it may be, at certain periods of the world, possible for the infernal natures to possess a brute body, especially of such unclean brutes as are congenial with their own uncleanness. They aimed at this, that they might move the owners of the herd, and the rest of the people of the country, to be discontented at our Savior.

13. Jesus gave them leave—Our Lord only assumed to expel the devils from their abode in the particular human being. He did not shape their subsequent course, or mark out their path. And Stier well argues with those who impute immorality to Jesus for giving this permission that it is even less liable to the imputation of immorality than the divine permission, not withheld from demons, to possess men, or, we may add, the divine permission yielded to evil men to rule in the world. That a Mohammed, a Nero, or a Napoleon should rule mankind with bloodshed is the mystery of God. Entered into—It is impossible for an honest interpreter to understand this narrative in any other than its plain and natural sense, namely, that there were evil spirits in the man controlling his personality, that they left him and entered into the herd of swine. Ran violently down—The swine ran into the sea and the devils went to their own place. This may have been the way of driving him out of the human world to hell. And that is a second full answer to those who cavil, falsely as well as foolishly, that our Lord here destroyed the swineherd's property. Surely our Lord is not responsible for the doings of the devils he expels from men. A steep place—Literally, down the cliff. The description exactly agrees with the east shore of the Sea of Galilee, where the cliffs, which form, as it were, the wall of the great Bashan table lands, "rise to a height of two thousand feet." Two thousand—Peculiar to Mark, who gives us accurate details of this kind. Immense herds of swine were kept in many provinces of the Roman Empire specially for the provisionment of the army.

14. They went out to see in the city—Evidently first what had befallen the swine intrusted to their keeping; next, what salvation had come to the man. They went out to see—That is, the population of Gadara or Gerasa (most probably the latter).

15. They come to Jesus—Note the present come. The evangelist begins to depict the scene as if he and we were present in the midst of it and looking on. Sitting, and clothed, and in his right mind—There is a fine harmony between the statement that the demoniac was now clothed, and the statement in Luke that formerly he "wore no clothes." Those who forsake their sin always come into their right mind, and see things as they are. They were afraid—They felt in the presence of a power which inspired them with awe and alarm. It might, for aught they could comprehend, be something weird or "uncanny." The breach that was made in their worldly prosperity alone occupied their thoughts; for spiritual blessings that were brought near to them they cared nothing, and "they were afraid," being ignorant what next might follow.

16. Concerning the swine—It is likely that the one-sided report of the swineherds, in justifying themselves to the owners of the swine, had filled the latter with hostile intentions against Jesus for the loss they had sustained. Our Lord had saved the man; the devils had destroyed the swine. The Gadarenes are thankless for the mercy, and hold our Lord responsible for the loss of the swine.

17. They pray him to depart—They considered the salvation of the man as poor compensation for the loss of their pigs. A man who drives away devils must be himself driven away. So do men hug the disease and hate the physician. Christ appears never to have visited the country of the Gadarenes again. He does not abide where he is not wanted. Carnal hearts prefer their swine before their Savior, and had rather lose Christ's presence than their worldly profit. Skeptics at the present day agree with the Gadarenes, and repudiate Jesus, because the demons destroyed the swine.

18. Prayed him that he might be with him—That he feared a relapse or repossession, and depended wholly on his great deliverer to save him from it, is a most natural and probable assumption. But if this were all, it would hardly have been so expressed (that he might be with him). The words used necessarily suggest a higher motive, though by no means unconnected with the one first mentioned. This was the desire to be with Christ from personal attachment, springing out of gratitude for what he had experienced, and that saving faith which seems to have so commonly accompanied his miracles of healing.

19. Suffered him not—There is a very plain reason. In other cases the publication of the miracles subjected our Lord to be overwhelmed by a throng. But here he was about to leave the country. Besides, an evil report was liable to be spread by the losers of the swine. For this reason he desired the man not to go with himself, but to remain and proclaim his miracle of mercy at his own house. Go home—We have here three prayers from three very different sources. The devils pray, and their prayers are granted, but to their own final discomfiture. The Gadarenes pray, and their prayer, too, is granted; for the Lord departs and leaves them to their own abandonment. The delivered man prays to be with Christ; his prayer is not heard, but a better lot is assigned, a lot of home duty, which, if he will fulfill, he shall be with his Lord forever. While he calls on some to leave home and family and follow him, he bids this man to follow first purely human feelings which had been reinstated in their natural rights within him; to return, sane and calm, to the family which he had abandoned as a maniac, and to glorify God among them, by telling them how Christ had wrought the mighty change, and giving them a living proof of it in his own person. And so the demoniac of Gergesa became the first great missionary to the region of Decapolis, bearing in his own person the confirmation of his word.

Church Insurance.

You asked me to say something of the subject of Church Insurance against loss and damage by fire, and, perhaps, by cyclone also. The subject, you know, has been recently extensively advertised by the Rev. W. B. Palmore, of Independence, Mo. Bro. H. W. Bushman, now living in that city, from whom Bro. Palmore says he gets the suggestion, formerly lived in Yazoo City, Miss. Of course, I know him well, and favorably. It was probably some five years ago Bro. Bushman called my attention to this subject, and asked my opinion. I was familiar with the business of fire insurance, for in my younger days I was extensively engaged in it. I once, before 1840, did all the fire as well as the marine insurance in Mississippi for about twelve years. So I did not feel entirely incapacitated to consider the subject. I suggested some little modification in details, and highly approved the plan in its general features. It was put into practical working form, and presented to the Mississippi Conference at its session next before the last General Conference. It was put into the hands of a committee, who reported a memorial to the General Conference, asking attention and favorable consideration of it. This memorial was sent to the General Conference by the hands of Col. Nugent, of Jackson, who expected to enforce it; but, unfortunately, he had to leave Conference at an early period, and our memorial went to the Committee of Silence or Non concurrence, I do not now remember which. I presume it was not examined by anybody familiar with such business. And so there that ended. Not long after, Bro. Bushman went to Missouri, and lives in Independence; and Bro. Palmore has brought the subject more largely before the church again.

I will not here enter into details, but will only say that, with details properly arranged, I believe the recommendation to be entirely practicable, simple and, under proper management, can not fail to be of very great benefit to the church in case of such losses. By insuring all or the principal churches the burden will be so trifling as to be scarcely felt, even in case of heavy losses. It requires no capital to set up this business; no funds lying by awaiting losses. A few dollars to prepare a little printing is all that may be needed. Churches will be assessed and called on for payment as losses occur. These assessments will be trifling, as they will be so distributed that the loss will fall on all, or a certain number, instead of one. The money is always sure. No insurance company could make it more so. No premium is required to be paid in advance. The entire expense will be the salary of one man and clerk, and a little office expense.

I know enough about insurance to be ignorant of the reason for such high rates of premium as are now charged. Most certainly in the last forty or fifty years considerable improvement has been made in house-building and warming in view of safety from fire; cooking-stoves have been introduced; the use of coal for fuel, which is safer than wood, has increased fiftyfold; the distribution of hot air in large buildings from one common furnace often dispenses with a dozen fire places, which greatly increases safety. And, then, the means of extinguishing fire has greatly increased. Fire engines are introduced, and other fire apparatus; and also the use of hydrogen gas has been variously applied to put out fires. On the other hand but two things of late introduction seem in sight calculated to increase fire risk, viz: steam, and fire matches. Drunkenness is an important element, but I do not see that that has materially changed. The accumulated statistics, I understand, do not put steam, in its various uses, as a considerably enlarged element of danger. "Defective flues" is set down as the cause of nearly half the fires. And flues of various kinds and uses are certainly as well, if not better, constructed now than formerly. Incendiarism has not increased, I believe. And yet, notwithstanding all this, the average rate of fire insurance in Mississippi now is about seventy-five per cent. higher than fifty years ago. In this I do not include machinery run by steam or the building nor other property in the same house. Formerly we had no steam to insure against, except steamboats and cargoes.

There is no general line of insurable property where the risk is so small as on churches. They are very seldom subject to fire from without, except in compact parts of cities; almost never subject to incendiary fire, and not generally used at all more than one-fifth part of the time. Among the millions of property I have insured, I do not now remember that I ever lost a church.

Bro. Palmore says that Bro. Bushman is gathering statistics on this subject. I shall expect these to show that a mutual or distributed insurance will indicate that a uniform system of safety in this regard will be a mere trifle to the several individual churches. The trustees of a burnt house can make a cash contract to rebuild before the ashes are done smoking, and have every dollar in hand before it is due.

Ordinary business men are not necessarily familiar with the details of insurance operations. I hope this question will be looked into during the coming Conference year, and that the next General Conference will have the matter well looked into by a competent select committee. And I shall look for a mutual insurance system to be the result.

Introspection.

"Commune with your own heart on your bed, and be still."—Psalm iv, 4.

There is nothing more important than honest, faithful self-examination. A knowledge of one's self is indispensable to the attainment of high states of grace. Self-knowledge can not be acquired unless we look within. If we hurry along in pursuit of worldly riches, pleasures and honors, we shall find great aversion to "communing with our own hearts." We shall most likely conclude that we have no time for such exercises. Men in hot pursuit of the good things of the world will not pause and stand still long enough to calculate their spiritual bearings. They are constantly and rapidly approaching the terminus of life's journey, and yet will not be still to take in the drift of the tide that bears them on. To all such the injunction of the Psalmist applies with special emphasis. If, indeed, time can not be had for introspection during the busy hours of the day, let some portion of the time spent in bed be devoted to this purpose. "Be still upon your bed," and in this silent hour "commune with your own heart." The heart, in Scripture phrase, is the very core of being. It gives character. As is the heart, so is the man. Hence the importance of communing with our own hearts. A faithful, candid, honest examination of the heart will reveal to us our true character, and that known, we may take measures of safety. But if, from disinclination to the study of our hearts and characters, we remain in ignorance of ourselves, we shall nevertheless find our appointed place at life's terminus in harmony with character. Our ignorance—willful ignorance—will not save us from disaster. A sick man does not help his case by closing his eyes to his real condition. He had better know the worst of his case, that he may apply the remedy for his cure. One spiritually sick prejudices his case if he refuses to believe himself sick. Or, if he allows that he is slightly disordered, but able of himself to correct it, he does not understand the real state of the case, and, hence, will fail to apply the true remedy. A correct diagnosis is of the first importance in the treatment of disease of the soul, as well as of the body. There are certain moral qualities that go before the revealing light of divine truth. First, there must be a willingness to know the whole truth; secondly, a determination to submit to divine authority; and, thirdly, faith in the efficacy of the prescribed remedy. One with a disposition of soul, dominated by such qualities, is prepared to receive and profit by the light of the Holy Spirit; and when that light goes down into the dark chambers of the human soul, it reveals the existence of corruptions and debasements that makes him loathe himself in dust and ashes before Almighty God. Introspection, preceded by these conditions, always results favorably. If one finds himself unwilling to "commune with his own heart," it may be taken as evidence that the heart is in a bad condition, and that he is unwilling to know it. While that spirit is maintained, a cure is impossible. God can not reveal the truth to such as treat it with contempt. If it were simply a question of power, he could; but it is a question involving both human and divine agencies.

From the Work

LOUISVILLE, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: It is my fortune to serve this year the good people of the Louisville charge. I was thirty years of age before I ever saw a pine tree, but they grow here in great abundance and to perfection. I have often heard the expression, "straight as a pine," but never knew its full meaning till permitted to ride in the forests of this beautiful country. It is grandly beautiful to look upon a forest of ten thousand trees of perfect symmetry, rivaling each other in height and beauty, and still remaining fresh and fadeless amid the mutations of the dying year. If nature has withheld from this people her wealth of gold and silver, she has strewn here with lavish hand her pearls of health and beauty.

We are pleased with our new field of labor, but can't say how the field is pleased with her new preacher. I find our predecessor has done excellent work, and leaves his charge in fine condition. We expect to complete two new churches and a new parsonage by summer. One new church at this place is a "thing of beauty," and will be dedicated at District Conference about June, next. We expect Bishop Galloway at the dedication. Our prospects for this year's work are promising, and we hope to report great things for Louisville circuit. We are not able to report a "Methodist storm" or "pounding" at the parsonage, but, instead, have something of greater value—the gentle showers with steady winds which give promise of blowing continually. We good folks over here don't believe much in cyclones and storms anyway; we've had too many of them already, as our razed houses and devastated forest and lands too plainly show; but we like the gentle spring showers and summer breezes which bring with them the rich fruits and golden grain of an abundant harvest. Our "pounds" come daily, and not by "storm;" but we dare say we have received as nice a "pounding" as any preacher in this Conference. We have a good people, and like a generous soil, they respond readily to careful cultivation. We fully appreciate every kindness shown us, and only hope we may meet their expectations, and in some meagre way return in spiritual goods what we have received in "carnal things." Yours, etc.,

F. P. SPENCER.

BIBLE TEXTS UNDULY EXALTED.—While in seasons of prosperity we are apt to think that we can take care of ourselves, we are very ready to run to the Word of God for comfort when sorrow comes upon us. That is undoubtedly one of the purposes for which that Word was given. In doing this, however, we should be very careful not to exalt those comforting passages into an undue prominence, however applicable they may be to us. The inspired Word is a symmetrical whole, and when, by exalting unduly some one part of it, we come to see but that one part, we destroy the symmetry of the whole which can scarcely be called a work of edification. It is not one. Perhaps, this idea is illustrated when, in times of trouble we go to God and pray for deliverance which he has promised to those who, in such seasons, call upon him. We are often in trouble, and we go to the heavenly Father so often for deliverance, that we forget to seek his help and guidance in other times. So these prompts of help in days of trouble come to be about the only passages of Scripture we remember, and prayers for deliverance from trouble about the only prayers we offer. We do not, perhaps, even remember those promises and prayers until our efforts to deliver ourselves are exhausted, and we are driven, half unwillingly, to God. A more careful study of the Word, as a whole, might lead to a more careful walking, to an avoidance of temptations, to fewer seasons of sorrow, and to less necessity for prayer over deliverance from trouble. Suppose we all try it.—Evangelist.

Be cheerful; do not let over fond hopes unrealized add a chain, link after link, is fastened on each thought and wound around the heart. Nature never intended you to be the fountain spring of cheerfulness and joy in life, and not the traveling monument of despair and melancholy.—Arthur Helps.

Missionary.

Money for Christ's Work.

BY JAMES L. PHILLIPS, M. D., D. D.

On every side we are hearing the cry for more money. Our schools are calling far larger endowments, and our missionary enterprises at home and over the seas are pleading most pathetically for funds for enlargement. From the human standpoint the very life of these enterprises seems to depend upon money, and it is but fair that we should look facts squarely in the face. The principals of our schools are in some cases devoted chiefly to money-seeking, and the treasuries of our benevolent societies give their strength and time to begging for money. This is hardly creditable to the Christian church, so near the end of her nineteenth century. Must the consecration of property be postponed to the twentieth?

Amid much that is disheartening we find some tokens of cheer well worth our serious study. One is the growing tendency to invest money during one's lifetime instead of leaving it by will for heirs and lawyers to wrangle over. I say "tendency" advisedly, for we can hardly risk a stronger word yet in this place. There are a very few Christian men who are beginning to think that they might as well have the pleasure themselves of seeing their money do good, instead of giving it all to those who come after them. May the number of these be increased a thousandfold and more before the last decade of this nineteenth century is done!

Another very cheering token is the increase of systematized giving. The other day I heard of a church that has just taken up the weekly offering, and delighted to find how well it works, how easily it gathers up the dimes and letters from the whole congregation, how much more it brings in than any of the old methods, how the money comes steadily and is always on hand, and how everybody likes it. May many other churches find this out, too, by actual experience! Let us all learn the joy of self-sacrifice. During these winter days we may deny ourselves pleasures for the sake of helping on the work of Christ. Self-gratification yields no sweet satisfaction, like that anyone may experience in giving up something held dear or counted precious, for the benefit of others less favored. We all need to pray and strive for that mind which was in Christ Jesus, and when it takes possession of us all, the whole church for whose redemption he freely gave his life will know abundantly and how thankfully shall we bring our offerings to his temple.—Gospel in All Lands.

Japanese Views of Christianity.

Several eminent publicists of Japan are carrying on a very interesting discussion just now. The object is to determine whether or not it is advisable for the people of Japan to embrace the Christian religion. The Japan Daily Mail, in a recent issue, summarizes this discussion. It says that those connected with the movement say that Christianity has in it are a bitter pill to swallow, but advise that it be swallowed promptly for the sake of the after-effects. Mr. Fukuzawa, a well-known writer, urges this course, although he says he takes no personal interest whatever in religion, and knows nothing of the teaching of Christianity; but says it is the creed of the most highly civilized nations. Prof. Inouye, of the Imperial University, has published a work to support his view. He holds that these ethics must be replaced by Christian ethics, and that the ethics to be derived from the introduction of Christianity are: (1) the improvement of music; (2) the union of sentiment and feeling leading to harmonious conversation, and (3) the furnishing a medium of intercourse between men and women. It is argued by others that the youth of Japan, being free from the bondage of creeds, and free to act according to reason, are so far in advance of Europeans, and so tired of talking about adopting a foreign religion, Japanese should go abroad and preach the religion of reason to foreign countries. Other writers urge the same views. The writer in the Yokohoma newspaper says that those who urge the teaching of Christianity represent an influential section of educated people whose opinion; they are signs of the times. "To Japan, in an intellectually agnostic mood, Western science, with all its marvelous revelations and attractions. At the shrine of that science she is worshiping now."—Exchange.

Jews.

Dr. Dalman's statistics of the work and success in Jewish evangelization must surprise all who have not watched the course of events. There are no less than 47 Protestant missionary societies devoted exclusively to this arduous vocation. These employ 377 missionaries, laboring at 157 centers of Jewish population, and have an annual income of about half a million dollars. In addition to these other missionary societies engage in this special work, as a branch of their general work. England has eight of these 47 societies, sends out about two-thirds of the 377 men, and supplies about two-thirds of the money. Scotland has five societies; Ireland, one; Germany, twelve; Switzerland, one; the Netherlands, three; France, one; the Scandinavian lands, five; Russia (i. e., the Protestant Churches of), four; North America, seven. The cities in which the largest number of missionaries are engaged are London, Budapest, Constantinople, Damascus, Jerusalem, Tunis. As the total of all the Jews on the face of the globe is 6,400,000, there is one missionary for every 16,976 Jews. In addition to these the Roman Catholic and the Greek Churches also engage in this work. Pastor de le Roi, of Breslin, also a reliable statistician, claims that at least 100,000 Jews have confessed Christ since the beginning of the present century. Those yet living of these, together with their descendants, probably number 250,000 children of Abraham who have entered upon the spiritual inheritance of their father. When we recall the fact that ten years ago there were in existence only 20 societies for the evangelization of the Jews, with only 250 laborers and an income less than half of what it is now, the marked progress in this sphere of Christian activity is peculiarly encouraging.—Missionary Review

Suggestions for Successful Leadership.

BY GEORGE R. LEAVITT, D. D.

In thousands of towns and cities we are on the eve of a new campaign. The leaders and the forces are agreed as to the interests at stake, and their duty. This year again much will depend upon the leaders. One can almost say that results will turn upon the quality of leadership. Good leadership will be successful. Poor leadership will be unsuccessful. The following are ideas which the wise leader will consider. Hundreds of wise men are now considering them:

The value of expectation. It is said of Napoleon's soldiers that the expectation of victory inspired by the extraordinary personality of their leader was the most important factor in securing the triumphs of the Grand Army.

The good leader has expectant followers. It is said of John the Baptist that, as a result of his work, all men were in expectation. The state of expectation now exists in a great many churches. Many have been preparing for a special work this year. They realize that the Week of Prayer is near. This appears in their prayers, in their conversation, in their readiness to undertake service, in their response to the most searching and spiritual truth.

The state of expectation in a single Christian is a fact not to be wisely disregarded. Upon a basis no broader than this, some of the most successful movements of the church have been founded. Few are the churches that have not more than one expectant woman.

Is there expectation in your little army? Stimulate it by your timely inspiration, by the contagion of your own hopefulness. Aim to arouse the indifferent by pungent, convicting addresses to the conscience; but do not be so engaged in this necessary service, that you fail to give time, and more time, and some of your very best work in stimulating this conquering element of expectation.

The value of convergency. The strategy of Napoleon was in rapid concentration of troops, converging them by all various routes, and upon interior lines, upon his chosen battlefields. Their confidence in him and their certainty of victory made his soldiers pliable in his hands. But he must direct them. So the good leader will direct his force by all routes towards the earliest center to which rapid convergency can bring them. He will see reasons for making such a center in the Week of Prayer. This plan may involve two weeks of prayer, or special meetings throughout the month of January. In many churches this will be the successful plan this year, as in so many former campaigns. It will also be found in many other churches that the Week of Prayer is only the first and indecisive concentration of the church. What then? Then how often we have seen the check of expectation, disappointment, divergency, the fatal scattering and retiring of an army into early summer quarters, when the call was still for expectation and convergency, renewed inspiration of hope, new concentration. The great successes may be late in the season—are apt to be. But all earlier, partial successes will lead to the later and greater.

With a proper appreciation of these strategic ideas: the value of expectation, of convergency in our churches, in the leaders, new and glorious victories will be won in this opening campaign.—Advance.

Religious Dyspeptics.

We have in nearly every pastoral charge, if not in every congregation, a class of persons which, for want of a better name, we shall call religious dyspeptics. They never seem to enjoy a robust spiritual health; they are always "a little ailing," and they require much pastoral nursing and petting to keep them going at all. These are the persons who give the preacher most concern; who do least and grumble most; who never allow you to forget their existence by reason of their much complaining. To keep them in anything like a comfortable existence, the pastor must see them every few days, and must be an expert in administering religious pap and gruel. If any preacher should conclude that he has other and more important duties to perform, and should neglect, even for a season, these frequent and necessary ministrations, loud and long will be the cries sent up, as though the ark of God were lost and the hosts of Israel defeated.

These persons measure their pastor's work, not by his ability in the pulpit, not by the size of his congregations, not by the increase in membership, not by the number of conversions, not by the spiritual growth of the members, not by the material prosperity of the church, but solely and entirely by the number of times he has been to "our house," and his skill in feeding his dyspeptic patients on caramels and sugar-coated pills. Spring, summer, autumn and winter come and go without witnessing any improvement in their spiritual health. Their disease has become chronic, and there seems little hope of improvement as long as they remain in this sublunary sphere.

It is needless to say that these few puny, sickly, whining, complaining Christians give the pastor more worry of mind and pain of heart than all the rest of his flock put together. They are grievous "thorns in the flesh" to most preachers. There is little danger of a preacher becoming unduly exalted who is blessed with one or two of such members. They keep him perpetually reminded of the disabilities of the flesh, and make him long for a residence among the saints in light.

But what shall we say of those noble men and women of God—those healthful, hopeful and helpful Christians—who encourage and sustain the preacher in his work by their kind words and generous acts? What shall we say but breathe the prayer: God bless them, and may their tribe increase?—Southern Christian Advocate.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

From a Prominent Minister.

I am fifty-five years of age.

Half of my life I have been a sufferer from a disordered liver, and the last three years a victim of that dread disease, consumption; was reduced to eighty-seven pounds, a mere skeleton, helpless, pronounced beyond recovery by my physicians, and given up to die by friends. In order to gratify my loving wife, I began taking Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, which is a cure for consumption, and to-day I am healthy, and able to indulge myself in preaching the gospel from the sacred desk. RUFUS FIGH.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, July 12, 1888.

Dr. R. M. Davis, County Line, Miss., reports having cured a cancer of long standing that years of the most skillful medical practice had failed to benefit at all. Besides, we have numerous assurances of cures effected in Asthma, Bilious Colic, Catarrh, Diarrhea, Diphtheria, and Malarial Fever.

Rev. W. A. Mason, pastor of the Baptist Church, Crystal Springs, Miss., writes under date of July 2nd:

At your request, I will say that for about eight years I have been suffering with a sore on the back of my neck which was caused by the rubbing of a mole by my shirt collar. It gradually spread till larger than a quarter-dollar. About six weeks ago, I commenced the use of Microbe Killer. From the very beginning I felt an improvement, and it has gone on steadily till now; though I have been very irregular in taking the remedy. I am satisfied that directions closely followed would effect a speedy permanent cure.

W. A. MASON.

I gladly testify that, after suffering with a severe case of malarial fever, I tried Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, and am now perfectly well. I strongly recommend it to suffering humanity.

To Whom It May Concern:

This is to certify that after taking one jug of Microbe Killer I was permanently cured of a severe attack of bronchitis and pulmonary inflammation, said illness having resisted all methods of medical treatment.

I cheerfully recommend Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer as being more than is claimed for it.

Briefs.

That man who paid such close attention to your sermon last Sunday, brother pastor, needs the helpful agency of the weekly visits of the ADVOCATE to clinch the truth of that sermon! Have you interviewed him on that subject?

If every prayer for the evangelization of the world was backed by strong and persistent work for the souls of men, would not the progress of the church receive an impetus in the next ten days which would carry it forward to a point of vantage of which we had not even dreamed? If we all prayed as if everything depended upon God, and then turned out and worked as if all depended upon the vigor of our efforts, would not society soon wear an entirely new aspect? Faith and work; these two "God hath joined together." He who separates them realizes the curse of failure in Christian life.

Our government seems likely to have some trouble with Germany in regard to the Samoan Islands. It seems that Germany has interfered in some way with the natives of the Islands. There has been two or three fights, in which quite a number of persons have been killed. The United States government seems to consider itself under obligation, by treaty regulations with the Samoans, to endeavor to keep the peace. The President has already dispatched several war vessels to the scene, and diplomatic circles in Washington and Berlin are considerably exercised over the matter. It seems to us that we might do better work than picking up a quarrel with Germany about a few little islands in the South Pacific Ocean, thousands of miles away.

The twenty three Woman's Missionary Societies in the United States are doing a grand work for missions in foreign lands. They support 680 missionaries, and 424 Bible women and native helpers; and for carrying forward this work during the last fiscal year they collected and expended $1,117,110. Since they began on this line of work in 1861, they have collected and expended $10,307,990. These figures we have obtained from The Missionary Review of the World, for February. The first missionary to tell the joyful news of a risen Christ was a woman; and the developments of the last twenty-five years are fast showing the women of our time to be worthy successors of that first missionary.

It has been stated, by whom we presume to be good authority—Dr. Strong, in his book, "Our Country"—that one-fifth of the wealth of the United States is in the possession of members of Christian Churches! This he computes to be $8,728,400,000. He also states that the annual average increase of the wealth of Christians in this country between 1870 and 1880 was $391,740,000. Then he shows that these church members give annually to the cause of missions one-sixteenth of one per cent. of their wealth. That statement is enough to alarm any man who believes the Bible. And yet we can not contradict it. Indeed, we know men who profess to be Christians who don't give to missions one-fiftieth of one per cent. of their wealth. And yet they think they are on their way to the kingdom!

Thoughts on Preaching.

We have said that the preacher is called to be a leader, and that to fulfill this call he must be a thinker, and put forth his thoughts in language clear and easy to be understood. No matter how true and deep the thought may be, if it is not expressed so that the hearer may apprehend it easily, it loses its force. If the hearer's attention is attracted to the language in which the thought is clothed, the continuity of the thought is broken, and that breaks the force of the thought. In preaching this is done in two different ways. If the language consists of unusual words, the hearer's attention is withdrawn from the thought to the words, and the connection is interrupted, and, of course, the effect is weakened. If the language consists of improper words, or words used improperly, there results the same evil effect. Any language that calls the hearer to think of it, weakens the force of the thought. We listened not long since to a brother pray, and so remarkable were the words in which the prayer was clothed that our attention was completely taken up by them, and we were not in the least edified. It is so in preaching. Any unusual words, or unusual use of words, is sure to start the hearer's mind off to discover their meaning, and the preacher may pronounce a dozen sentences before the mind gets back; and those sentences may be the very ones the hearer needed to hear. If we have studied our passage until we have found God and his thought in it, our object in preaching ought to be to communicate God and his thought to the hearers. If, however, we clothe that thought in a language which attracts even the least attention, we divert the mind of the hearer to the clothing, and he misses the thought, and we have failed of our purpose. The simplest language is the only legitimate language for a speaker who addresses a promiscuous audience.

Some of the brethren may think this is a very small matter, and hoot at the idea of a preacher studying all the languages he can in order to find the simplest, but to us it seems to be very important. Paul, who was a master of languages, thought it of sufficient importance to devote nearly a whole chapter to this one point: "If I come unto you speaking with tongues, what shall I profit you? So likewise ye, except ye utter by the tongue words easy to be understood, how shall it be known what is spoken? For ye shall speak into the air! I had rather speak five words by my understanding, that by my voice I might teach others also, than ten thousand words in an unknown tongue." There is a good deal of this "unknown tongue" in our pulpits to-day, and there is not a particle of necessity for it. It obscures the light and breaks the force of thought, and confuses a great many more hearers than it edifies. There is no need for the use of "learned language" in the pulpit. It perplexes our unlearned hearers, and our learned hearers invariably prefer to have thought presented in the simplest words, arranged in the most natural way.

If this is so, then it is our plain duty, as preachers, to study and, if need be; toil for simplicity of style—style so transparent that it is never seen when looking through it at the thought. We have looked through glass so clear that we did not know we were looking through it until the attention was called to that fact. That is an illustration of the style we ought to use when speaking God's thoughts to our hearers. Who ever thinks of the Master's style when reading his discourses? And yet no words have ever been spoken which were so simple and so full of thought. The words are so simple and the style so clear that you perceive nothing but the thought, unless your attention is especially directed to the words and style. If your attention has never been called to this fact before, you can turn to any of our Lord's discourses and immediately verify the statement here made. It is said of our Lord's preaching that "the common people heard him gladly;" and the reason is in the fact that he spoke the profoundest truths in the simplest language. They saw the thought clearly, and, of course, easily apprehended it. Sometimes we think there is no special need to study in order to find simple language in which to express our thoughts. We say to ourselves, "If we can apprehend the thought vigorously, the language will come of itself; for do we not think in language? And if we think clearly, the language in which we think must be clear." As the logician would say, there is a subtle fallacy right there. Though we may clearly apprehend the thought, yet, when we are preparing to express to others what is clear to us, there is a tendency to vagueness in proportion to the profoundness of the thought. The pride of intellect is humbled by the fact that the results of its deepest study may be expressed in words that everybody can understand. The result is so simple from efforts which have cost so much that the mind turns away to find words that will, in some measure, at least, give the hearer an idea of the work done to arrive at the result. This subtle and often unperceived tendency is the direct cause of a good deal of "magniloquent preaching." Intellectual pride says that the words must show that we have been at work studying our subject. Common sense and religion say that the thought must show that we have been at work. If we have the thought and would show it, we must take care not to clothe it in words that will hide it.

The tendency to vagueness of style in proportion to depth of thought makes us insist that it is absolutely necessary to study to acquire simplicity of style in preaching the gospel. And there is no better place in all literature for that study than the gospel itself, as recorded in the New Testament. As preachers, we study the Bible for our theology and doctrine. That is well, for we can find them nowhere else. As preachers, we study the Bible for spiritual food. That is good also, for "man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." As preachers, we must study the Bible for our intellectual nourishment that, by the training which such study gives, we may be able to apprehend God's great thoughts. As proclaimers of the truth, we must study the Bible as the best model of style for the men who are sent to preach God's great thoughts to dying sinners.

To one and all of our preachers we say, then, study the Bible for thought—study the Bible for style. In that book we have God's thoughts expressed in God's style; and neither can be improved, but both can be followed.

The First Worship of Christ.

A weak babe lay in a lowly manger in an obscure village in the land of Judea. Strange visions of celestial visitors, communicating wonderful revelations from the heavenly world concerning the Child, had stirred the curiosity of many! Premonitions of an unusual kind had taken hold of many pious souls, and a preternatural influence penetrating the far East had started some of her wise men westward in search of a king in his cradle. The far-famed wisdom of the East sent its representatives in eager haste to search for the only boy that was ever "born a King." In the light of subsequent events, we can but wonder at and admire the wisdom that thus sought to lay its willing tribute of honor and affection at the feet of the only truly royal person the world ever saw.

We read that when the wise men found him whose attracting power had brought them from their far Eastern home, "they opened their treasures, and presented unto him gifts, gold, frankincense and myrrh." What an exquisite picture of beautiful simplicity! How we delight to linger in the precincts of that manger hallowed by the presence of the royalty of Heaven! How grand is the spectacle of those venerable sages prostrating themselves in adoration and offering their gifts! How strange it all seemed to the mother of that babe! Painters with rarest skill have endeavored to put the picture on canvass, but none of them have ever given so vivid a coloring to the scene as the simple words of Matthew leave upon the mind of every true reader!

Here is a most significant fact. The first worship ever offered to the incarnate Son of God was offered by strangers! And as curious as it may seem, that worship was as complete as any ever offered by the best instructed and most enlightened of God's people. They said, "We are come to worship him." "And they fell down and worshiped him, and, opening their treasures, they offered unto him gifts." This is as complete an act of worship as anyone could give. The prostration of body before him was in honor of his royalty. The gifts were an evidence of their loyalty to his royal person. These gifts were of the most costly and valuable kind. These men evidently understood the nature of true worship. God always and everywhere has required the best and costliest and the most valuable that the worshiper possesses. He who thinks that less will be accepted does not know the true nature of worship.

Another significant fact is, that in the first worship offered to the incarnate Son of God gold was the first offering. "Opening their treasures, they presented unto him gifts, gold, frankincense and myrrh." The gold came first. This showed the estimate the worshipers placed upon the privilege of worshiping the incarnate Son of God. They felt that the privilege had, to them, a money value; and, like David, they would not offer that which cost them nothing. The first time these strangers found the Christ they worshiped and presented an offering of gold. That was the proof of the genuineness of their act of worship, and by it they are putting to shame the genuineness of the worship of hundreds of Christians of to-day. How many next Sunday, when they go to the sanctuaries to worship the Christ, will take along with them an offering of gold to give proof to the reality of their worship? Ought not the worship of to-day include as much as the worship of those Eastern strangers? Shall not the friends—yea, the brethren of Jesus—show as much appreciation of their privileges as did those heathens of the olden time? Has not the Christ of to-day, whose grand plans are stretching out over the world for its evangelization, as much need of money as he had when he lay a weak babe in the lowly manger in Bethlehem? Reader, stop here, and ponder and pray.

The Nashville Advocate, of January 26, contained forty-four marriage notices. Hymen is having a busy time this winter.

A TRIBUTE.

BY REV. T. CADERON.

When, on the night of December 21, a young man said to me, in the hotel at Durant, Miss., "Dr. T. A. S. Adams is dead," I could not for a time realize that I heard aright. When I found there could be no longer any doubt as to the correctness of the report, I could think of nothing else scarcely for days. The loss to the North Mississippi Conference is indeed very great; and as time wears on, deeper and deeper grows the sense of my personal bereavement in his death. As his Conference classmate, and as his admiring, loving friend, I feel impelled to write these lines. We joined the Mobile Conference together in 1867, and during these twenty years and more there has existed a warm, confiding, undisturbed friendship. Few men seemed so free, so much at home at my house; and none could be more welcomed. My children were drawn to him; felt at ease in his presence, and were loved and petted by him. I never saw the time when I was not heartily glad to see him, and was always profited by association with him.

It is not, or would not be, an easy matter to write a comprehensive sketch of my dead friend—a task which I do not purpose undertaking, as this paper does not seek to go beyond the limits of a mere personal tribute. Among his acquaintances it goes without saying that T. A. S. Adams was far above ordinary in his intellectual make up, and in the breadth of his scholarship. A valued friend and brother, himself a fine discriminating judge of character, writes me thus of Bro. Adams: "He did not leave his superior in the Conference. As a thinker, a scholar and a profound preacher, he was above us all." And this witness is true. Another, in a sister Conference, says: "Had he lived further north, his efforts in the world of letters would, perhaps, have been more highly appreciated." And, doubtless, this is also true.

As a preacher, he was remarkable for the originality as well as the breadth of his thought. He was not like anyone else. I doubt if he ever, in his whole ministerial life, either consciously or unconsciously, sought to imitate any man, living or dead, in the manner or matter of his preaching. He was, perhaps, by nature incapable of such. He was himself always. His Creator made him to be T. A. S. Adams, and he could not have been anything else.

When I approached him at the last Annual Conference, and told him he was appointed to preach that (Thursday) night, he tried to beg off, saying, "Tom, I am not a 'Conference preacher;'" but the committee had fixed the appointment, and we were anxious for him to preach and to be at his best. He consented, and all who heard him will long remember his grand exposition of John i, 10. It was his last sermon. Only eight days from that hour he was stricken down suddenly by death, and his great soul, washed in the blood of that Jesus whom he so delighted to preach, went back to God who gave it.

We shall miss his sunny face and genial companionship at our annual gatherings, and it fills the heart with sadness to think that we shall no more hear the gospel from his lips! He had such a splendid physique that there was promise of long life. How inscrutable are the doings of Providence!

May gracious heavenly Father vouchsafe the consolations of the gospel to the disconsolate wife of our departed brother!

Doubtless this winter day, as I pen this imperfect tribute, the spirit of my comrade is in the bright world above, basking in the light of his Savior's presence, done with earth's care and labors forever.

Dear, loved friend, thou ha far outstripped me in every rac even in this last; but thou ha reached the goal, and I hope shall after awhile overtake th where thou hast stopped. T then, farewell!

HATESVILLE, Mississippi.

Notes.

The Centennial of the inauguration of General Washington as the fi President of the United States, will celebrated in New York City, April next. The committee, having matter in charge, have sent out cir lars from which we learn that very e tensive preparations are being made render the celebration a grand s cess, and in every way worthy of t historic event which started this gr republic on its career among t nations of the earth.

The University of Giessen, not lo since, conferred the degree of Do Divinitatis upon Prince Bismar The Prince acknowledged the ho in these words:

The University of Giessen, cor sponding to the intentions of founder, the Landgrave Ludwig, always been a representative of rel lous tolerance, and I owe the d tinction conferred on me to my cessant efforts in behalf of the ca of tolerant and practical Christiani He who is conscious of his own sho comings, and whose knowledge increased by old age and long expe ence, will be tolerant towards the f ferent opinions of others.

The church these days seems, in respect, at least, to be the antitype Ezekiel's wheels. In every chur organization there seems to be churches. There is the aggregation those whose names are on the book, and, then, there is the in circle—a sort of church within church—which consists of those w do the work and keep up the spiri fires. If anybody can invent a re or formula that would cause these different sets to coalesce, it would great blessing. We have heard of pastor offering to swap one hund and fifty of his members for a do spiritually minded, working Christi Was that you, brother pastor?

Says the New York Witness:

The ministers, too, are often fault in failing to recognize the a lute necessity for some personal ef on the part of each individual mem of the church. We have known able and devoted ministers who constantly urging the obligations discipleship from the pulpit, and never made even a vigorous effort organize their people for aggres Christian work. These men could be made to see that it was essentia the spiritual growth of the mem of their churches that they should actively engaged in the Mas service, and that such a result only be attained through organizat It is not the most brilliant preac who accomplishes the best res but the pastor who can get the lar proportion of his members harne to the gospel chariot. One man, matter how able or eloquent he be, can not do the work of a do still less of a hundred.

This is not only the day of spec lists, but it is a time of special d There is now another special Sund it is called the Law and Order Sund The request has gone out from Citizens' Law and Order League the United States, that, on February the pastors of the various churches the country "preach on the relati of civil and religious liberty to and good government." The Le holds its annual convention in Bi February 18 and 19, and the day fore it sits is the time selected for preachers of every denomination discourse to their people on the ab named subject. It is certainly magnificent theme, and it will do preacher good to prepare a sermon it, and it will do his people good hear it.

During our pastorate we als lusisted that the Sunday-school an integral part of the church, and thled to its support from the ch funds. Several times we were o ruled by the church Boards. We glad to see that this subject is attr ing attention just now, and trust time is near when everyone will the true status of the Sunday-sch and recognize its right to be s ported by the church. The Sun School Times, on this subject, says:

Reforms often move slowly, but t movement is pretty sure to be in a ward direction. One of the refo of our day is in the line of secur recognition by the church of the S day-school as an integral portion the church agency. So long as expenses of the pulpit, and the c and the heating and lighting dep ment, are provided for out of common fund, while the expens the Bible-teaching department shut out from that fund, it will difficult to make it obvious to average mind that the Sunday-sc is really deemed as essential to a regulated church organization as any one of these other factors. Y is unmistakably true that a ma jority of the churches of the ited States continue to make this desirable distinction.

Personals.

The Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals prosecuted a man, last week, for beating his mule with a whip-stock, and the recorder fined him twenty dollars. There is great need of that society in this city, and we trust everybody will give aid and comfort to it.

Montgomery county, Miss., recently held a local-option election, and the majority was for prohibition.

Rev. R. O. Burton, D. D., entered the North Carolina Conference in 1833, but he is doing circuit work yet, and preaches with vigor and power.

Our esteemed neighbor, the Southwestern Presbyterian, had the misfortune to be rousted out of office last week by a fire. We understand the loss to be considerable. Dr. Smith has removed to 104 Gravier street, and after a few days' delay the Southwestern comes forth with fresh vigor.

Last Friday was the fifty-second anniversary of the establishment of the Daily Picayune. A paper that has lived and daily sent forth its complement of reading for fifty-two years is entitled to congratulations. And, so we offer ours.

Some brother wrote us a postal card report from his work, but did not sign his name. We might guess who he is; but suppose he did not write it, then what?

The Nashville Advocate, of January 26, had this personal in regard to Bishop McTyeire:

Bishop McTyeire's condition is not materially changed since our last issue. He is very weak, and the upward movement is very slow. The prayers of the church for him will not cease.

John M. Phillips, senior agent of the Methodist Book Concern, at New York, died recently. He lacked only two months of being sixty-nine years old, and had been in the Book Concern at Cincinnati and New York since 1836.

Samples of our Sunday-school literature have been received for February. As we have said before, this is the best literature of its kind that we know. The Little People, The Lesson Papers, The Visitor and the Monthly Magazine are all about what they ought to be. They are a credit to our editors and our church.

We are pained to record the death of George L. Record, a prominent member of our church at Vicksburg, Miss.

We see it stated that as soon as Bishop McTyeire is able to endure the trip, he will be brought to Ocean Springs, Miss. There is hardly any recuperating power equal to the invigorating breezes of our Southern gulf. We trust he will soon be able to make the trip.

In the article on the first page, entitled "The Cross to Come," you will find wholesome food for your soul, dear reader. Read and ponder it well.

We learn from Bro. Smith, of Covington, La., that a new and cosy parsonage has been recently built by our people in that place. We are always glad to chronicle such news of progress.

The publisher requests the preachers of the three Conferences to send him a list of the postoffices within their work. Make out a list now, and send it in. It will be a benefit to you and the ADVOCATE.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. M. L. White writes from Vancleave, Miss., January 22: "I left my home on December 28, passed through your city on the twenty-ninth, and reached Ocean Springs and stopped over Sunday with Bro. W. R. Stuart. After a drive of fifteen miles we reached the parsonage. Here we were met by the good sisters and brethren of this circuit with baskets of provisions and feed for my horse, and wood and potatoes. After singing that familiar song, 'Jesus, lover of my soul,' we were led in prayer by Bro. Thomas Price. This people's kindness has not ceased. Every few days some one comes in with a bundle of nice things. I have filled all of my appointments up to date. I have nine appointments, and they are a good distance apart. I have some of my foreign mission money in hand and some in subscription. I am making an effort to get some new subscribers to the ADVOCATE, believing that wherever the ADVOCATE is taken we generally have a genuine revival of religion. I do want to see the people on this circuit take a higher stand in Christianity."

—Rev. J. W. Huggins writes from Abbeville circuit, North Mississippi Conference, January 22: "At our last Conference I was appointed to the Abbeville circuit; moved to the charge in time to preach on the fifth Sunday in December; was very kindly received by this good people. A magnificent storm had just visited the parsonage, supplying it with eatables in great abundance and variety. We have a very comfortable parsonage, partially furnished. What a blessing to the itinerancy would a furnished parsonage be in every charge! And what a benefit to the charges, not only spiritually, but financially. I shall do all I can for our church paper. Every Methodist family should take, at least, one church paper. I fear too many of our people prefer secular papers. As preachers, we are, I think, sometimes to blame for this state of affairs. We are encumbered with so many cares that we forget to advocate the claims of our papers. I think I shall do better in this matter than I have done in the past." (Amen!—ED.)

—Rev D. C. Langford writes from Vassburg, Miss., January 25: "The Bishop returned me to the good people of Vassburg circuit, and we have taken a start for another year. Our hard-worked presiding elder, Bro. Norsworthy, has held our first Quarterly Conference, and our stewards provided liberally for the ministry. Success to the dear ADVOCATE!"

—Rev. A. E. Clay writes from Franklin, La., January 23: "You are giving us a good paper, and I am working for it harder than ever. Franklin is moving at a better gait than ever before in some things."

Important.

During the last ten days the publisher sent to every preacher in the three Conferences a postal card, addressed to the ADVOCATE, with the request that it be returned with the names of the postoffices within their work written thereon. Some of the aforesaid postal cards have returned; a few contain an answer to the request, but most of them come bearing other messages. Brethren, please send the publisher the names of the postoffices within your work. This is important to you.

BOOKS.

KNITTERS IN THE SUN. By Octave Thanet. Houghton, Mifflin and Company, Boston and New York. For sale by Eyrich, 130 Canal St., New Orleans. Price, $1 25.

Here are nine stories that form pleasant reading for the long winter evenings. The style is clear and chatty and the lessons wholesome.

UNDER THE MAGNOLIAS. By Lyman W. Denson, M. D. Funk and Wagnalls, New York. For sale by Eyrich, 130 Canal St., New Orleans. Price $1 50.

This is a Southern story of love and temperance and suffrage reform. The author seems to find great need of suffrage reform in the South, and we agree with him on that point. The book has many just observations, but it seems to be hastily, and is certainly crudely, written. As a literary production the book does not take high rank.

EATING FOR STRENGTH. By M. L. Holbrook, M. D. Published by M. L. Holbrook and Company, New York. For sale by Eyrich, 130 Canal St., New Orleans.

Dr. Holbrook is a professor in one of the Medical Colleges in New York, and the editor of Herald of Health. In the little volume before us he discourses on food and diet in their relation to health and work and, at the close of the volume, gives several hundred recipes for whole-some foods and drinks. The book is packed with practical, as well as scientific information in regard to the needs of the physical system, and the best way to supply those needs. Not the least useful part of this information is what is cheap as well as wholesome food. We apprehend that a general reading of this little food manual will result in great good to the people's pockets and stomachs and health.

THREE GREEK CHILDREN. A Story of Home in Old Time. By Rev. Alfred J. Church, professor of Latin in University College, London. Illustrated. G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York. For sale by Eyrich, 130 Canal St., New Orleans. Price, $1 25.

This is the most delightful book for children that we have seen for many a day. It portrays to the children of to-day the home life among the Greeks two thousand years ago. The toilets, lessons, travels, with descriptions of the national games are clearly set forth. Even the toys and dresses of the children, the family sacrifices and the marriage customs are described. Athens and Sparta and Corinth are seen through children's eyes, and their war stories and pious legends are heard from the lips of the Spartan nurse. We say this is an instructive, interesting and delightful book for the boys and girls of to-day.

MISSOURI; A BONE OF CONTENTION. By Lucien Carr. Houghton, Mifflin and Company, Boston and New York. For sale by Eyrich, 130 Canal St., New Orleans. Price, $1 25.

This volume belongs to the American Commonwealth Series, edited by Horace E. Scudder. We imagine it is something of a task to condense the history of a State into the compass of a book like this without turning it into a "stupid array of dull facts," but Mr. Carr has succeeded in making a small and most interesting history of the great State of Missouri. It has, indeed, been a "bone of contention" from the passage of the Missouri Compromise until the close of the late war, and its history is of thrilling interest from the period of the cession of the magnificent domain, west of the Mississippi, by treaty with France in 1803 to the present. Mr. Scudder, in editing this Commonwealth Series with so much ability, is doing the whole country an invaluable service.

PERIODICALS.

—The Missionary Review of the World, for February, is promptly issued and is fully up to the high-water mark which this monthly has reached. In the Literature section we have a masterly Vindication of Missions, by Dr. Pierson, and Miracles of Missions (The Blind in China) from the same facile pen. The third paper on Missions to the Levant, by Mr. Bliss from Constantinople, is very interesting. Prof. Schodde on the Semi-Centennial of Delitzsch's Hebrew New Testament is of great value. Dr. C. S. Robinson has another of his characteristic papers on Egypt. Mrs. Dr. Gracey, on Woman and Woman's Work at the London Conference, will excite attention, while Dr. Cust's Missionary Heroes in Africa is a thrilling and inspiring contribution. All the other seven departments of The Review are, as usual, crowded with matter specially adapted to their several purposes. The Review grows in interest and power from month to month. The first volume now bound—a sumptuous volume of nearly 1,000 pages—is an emphatic contribution to the literature of missions.

Published by Funk & Wagnalls, 18 and 20 Astor Place, New York. $2 per year; 25 cents for single numbers. In clubs of ten, $1 50.

—Outing, for January, has several readable articles, such as, Among the Taurus Mountains, by L. B. Platt; American College Athletics, by J. M. Hollowell. Published at 239 Fifth Avenue, New York. Price, $3.

—Our Dumb Animals is a monthly published in the interest of animals. Its motto is: "We speak for those who can not speak for themselves." This paper is worthy to go into the home of every farmer in this broad land. Published by the Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, 19 Milk St., Boston. Price, fifty cents a year.

—The Pansy, for January, is a beautiful number. This is especially adapted to the "wee small folks," and will delight them all. D. Lothrop Company, Boston. Price, $1.

—The Magazine of Art, for February, opens with a photogravure of Mr. Gladstone. The principal articles are Italy, the Art Center of the World, by John Flaxman; The Isle of Arran, by Miss L. Higgin; Mr. Gladstone and his Portraits, by T. W. Reid. Published by Cassell and Company, New York. Price, $3 50.

Literary Notes.

A new children's journal, backed by Philadelphia capital, is to be called Santa Claus, and to be published simultaneously in New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Toronto and London.

The late Lord Stanhope's Notes of Conversations with the Duke of Wellington, just published in England by John Murray, will be issued in America by Longmans, Green & Co.

Dr. James McCosh, ex-president of Princeton College, has in the Scribners' press the crowning philosophical work of his long and fruitful life, the title of which is, First and Fundamental Truths: a Treatise on Metaphysics.

The Harpers have in preparation for publication this month, Fur Faith and Freedom, a new volume in the illustrated Library Edition of Walter Besant's novels: Bible Characters, by Charles Reade; Our English, by Prof. A. S. Hill, of Harvard; and—Modern Science in Bible Lands, by Sir J. W. Dawson, with maps and illustrations.

The New Princeton Review and the Political Science Quarterly have been consolidated by the publishers of the latter purchasing the former. The Review is merged into the Quarterly. Prof. Sloane, of the Review, is retained on the staff of the Quarterly.

Writing for Young People—Ideal, Shorthand for Literary Purposes, Mental Dyspepsia, Statute Regulations for the Press, On Quoting, and Learning to Write are among the many literary topics discussed by well-known writers in the January number of The Writer (Boston). This unique magazine for literary workers is now in its third volume, and its continued success and prosperity are assured. To young writers it is simply invaluable, while writers of experience find it both instructive and entertaining.

It is the intrinsic merit alone of Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer that has gained for it great popularity for restoring the natural color of the hair.

A Sioux City clergyman's prescription to young men who desire to get on in the world is to "mix brains with self-denial." That's good doctrine for those who have the brains to start with.

Next to your subscription the greatest favor you can extend the ADVOCATE, in a business point, is to mention the paper in writing to advertisers.

"Ma, what is a linguist?" asked her little boy, looking up from his reading. "A native of Lynn, Johnny."

Our Young People.

BABY'S FIRST PRAYER.

Little fat fingers crossed meekly,
Mouthing patient mamma;
Gracie looks up to our Father:
Charmingly lisping "ash, ish."

This is the whole of her worship;
Yet he who preached to hear
Won little lambs on his bosom,
Listens to baby's first prayer.

Sweet little picture of heaven!
Well did the good Master say,
They must be like little children
Who would my Father obey.

Baby knows nothing of doubting,
Dark unbelief and despair;
All these she leaves to grown people,
Baby knows only her prayer.

So, let it be, gracious Father,
All through her life's blessed day;
When clouds and darkness oppress her,
Teach her, great Teacher, to pray.

Tenderly lead and protect her,
Draw her with fatherly love,
Make her both perfect and holy,
Fit for the mansions above.

Then, though my baby girl's future,
Blissful or fateful may be,
Her's is the ultimate welcome,
"Little one, come unto me."

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy eight years old, and have never written to your valuable paper, so I suppose it is time to begin, as I am in the fifth reader, have been through geography and primary arithmetic, and have been taking writing lessons.

We moved to Newton, a nice town on the V. and M. R. R., just before Christmas. My papa is the new preacher here, and, though sad at parting with our dear friends in Yazoo, we have found so many good people here, and they gave us such a nice, warm reception, and we are so comfortable in our nice parsonage home, that we could not help being happy. My mamma says she has some new proof of the kindness of the people every day, and that she is in love with them. I went up to Hickory with mamma and papa to Quarterly Conference, last week, and had a splendid time at Bro. Harper's and other places. Our presiding elder, Bro. P. A. Johnston, preached two fine sermons. I love him very much, for he preaches to little children as well as to grown people. I took my first communion. Do you think I am too young? I was very much interested in little I. W. Cooper's account of his cat, in last week's paper, and think that next to mine she is the nicest cat I know of, and ought to take the blue ribbon. I. W. ought to see our cats—my brother's and mine. They are exactly alike (white and yellow), very large, and fine mousers. When we left Benton we could not bear the thought of parting with them, so we put them in a box with slats across the top, and my older brother carried them on the train. At Jackson we turned them loose in our room at the hotel and let them take exercise. A lady told me it was bad luck to move cats, unless you let their feet touch the ground three times; but she is an intelligent lady and only said that in a joke, of course. So I. W., you need not be afraid to move your cat, and I would advise you to do it, for you will be awful glad you did. When I came home from Hickory I brought a big rooster, which Jimmie Harper gave me, on the train. I just had him in a little box. Your little friend,

BENNIE PARKER.

NEWTON, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: It was Goliah's son that had six fingers on each hand and six toes on each foot. He was killed by David's brother, Jonathan. This is a good question of Mabel Hangford. Papa says he has seen several children that way, and he cuts them off. I don't see much use in five toes anyhow. I am a little boy seven years old. I expect to be a preacher. I go fox hunting some times. We caught one yesterday. How many times are foxes spoken of in the Bible?

"Good Enough Boys."

"I made a bob sled according to the directions given in my paper," said Fred Carroll, petulantly, "and it would not run."

"So I believe," said his friend, George Lennon. "You also made a box telephone, and that didn't work."

"How do you account for it?" asked Fred, curiously. "I do everything just according to the book, but somehow nothing comes out right."

George smiled as he answered quietly, "I can account for it easily, because I saw you make both the sled and the telephone; and you did not make them according to directions."

"What do you mean?" demanded Fred, flushing up. "Did'nt I put in everything required? What did I omit?"

"You omitted exactness," replied George, gravely. "Now don't get angry, Fred, and I will tell you what I noticed. When you made the telephone you did not draw the wire tight, as directed. You left it hanging slack, and when I spoke to you about it, you said it was 'good enough.'"

"I know that," admitted Fred; "but I thought it would do."

"Of course you did! Then, in making the sled, you made two mistakes in your measurements. You nailed the forward crosselect about six inches from the end, thus interfering with the play of the front bob; and the guards were so low down that a fellow's knuckles scraped the ground. The consequence was, that there was no satisfaction in riding on the sled."

"And I broke it up," exclaimed Fred, cressly. "It was no good."

"It was a 'good enough' sled," said George, with a smile. "Instead of being careful to have every measurement exact, you guessed at some, and made mistakes in others; and to every objection you replied that it was good enough. That generally means no good at all."

Fred turned angrily away from his friend, but he knew he was right.

How many "good enough" boys are reading these lines? The boy who sweeps his employer's store, and neglects the corners and dark places, is sweeping "good enough." So is the boy who skims his lessons, or does the home chores in careless fashion.

"Good enough" boys rarely attain more than subordinate positions, and if, by any chance, they get into a position of trust, they can not keep it. It is the thorough boy, the careful boy, the exact boy, who makes his mark in the world.—Selected.

PROUD OF HIS SISTER.—The Chicago Tribune relates the case of a young man who was regarded as a phenomenon because he took his sister to all the best entertainments, and actually devoted himself to her during the lecture and concert season. Being praised for his unusual attention to his sister, the young man promptly and proudly replied:

"No, there's nothing wonderful or extraordinary about it. She is the only woman I know in whom I have the most thorough confidence. She is always the same, always pleased and affectionate, and to tell you the candid truth, I'm afraid she'll go and marry some of these imitation men around here and be unhappy all her life.

"She has nobody else to look to, and I'll take care she does not have to look to anybody else. I suppose some day a genuine man will come along. If he's a genuine man, I won't object. Until he does come, she's good enough for me; and if ever I find as good a girl, I'll marry her."

The example is most commendable. A young man would do well to seek his sister's society until he finds another lady as good as his sister.—Selected.

Rheumatism originates in lactic acid in the blood, which, settling in the joints, causes the pains and aches of the disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla cures rheumatism by neutralizing the acidity of the blood, and giving it richness and vitality. Try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"O mother," said a little fellow, who had been visiting school with his elder brother, "I learned that the square and the base and perpendicular of a right-handled triangle is equal to the sum of the hippopotamus."

Household.

Going to Housekeeping.

A few months ago two young people were married. They each came from among the best families in Central New York, where there are so many good families. The bride was graduated a few years ago from one of our standard female colleges with its highest honors. Soon thereafter she engaged in teaching, for which she had specially prepared herself and for which she has a decided aptitude.

The bridegroom is well educated, academically and professionally, but is still taking "special courses" that he may rise to the heights of his profession.

Both are poor; that is, the parents of neither are able to give them a "brown stone front" to live in, with a bank account to run it. But they are rich in their mutual love for the sovereign good which evermore brings them nearer each other; rich in their mutual likings for literature, art, and science; rich in their resolutions to take up gladly the united burden of their lives, and rich in their capabilities to perform the duties they have assumed.

Upon their marriage they went at once to housekeeping. A three-roomed flat, not far from the business center of the city, was found at a moderate rent, and for a moderate sum it was neatly furnished. The parlor, with a folding bed in it serves also for a sleeping room. A sofa-bed in the dining room accommodates a chance guest; and there is the kitchen with its range and all the facilities for cooking within the smallest possible compass. An oil or gas stove makes it easy to get up a meal in a very brief portion of time. And this is desirable, for the wife still pursues her vocation as teacher, and at nine o'clock every school day is in her place in the school-room.

The husband, after long solicitation, was permitted to get the breakfast, which in that household is always a simple repast, and the wife reaches home in the afternoon in time to have a nice dinner ready when six o'clock and her husband come. The markets afford every variety of food grown in temperate and tropical climes; at the grocery stores and bakeries food ready for the table may be procured; laundry facilities are of the best and at reasonable rates. "A woman" may be hired on Saturdays to put the house in proper order for the week to come.

Every evening, save Saturday and Sunday, the wife goes with her husband to the laboratory, where his special course of study is carried on, and studies with him there. They are both members of a vital church, and their Sabbath afternoons are given to a course of Bible studies in the Young Men's Christian Association.

These young people could "afford" to get married. They can "afford" to go to housekeeping. They find it cheaper than boarding and incomparably more pleasant. They live within their means, and are laying up something for a rainy day, besides adding constantly to their power of wage earning. Their habits are regular, they do not waste themselves by late hours, theater going, and social dissipations; their enjoyments are simple and normal, and the lines of their lives are all tending upward.—New York Advocate.

HOME FIRST.—Let home stand first before all other things. No matter how high your ambition may transcend its duties, no matter how far your talents or your influence may reach beyond its doors, before everything else build up a true home. Be not its slave; be its minister. Let it not be enough that it is swept and garnished, that its food is delicious; but feed the love in it, feed the truth in it, feed thought and aspiration, feed all charity and gentleness in it. Then from its walls shall come forth the true woman and the true man, who shall together rule and bless the land.

In 1866, Henry G. Shute, of Beaufort, S. C., wrote Dr. Sanford Bennett:

"I regard your Ambrett a specific for chills and fever. It was used on the Charleston & Savannah R. Road last summer and autumn in the most sickly region, and under the most trying circumstances. Out of one gang of negro operatives, fifty were stricken down with chills and fever, and every one have ed by a few doses of Shallenberger's Antidote. You possess the GREATEST MEDICINE IN THE WORLD."

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it a lustre and pliancy that adds greatly to its charm. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. "I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given any rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance."—R. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—R. T. Schmitton, Dickson, Penn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hardy, Delavan, Ill.

MASON & HAMLIN

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. One hundred styles from $22 to $900 or more. Illustrated catalogues free.

ORGANS $22 TO $1000.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved GRAND & UPRIGHT by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "MASON & HAMLIN PIANO STRUNGER," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity for standing in tune, and other important advantages.

SUTTLES—At Cameron, La., on Monday, July 23, 1888, JOSEPH B. SUTTLES, aged thirty years, nine months and ten days. The deceased was born in Newton county, Miss. At an early age he manifested a strong desire for intellectual pursuits, and neglected no opportunity offered to improve his mind. On January 1, 1871, he entered the university at Georgetown, Texas, and graduated there July 10, 1878, with honorable distinction. He was chosen salutatorian by his class. On leaving the university he at once began the study of law, and on March 4, 1884, was admitted to the bar at Bryan, Texas. Shortly afterwards he returned to Cocoun parish, La., where the family of his mother, then a widow, resided, and at once made preparations to practice law in Louisiana.

Bro. Suttles was one of the characters who form the strength of a community. A man of integrity, reliable, thoroughgoing; upon whom you could depend. Such characters as make the power of the nation; not a genius nor a sparkling barrister without conscience, but a true man, uncommonly well supplied with common sense; such men as leave a vacancy in a community when they are taken that can not be filled in a day; full of public spirit, and not one altogether wrapped up in his own selfish ends. He will be greatly missed, and his place unfilled for a long time to come. Let all his friends follow him in all virtues and avoid whatever may have been his weaknesses.

Firm in the belief that in the future there is a mansion, not built by human hands, he made preparations to enter it; and during his final sickness manifested true Christian courage, patience and faith and died in the full hope of a blessed immortality.

He was married in 1880, and leaves a wife and two interesting little ones, and many friends to mourn his untimely loss. S. S. K.

WATHEN—Sister LAURA M. WATHEN (nee Hankinson) was born in Warren county, Miss., November 22, 1826 and died in Delhi, La., September 3, 1888.

The deceased united with the Methodist Church in her eighteenth year, and was converted, two years afterwards, under the ministry of the Rev. Horace Booth. Sister Wathen came to Delhi twelve years ago, and was, up to her death, a great power for good in her Master's cause. She was not only consistent and spotless in her life, and bold in condemning sin, but was one of the most zealous and influential laborers that we have ever known. Oh, how she loved God, her church, her Bible, her church paper, and everything good! What a feast to the soul to hear her pray! Her petitions were so pertinent, and so freighted with emotion, spirituality and power, that many hearts were touched and souls were led nearer to God. Her name is as ointment poured forth all over this part of our State. She died as she lived—all of faith and trusting implicitly her Savior.

The writer called to see her late one afternoon the same week she died, and among other good things she said: "I was in hopes that I would have gone to heaven to-day, but I am here yet." The battle is fought and the victory won!

H. ARMSTRONG.

CURRY—JANIE VICTORIA, wife of George W. Curry, and daughter of Henry B. and Rebecca L. McCain, was born in Alabama, September 1, 1855, and departed to her eternal rest, December 22, 1888. She was converted and received into the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, by the writer, about the year 1883. After having been a member of the P. M. Church for several years, she was again received by her old pastor during the summer of 1887. Sister Curry visited and nursed the sick in her own neighborhood, and was much beloved by all in the community. Her death was sudden and unexpected to all but herself. She told her companion and children that she was going to die, but had no fear; her only regret was that of leaving her husband and little children. Through a Christian mother's influence, her two oldest, although young, have been regularly received into the church. Sister Janie will be greatly missed, not only by her own desolate household, but by the entire community. May her aged mother, as well as her own household, find comfort in the thought that their loss is her gain! May brothers and sisters, with numerous relatives and friends, be profited by her godly life, and meet her in her eternal home!

J. F. WYNN.

JACKSON—Died at his residence, in Arcadia, Bienville parish, La., on January 16, 1889, JAMES HARDY JACKSON. He was born in Feliciana, Grayson county, Ky., February 28, 1833. He was nearly fifty-six years old. In 1848 he moved with his parents to Claiborne parish, La., being then fifteen years old. He commenced life a poor boy, and with his own hands he made the money with which he educated himself. When the war between the States broke out he early enlisted, and proved himself a good soldier throughout the struggle. When it was over he had nothing left but his integrity, his energy, his business capacity and an indomitable perseverance. With these traits of character he went to work. Commencing at the bottom, he ascended round after round till he reached the summit. He became one of the largest and most successful merchants in North Louisiana. The secret of his success is found in his diligence, punctuality, truth and uprightness.

He was converted and joined the Methodist Church at old Springhill Church, in Bienville parish, La., in 1851 or '52, in which he lived a consistent member till his death. He was often steward of the church, which position he filled with satisfaction and success. At the time of his death he held the office of steward and trustee of the Arcadia Church. He was charitable to the poor, and many were relieved by his liberality. He was a man of strong convictions, and he had the courage of his convictions. He would have sacrificed life for what he conceived to be right. Those who knew him best loved him most. He was rather reticent; hence many misunderstood him. He had many traits of character that were commendable and lovable. He was a man of public spirit, and business men had great confidence in his judgment and often sought his counsel. He was married to Miss Lucy Madden, and their married life was brightened by the birth of several children—two daughters are still living, the others are dead. Bro. Jackson loved his family devotedly. He sometimes spoke with great feeling of those that had gone to the other shore, and of the happy meeting over there, which meeting we trust has occurred.

The esteem in which he was held by the people of this community was outspoken by the very large congregation that attended his funeral at the Methodist Church, and the many tears that mingled with those of the family from sympathizing hearts. God bless the bereaved! JNO. A. MILLER.

RAINS—Miss ADA RAINS, oldest daughter of Sam L. and Mary F. Rains, and member of First Methodist Church, Memphis, Tenn., died in Iuka, Miss., July 26, 1888, after many months of brave struggling with that flattering disease, consumption, that slowly, but surely wore her young life away.

Talented and energetic, she accomplished much in the short life allotted to her here. A widowed mother sadly misses the loved daughter. May the brothers and sisters treasure in their hearts "sister's" dying words! Her aunt, Miss A. E. Ford, at whose residence she died, and where her funeral was preached by Rev. D. L. Cogdell, was thankful that it was her privilege to have dear Ada with her during the last weeks of her life, and that she should go from "Auntie's" house to our Father's home on high. Her life was pure and unselfish. Conscious to the last, with Jesus to walk with her through the valley and shadow of death, she had no fear, and it was a spiritual blessing to us who saw her pass away. May God bless the dear, waiting mother and other loved ones. "Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord!"

CARRIE E. COGDELL.

DRAUGHN—Sister MARY J. DRAUGHN was born in West Feliciana parish, La., near Laurel Hill, June 12, 1830; moved to Carroll parish about 1852, and died in Richland parish, January 5, 1889.

The deceased had been for more than a quarter of a century a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. Her piety was not of the demonstrative kind, but was steady, uniform, like the rays of the burning sun from a clear sky. She was, when in health, a regular attendant upon the ministry of the Word, and loved her church paper. She looked with eagerness each week for the dear ADVOCATE. For months past she was an invalid, and at times a great sufferer from cancer. The writer, who was her pastor, frequently called upon her in her illness, and on leaving she always said: "Pray for me all the time." Once, when making this request, I replied: "My sister, I do, and will pray for you; but how is it with you? how is your faith?" Oh, she replied, with a pleasant smile, "That is all right; my heart is fixed, but I crave sympathy and prayer." Her sun went down in a clear sky to rise and shine in eternal day. Bereaved ones, mother is gone, but she has gone home. H. ARMSTRONG.

Unprecedented success and still increasing sales attend Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. 25 cts.

Salvation Oil is the best thing in the market for both man and beast. Price 25 cents.

According to the Canadian Manufacturer, a new scheme of utilizing the sawdust of the Ottawa river for the purpose of fuel is proposed. It is claimed that by a system of grinding the refuse into a uniform fineness, mixing it with the refuse gas tar from the gas-house and compressing the substance into cakes, a fuel can be made in every way superior to soft coal for open fires.

The highest point at which regular meteorological observations are made appears to be in the Andes in Peru, at a height of 14,300 feet. Harvard College has a weather observatory on Mt. Lincoln, in Colorado, at a height of 14,297 feet.

Scientific.

ASCENDING MONT BLANC.—Three enterprising gentlemen went last summer to the top of Mont Blanc for the purpose of making a series of meteorological and physiological observations, and remained there for two or three days in order to obviate the errors which so far as the physiological observations are concerned, would be inevitable if made while still suffering from the extreme fatigue incidental to so laborious an ascent. As it was, some of them had the courage on attaining the goal to put up the tent, etc., which, with great difficulty, had been brought up, and fell asleep with their heads on the boxes of their instruments. The thermometer, when placed on the snow, registered nineteen Celsius below zero. M. Richard and one of the guides suffered from severe headache, with feverish symptoms. The least effort, even ordinary movement, caused such fatigue that they were compelled to lie down during the greater part of the day. They had masks to preserve the skin of the face from the biting cold, and the usual spectacles to avoid snow-blindness. The second day tracings were taken of the pulsation of the carotid and radial arteries. One of the guides was quite prostrated with headache and high fever, and was only got down with great difficulty. Once down, a good meal, a denser air and a milder temperature soon restored them to their normal condition of health.—British Medical Journal.

THE MARVELS OF MUD.—I never tire of examining through the microscope some bit of ocean mud, for in it I am constantly finding some remarkable form of shell. They are often spined, sometimes they are as smooth and as polished as the best glazed chinaware; at times they are pure white, then again they are banded and striped with every hue of the rainbow. It seems a pity that such beauties should be so small and hidden so far from the eyes of men. On this great bed of mud the most remarkable creatures live in vast numbers. There are serpent-like starfishes, beautiful branching corals, ugly black fishes, pure white "sea-cucumbers," bright pink, purple and red sea-anemones, and a host of other creatures. The fishes are always strange and uncouth, with huge mouths and stomachs all in one, but with the tail hardly noticeable. When the fishes are brought to the surface their air bladders and stomachs protrude from their mouths, their eyes bulge out, and the blood is forced through the skin. Life has been crushed out of them by the sudden change of pressure, the gasses within having burst the tissues and body walls asunder. The tremendous pressure of the water was well shown by lowering an empty bottle, which was crushed to atoms.—Hartford Courant.

Sulphate of copper is recommended for keeping posts and timber from decay. Telegraph poles in Norway are said to be preserved by boring inch-holes about two feet from the ground, and filling with the sulphate of copper crystals, afterward plugging the holes with wood. The crystals gradually dissolve and permeate the wood, turning it a greenish color.

As Good as Medicine.

Invalids like encouragement. The physician of kindly demeanor acts often as a remedy in himself. There is an indefinite yet delightful assurance of convalescence in every word, every gesture.

But better than this is evidence, evidence of past success, evidence of present efficiency. Such, for instance, as the following, in regard to Compound Oxygen.

FREEMANSBURG, N. Y., April 10, 1888.

"I would not have been amongst the living if it had not been for Compound Oxygen." MRS. S. GAPPLEYE.

NORWOOD, MASS., August 10, 1888.

"I have improved very much under your treatment,"

MRS. USTICK STOCK.

NEWARK, N. J., June 12, 1888.

"Mother and I are enjoying good health, no doctor having been called to our house for over three years, ever since I first sent for Compound Oxygen." MISS SUSIE STEELE.

MOTON, DEL., August 8, 1888.

"My wife says I must tell you she believes that she would have been in her grave, if it had not been for Compound Oxygen."

J. B. MUSTARD, Postmaster.

The above evidence needs no comment. We would add, however, that we publish a brochure of 200 pages, regarding the effect of Compound Oxygen on invalids suffering from consumption, asthma, bronchitis, dyspepsia, catarrh, hay fever, headache, debility, rheumatism, neuralgia; all chronic and nervous disorders. It will be sent, free of charge, to any one addressing DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.; or 331 Montgomery St., San Francisco, Cal.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS

J. G. GRANT
50 and 52 Baronne Street,
OFFERS THE FOLLOWING SUGGESTIONS:

THERE are two ways to make money. One is to earn it; the other is to save it. There are two ways of saving money. When you save a dollar by putting it in the bank you do well, but when you save a dollar by shrewd purchasing you do better. The first is saving; the second is in reality earning. So there are two ways of earning money--by labor and by wise purchasing.

LET ME SAY A WORD ABOUT PURCHASING:

The FIRST THING to learn in order to become a successful purchaser is that price means nothing until you have seen the goods. The fact that Bedroom Suits, for instance, cost $100 in one store and $65 in another tells you nothing. The $100 suit may be worth $125, while the $65 suit may not be worth carrying away. It is only when you have compared the goods as well as the prices that you are in a position to judge of what is cheap and what is not. Goods may be too cheap sometimes. Prices don't always tell the whole story. Either know the goods or know the dealer. If he has a reputation for liberality and straightforward dealing, people soon find it out. When you learn that he is carrying a larger and better stock, and that his trade is increasing rapidly, both in the city and the adjoining states, why it means something. It means that his business methods have been approved, that people have discovered his liberal ways and taken advantage of them, and it points you the direction for your next purchase.

The SECOND PRECEPT in successful purchasing is that the best is always cheapest in the end. Many people who have never visited my warerooms have the idea that only cheap goods are sold because I do not put on much outside style and occupy a showy and very high priced store, but one visit will prove that this is a great mistake. Remember that there is a big difference between CHEAP GOODS and GOODS CHEAP. Go elsewhere for cheap goods, but come here for goods cheap. The man who sells cheap goods sells his customers at the same time. I am not in that line of business. The public are beginning to understand the difference, and my trade proves it very clearly. A word to the wise is sufficient. Call and see how cheap fashionable furniture of the best quality can be sold.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The House Committee on Foreign Affairs, with only one dissenting vote, ordered a favorable report to be made upon the Senate resolution relative to European participation in the construction of the Panama Canal.

The negotiation between the officials of the Pullman Palace Car Company, which absorbed the Mann Boudoir Company and the Woodruff Palace Car Company, were closed on January 21, and an agreement executed, by which the Pullman Company obtained control of the opposition corporations. The purchase involved the expenditure of about $2,500,000, and leaves the Pullman in control of over 150,000 miles of road for palace car service.

FOREIGN.

The trial of Mr. William O'Brien, on the charge of conspiracy, began at Carrick-on-Suir, county Tipperary, on the twenty-fourth instant. Despite the proclamation of the government forbidding any demonstration, about 20,000 persons gathered around the courthouse, and greeted the appearance of O'Brien with cheers. While on trial in the court, O'Brien, assisted by the crowd, made his escape. The usual conflict took place between the police and people, in which eighty were injured.

M. Aschinoff's expedition of Cossacks, numbering 300 persons, which intends to found a colony in Abyssinia, has landed at Tadsghurah, in French territory. The expedition is strongly suspected of an intention to found a strategic settlement similar to that at Mount Athos.

The North German Gazette, Prince Bismarck's organ, denies the existence of any treaty precluding any European power from acquiring or seeking to acquire ascendancy in Samoa.

A peculiar accident occurred on January 25, at the railway works at Crewe, England. An immense crane, carrying a ladle containing seven tons of molten steel, collapsed and the ladle fell into a pit. A dispatch to the Paris Temps from Zanzibar says: "An American sailing vessel, bound from Zanzibar to Madagascar, was fired on by a German vessel and one of her masts was broken."

Mr. Timothy Healy, counsel for Mr. William O'Brien, who was sentenced at Carrick-on-Suir, on January 25, to four months' imprisonment, though he was not present in court when sentence was pronounced, says it is probable that Mr. O'Brien will surrender himself. He will appeal from the sentence, and Mr. O'Brien will thus secure a few weeks of undisturbed freedom.

Gen. Boulanger was elected to the Chamber of Deputies, on January 27, by a majority of 54,432. Premier Floquet informed President Carnot that the Cabinet was ready to resign. Every quarter of Paris was enlivened on the night of election by frequent street brawls between supporters and opponents of Gen. Boulanger.

The anniversary of the birthday of Emperor William was generally observed in Berlin on the twenty-seventh.

ROBERT HANDLE, P. E.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its utmost champions. They light for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church: that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders. The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to insure all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia R. R.

Well known as the Great Kennesaw Route, is now making twelve hours quicker time to Washington via New York and eastern points, with Pullman Buffet Sleepers from New Orleans to Washington without change. The mountain resorts of East Tennessee are reached in twenty-four hours, and Virginia resorts in thirty hours. For tickets, sleeping accommodation, circulars, schedule, etc., call at Kennesaw ticket office, 22 Carondelet street.

Insurance.

The man who pays his money out year after year for insurance is not wise if he does not keep up with the condition of the company that holds his risk. While the law in most States requires the publication of annual statements, it is only the strong, healthy insurance companies that dare get out-side the formal and limited publication. Such companies as can stand inspection may be found in our advertising columns, and are represented by men of the highest character and standing, not only in New Orleans, where they are best known, but all over the South. Take your choice from our columns; they are all as sound as the millions they represent.

H. D. McCown.

This is one of the most popular clothing and furnishing houses in the south; and we believe its success has been built upon the "one-price" principle which is adhered to strictly. We know a great many who deal at McCown's, and we have the first complaint to hear of prices or goods, which, to say the least, is good. We commend the house, and especially our young Methodist brother, Lee Bortells, who is connected with the house. He is efficient and polite, and will give your orders, personal or mail, careful attention.

Davey Training School for Boys and Girls, Lake Charles, La.

The above growing institution closed a most successful fall term on the twenty-first instant. The spring term began on December thirty-first, and closes May 17, 1889. The principals are prepared to give boarding pupils the best of care. The expenses of the spring term, if paid in advance, including everything, is only $72. In this we include tuition, writing material, board, washing, fuel, lights, etc. If paid monthly in advance, it will be at the rate of $80. For circulars and special information address Principals, Lake Charles, La.

A wholly new edition of Worcester's Dictionary is projected by the J. B. Lippincott Co., with full etymologies, additional words and fresh illustrations.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS. This is the heading of the advertisement of Mr. J. G. Grant's, 50 and 52 Baronne street, New Orleans. Now, we would suggest to our readers to peruse it carefully, and they will be astonished at the low prices which Mr. Grant is selling furniture for. As this gentleman is thoroughly reliable, and guarantees the smallest article that leaves his store, we feel satisfied that those who may try him once will have further dealings with him. There is no store of this character in the South that keeps a larger or finer assortment than his, and as his expenses are less than others in the same line, he has informed us that he can sell lower. Try him.—N. O. Weekly Picayune, January 21.

Possoa & Keul,

who advertise in our columns the Carver Wire Mat, are dealers in brick, lime, cement, paints, iron roofing, etc. We are personally acquainted with these gentlemen, and commend them to all in need of goods in their line.

WHEEZE! wheeze! wheeze! What a wretched disease asthma is, to be sure. It is painful to the patient and painful to those who hear his labored breathings. And yet a remedy is offered that is at once reasonable and effective. It is Peruna, backed by Mountain. It is sold by druggists everywhere, only $1 a bottle.

HE LEADETH ME.

pastures green? Not always. Sometimes he he knoweth best in kindness leadeth me weary ways, where heavy shadows be.

Texas Notes.

BY REV. B. W. WILLIAMS.

Texas is a great and growing ate. Her material wealth and ogress are, indeed, remarkable. r social and political pheuoma are of the most interesting aracter. Her religious and ral reform movements are as ming large proportions. Her uatic advantages, inexhausti resources, and splendid pros ets for the future, all combine invite home seekers. She is eiving a large number of im grants of the better class from older States and from vari s foreign countries. It is be ved that we are now entering on an era of prosperity that ll surpass anything we have herto experienced.

The interests of our beloved ch are not allowed to languish. r Annual Conferences were occasions of great spiritual efit, and fruitful of much to church at large. The aggre ted statistical summary shows at we have a membership of out 120,000 in the State. These nual reunions seem to have used new zeal into the church d ministry. The preachers y generally met with cordial ceptions, and from various pas al charges we have encourag reports of gospel successes. e hope and pray for a year of precedented religious growth d prosperity.

Our Texas evangelist, "Abe" ulkey, has held successful meet s at several places, in con ection with the regular pas s. It is a favorable indica n when the spirit of revival is akened early in the year. Let hope that it may be quickened d intensified until all the Con ences are made to feel the sations of a new life. We uld guard against the idea that revival season is confined to ew weeks or months in the mmer. God does not reserve grace and blessing until a ticular time of the year. At times and places he is ready, willing and anxious to save those who come to him aright.

I have thought it possible that we sometimes have too much arithmetic in revivals. Pastors and evangelists would do well to exercise a little care at this point. Of course, it is desirable that we know something of the number of conversions and accessions to the church; but let us have reasonable evidence that they are really conversions before we count them as such. Let us not count as converts all those who may have felt for a moment the influence of popular enthusiasm, and acted upon some proposition made by the preacher, as has sometimes been done. We should count only those who are really changed, and thus be sure of the accurate results.

The Twenty-first Legislature of Texas has been in session for some time past. The composition of the body indicates that the representative idea of government is growing toward its normal condition. There are twice as many farmers as men of any other occupation, showing that they are beginning to choose representatives of their own class. Bills have been introduced relating to railroad freights, the sale of public lands, the amendment of our public-school law, the improvement of public roads, and many other matters of like nature. There is much to be done during the present session in the way of reformatory legislation.

Much dissatisfaction has been felt at the tardy manner in which our public school teachers have heretofore been paid. A convention of county judges and superintendents of schools was held at Waco, January 18, to formulate such amendments to our State laws as were deemed necessary to remedy this evil. Resolutions were adopted favoring county supervision, teachers' institutes, six months' school for all the children, and provision for the prompt payment of teachers' salaries. These recommendations to the Legislature, if carried out, will, doubtless, be fruitful of much good in the improvement of our educational facilities.

WEATHERFORD, Texas.

The Educational Loan Fund.

BY REV. W. A. JOHNSTON.

The prospects for a prosperous year on the Brandon district are hopeful and growing; more so every Quarterly Conference I visit. The preachers and laymen say that the assessments must be paid in full this year. That means a genuine and great revival of religion. The Minutes of the Mississippi Conference are out, and, in the main, are correct; some mistakes. The wonder is that there are so few. If I had to edit and print them, they would be a mixed affair; so I withhold all criticism.

I want to tell you about a Sunday-school I visited the third Sunday in January. It was at Lake, Miss. Bro. Caldwell, the pastor in charge, says "he has been hunting a soft place all his life, and he has found it at last." He says further, "that you can't make a track in Lake. When it is raining and muddy, you pick it up; and when it is dry and sunny, you can't make an impression—it is so hard." It was raining and muddy when I was there; yet every child in the town, but one, was at Sunday-school. Think of it!—every child in town, but one, at the Sunday-school! This Sunday-school for fourteen or fifteen years has never suspended, winter or summer. Bro. W. M. Thornton is its efficient superintendent. This is a model school, thoroughly Methodistic, yet not sectarian, for children of other denominations attend it.

I wish to say a word about the Educational Loan Fund for Centenary College. This is, as I understand it, entirely different from the Ministerial Aid Society. One is to assist young ministers to obtain an education; the other, to aid young men to get an education at Centenary College, that they may enter any profession they may choose. The young men thus aided are to return the money as soon as possible after they are educated, that it may be loaned to others as long as the college stands and young men are to be educated. Many young men would be educated in this way that could never be otherwise. This seems to me to be the most practical plan of assisting young men I have seen. Then it would help young men to be self-helpful. They would not feel the sting of poverty, as if helped otherwise. Suppose we (the commissioners appointed at the last Conference) had $4,000 thus to loan! That would assist ten young men for four years; $100 per annum to each. That would pay their board. Most young men could furnish their wardrobe and buy their books. At the end of the fifth year $1,000 of this money would come back into the treasury, and be reloaned, perpetually. I will be one of forty to raise this amount at once. When the forty subscriptions are attained, I will be ready to pay mine. To make it more practical, let the forty subscribers pay $25 annually for four years. The commissioners can receive the money, and loan it as it is needed. Ten young men can thus be in Centenary at its next session. Any young man thirsting for an education could raise $100. Fifty dollars would pay his first year's tuition, and $50 would buy his books and clothes. He would have $100 loaned him to pay his board. He could teach three months during vacation, or get some other employment, to raise $100 necessary to pay his next year's tuition and buy his clothes, and the $100 loan the second year to pay his board. In four years he would be $400 in debt (for no interest would be required); but he would have an education, and he certainly could pay back in four years the $400. This is about my idea. I hope I am understood. Let Dr. Hunnicutt and Bro. Chambers write and explain fully their idea in asking the appointment of the Board, and what its duties, etc. I am now paying $6 per annum on an $100 endowment, and $5 per annum to the Ministerial Aid Society to educate young ministers, and I am willing to help in the other good cause; so you see, brethren, I am practicing what I preach. Shall we have the forty subscriptions? Of course, we do not intend to limit the number to forty (we ought to have 100 subscribers at once), but I would like to see ten young men to start with.

Revelations and Disclosures.

BY T. B. WHITE, D. D.

That "God will supply our every want in Christ Jesus" is a promise and assurance that sustains and comforts the child of faith. Revelations or disclosures to one of the senses may be made when that sense is impaired or wanting. As one of the five senses becomes impaired, the others seem more deft, and reach out to its relief and help; so that, quickened and sharpened in their intensity, they all bear part of the burden otherwise sustained by the afflicted member. This seems to be one of the natural laws in the vegetable world. This principle obtains in the kingdom of God. "If one member suffers, all partake of that suffering. If one member is honored, all are honored." St. Paul came to "visions and revelations" in his experience as a Christian. As to what kind of "beasts" he "fought with" at "Ephesus," we may conjecture; but if we were to say, "spiritual wickedness in high places," the supposition might not be questioned.

It has gone into a proverb that nature is the repairer of its own ills and misfortunes. This, no doubt, is true in a certain sense and extent. Time heals many a wound that sorrow has left. We say "time;" when that unseen factor we call time only dulls the faculty or sense by which sorrow and affliction becomes known to us and wrings the heart with such anguish. Wonderful provision in the economy of grace! If these are potent facts in the realm of matter and mind, may we not find their counterpart in the purely spiritual realm? Desire and imagination may enter largely into the calculation. The plain, palpable matter of experience on the part of the true and faithful Christian is none the less assuring and satisfactory. Fanaticism and superstition are to be barred in the investigation. Holding the clear and steady light of divine revelation—the "sure word of prophecy whereunto we must take heed"—the soul in its longings and desires seeks this additional testimony and comfort. I do not, can not disparage the sufficiency of the Scriptures as the rule of our faith and practice. "Let us, therefore, as many as be perfect, be thus minded: and if in anything ye be otherwise minded, God shall reveal even this unto you."

I have made these observations by reason of the experience of an aged and excellent Baptist sister, who, in my pastoral rounds, I often meet. She is quite deaf; can not hear a word or sound unless in a tone of voice far louder than the ordinary conversational tone. She touched me, and said she "had her own organ in her head." "Ah! how is that?" She continued, and told me. At times secular tunes that she knew in her girlhood were often rendered, and then sacred tunes would regale her soul. Often a lively secular tune, as "Ole Dan Tucker," would start up, and she would stamp her foot and, with emphasis, say, "O, tut, tut!" and immediately the tune would change to some good religious air. I asked her how long she had had her organ. She said, "About six months." She then asked me what it meant. I told her it seemed to be a revelation from the Lord to her, supplying what her soul most desired and needed—music to charm and soothe and bless in her hours of silence and gloom. Why not?

The phenomenon may not be explained on scientific principles, and yet it is the happy experience of a good, patient, trusting Christian.

The Power of Presiding Elders.

BY REV. T. H. M'CLENDON.

There seems to be a growing tendency in the Methodist Church to but slightly regard the appointments made by a Bishop at an Annual Conference, as giving to the church the voice of God, or the expression of his will with regard to the "men sent out." Some presiding elders whirl the boys around in their respective districts as though they had a perfect right to act at will, whether the people approve or *dis*approve—whether the preachers are benefited or injured by the move. There are in all such cases two sides. I have seen this power used to the injury of the cause, and to the disparagement of both the people and preachers. If I can see clearly, the Discipline does not contemplate the using of this power without a necessity. (See Discipline, page 76, Answer 3.) There must be a necessity, or the presiding elder is wholly powerless; and this necessity must grow out of the nature of the case in hand and the conscientious convictions of the presiding elder that the cause demands it, and nothing else. The whole machinery of the church is supposed to be run in the interest of the cause, and everything is made to subserve to this end. Then when the situation of things is such as to demand a change, and the presiding elder be a man worthy of his position, he will always act, whether the people approve or otherwise, and whether the preacher's circumstances are to be improved or injured.

Our church has always considered the appointing power to be guided by the great Head of the church in sending out these men, under God, to do that work designated; not that we claim "infallibility," but that the Bishop and the presiding elders, constituting the appointing power, labor to get possession of all the facts in all the cases before and at Conference, and then go to God in earnest prayer and ask his direction; and in this way we claim to reach the conclusion that these men go out by divine direction as much so as the seventy sent out by our Lord. God's promise is to the church, and we may expect, so long as we act in line with him, to have his aid. The plans adopted by the different churches to supply the people with the ministry are God's plans. This much must be admitted, or the divine direction in these matters must be given up. Our people have waived the right to select their pastors, and our pastors have waived the right to choose their fields. Sometimes the preacher may, by an honest and faithful discharge of duty, get the ill-will of a portion of his charge; and they may go to the presiding elder and ask his removal before the end of the year, and if he should do so, then he has joined in with the affected party against the Master, and matters grow worse instead of better. Again, if the minister should be to blame, and he should go to the presiding elder and ask his removal to some other part of the district, and the presiding elder should act accordingly, then the case has been made worse, and a premium has been laid upon wrong doing, and the way open for a repetition of the same when the preacher gets in a tangle again. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred these appointments, as made by the Bishop, should remain for the year. These repeated changes are weakening the confidence the people have in the appointing power of the church, are undermining the strongholds of our itinerancy in such a way as to seriously affect our episcopacy, and militates against the cause.

SICILY ISLAND, Louisiana.

To the Brethren of the Louisiana Conference.

At your last session two resolutions were adopted: First, one asking the Bishop to appoint a colporteur for your Conference; second, in the report from the Committee on Books and Periodicals was a resolution, which was carried to the following effect:

Resolved, That we request the Bishop to appoint the Rev. F. D. Van Valkenburgh colporteur for our Conference.

I have too high a respect for, and too exalted an opinion of, the brethren composing the Louisiana Conference to allow myself, for one moment, to believe that these resolutions were introduced and passed simply to rid themselves of a burden, or to oppress or afflict a brother minister.

In other words, I accept this action of the Conference as testifying to the felt need of and demand for a man in that position, and to the belief that I was supposed to possess some qualifications for the work needed to be done by such an appointee. I did not ask for the appointment, I did not seek the place. I did not desire it. Having been appointed, I expect to do my best to fill the position. Immediately on the adjournment of Conference I rented a house here, and, as soon as practicable, I moved my family from North Louisiana to this city.

I have already received a fine assortment of our books direct from our Publishing House, and I am prepared and ready to fill promptly orders from any of our brethren or friends, at the same price and on the same terms as if orders were sent direct to Nashville. Just as soon as the new hymn book comes from press I expect to have a full supply on the way, to furnish our churches or people with all that may be needed or called for. In return, can I not expect the brethren and friends of Methodism in Louisiana to send orders to me for books, Advocates, Review, etc., as they may have calls for or need of them? I am here in their interest: want no more than if they sent to the publishers, and am willing to labor for their good. But without a dollar appropriated for my support, I need and must have the co-operation and help of those interested, in order either to live or to make a success of the work.

Again, I am anxious to circulate, gratuitously, a large number of tracts, or other cheap publications, calculated to do good in educating the people, Methodistically. I am willing to bear my part of this burden, and suppose there are others in Louisiana who feel inclined to do good in this way. If so, they can send me any amount from a postage stamp to a $100 bill or more, and I will place the amount sent to the credit of this cause, and will expend said amount in the purchase of such tracts as the donor may name, or as my own judgment may dictate, where the matter is left with me, and will attend to the distribution of them free of charge. Much good could be done in this way by our liberal-minded Christian people.

Once more: Will not all of the brethren write to me—freely, often—advise me, instruct me, invite me to visit their works, and help them with protracted meetings, etc. No collections are needed for my support. All of my work will be in the interest of our church and pastorate. I would be glad to put a Sunday-school library in all of our Sunday-schools, and will gladly undertake to do so at any point where you may advise me that one is needed and would be used. This work is new—formative—in our Conference; has no metes, bounds or precedents. So please remember—as you have placed me here "the servant of all"—I will need your prayers, your help, your advice. Your editor may do after a manner—without any advice from you. The publisher may understand his own business so well advice from you would be useless, or even impertinent. Presiding elders and Bishops are supposed to be wise enough to get along without it. But I need and ask for all of the good advice any or all of my brethren can give me. Let everyone write me a long letter, full of good advice, and I may collate a book from the list, and publish for the benefit of those who come after me in the same line.

F. D. VAN VALKENBURGH,
Colporteur for La. Conf.
50 Constantinople St., New Orleans.

Mr. Moody told the young men at his Northfield meetings that they must learn how to make everybody in the audience listen. He said that when preaching in England a young man just in front of him began to leaf a hymn book. It greatly annoyed him, and he felt that he could not go on with the sermon while the man was going through the book, leaf by leaf. So he said: "When I was in America, a man in the audience who was just about the age of this man in front of me who is leafing the hymn book——" That was enough. The book was instantly closed, and the man was one of the first to go into the inquiry-room. People thoughtlessly do many things in church which are annoying to the preacher and to the audience. Little children would not usually make any trouble in church if it were not for the parents who devote their entire attention to them. Put a little child down between a father and mother, and let them watch it and pick at it from both sides, and it is more than most preachers and congregations can endure.

It is impossible to mentally, or socially, enslave a Bible-reading people. The principles of the Bible are the groundwork of human freedom.—Horace Greeley.

SOMETIME, SOMEWHERE.

BY ROBERT BROWNING.

Unanswered yet? The prayer your lips have pleaded,
In agony of heart, these many years?
Does faith begin to fail; is hope departing,
And think you all in vain those falling tears?
Say not the Father hath not heard your prayer;
You shall have your desire sometime, somewhere.

Unanswered yet? though when you first presented
This one petition at the Father's throne,
It seemed you could not wait the time of asking,
So urgent was your heart to make it known,
Though years have passed since then, do not despair;
The Lord will answer you sometime, somewhere.

Unanswered yet? Nay, do not say ungrateful.
Perhaps your part is not yet wholly done.
The work began when first your prayer was uttered,
And God will finish what he has begun.
If you will keep the incense burning there,
His glory you shall see sometime, somewhere.

Unanswered yet? Faith can not be unanswered.
Her feet were firmly planted on the Rock;
Amid the wildest storms she stands undaunted.
Nor shalls before the loudest thunder shock.
She knows Omnipotence has heard her prayer,
And cries, "It shall be done," sometime, somewhere.

Sunday-School Lesson.—Feb. 17.

THE TIMID WOMAN'S TOUCH.

Mark v, 25-34.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Be not afraid, only believe.—Mark v. 36.

TIME.—A. D. 27.

PLACE.—Capernaum in Galilee.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. ix. 20-26; Luke viii. 41-48.

25. A certain woman—He who knows that his resources are infinite can afford to let her (Jairus' daughter) die while he cures and saves this woman. She shall receive no harm, and her sister suppliant has as great a claim on him. "The eyes of all wait" on his equal love; he has leisure of heart to feel for each, and fullness of power for all; and none can rob another of his share in the Healer's gifts, nor any in all that dependent crowd jostle his neighbor out of the notice of the Savior's eye. Who she was, whence she had come, whither she went, is not told—it is of no importance. It was not the woman, but the disease, chronic, painful, incurable, with which Christ had to do. The woman's identity is lost. The disease and the faith which healed it are all that appear. An issue of blood—This disease was by the Jews reckoned unclean (Lev. xv, 25), and she was unwilling to make personal application to Jesus or even to touch his person. The disease was regarded as incurable. She had expended all her property, and grew worse.

26. Many physicians—The figure and similitude of a physician was a very attractive one to the Jews, for they were a people skilled in the healing art. Since their sojourn in Egypt medicine had developed into a science among the Israelites also. For Egypt was in ancient times renowned for its physicians. There were different doctors for different disorders; it was, in fact, a country of specialists. In Palestine each little town had, at least, its physician. Jewish physicians were, down to the Middle Ages, sought after in every land where Jews dwelt. The Jewish sect of the Essenes, in particular, was famed for medical skill. Luke, himself a physician, also states that she "had spent all her living on physicians," without any good result. Mark emphasizes the fact that she "suffered" at their hands, and grew worse instead of better. In those days such diseases especially would be poorly treated, and treated without tenderness, first, because the patient was Levitically unclean; second, because she was a woman. Our Lord's conduct was a protest against both these. All that she had—This woman had probably been possessed of wealth, and had moved in good society, but the expenses of many physicians had reduced her to poverty. Worse—She had suffered much, not only from her disease, but from their prescriptions.

27. When she had heard of Jesus—She had been ill twelve years. Christ had been working miracles of healing for two years. Came in the press behind—It is important, though it may be difficult, to realize the situation of this woman: once possessed of health and wealth, and, no doubt, moving in respectable society, now beggared and diseased, without a hope of human help, and secretly believing in the power of Christ, and him alone, to heal her, yet deterred by some natural misgiving, and by shame, perhaps connected with the nature of her malady, from coming with the rest to be publicly recognized and then relieved. Perhaps, in her ignorance, it was because she had no longer any reward to offer; perhaps, because she was ashamed in her feminine modesty to reveal the malady from which she had been suffering; but, from whatever cause, she determined, as it were, to steal from him, unknown, the blessing for which she longed. Touched his garment—This garment was probably the square garment which was thrown over the shoulders. This was surrounded by a border or fringe; and this fringe, or the loose threads hanging down, is what is meant by the hem. The Jews were commanded to wear this in order to distinguish them from other nations.

28. For she said—Matthew, "within herself;" but it is possible that she may have murmured it again and again as she tried to get through the crowd. The faith was a most real faith (see verse 34), yet it was not altogether unmingled with error. It would appear as though she had imagined a certain magical influence and virtue diffused through his person and round about him, with which if she could put herself in relation, she would obtain that which she desired. And it is probable that she touched the hem of his garment, not merely as the extremest part most easily reached, but attributing to it a peculiar virtue. The error of her view was overborne, and her weakness of apprehension of truth covered, by the strength of her faith. And this is a most encouraging miracle for us to recollect, when we are disposed to think despondingly of the ignorance or superstition of much of the Christian world: that he who accepted this woman for her faith, even in error and weakness, may also accept them. Touch—Contrast expressions of Matthew and Mark. Matthew, "If I may but touch his garment." Mark, "If I may touch but his clothes." This faith was simple, naked, unsympathetic. She trusted the healing power. She believed, as the leper did, in the power to heal, but did not trust the love, and shrank from the thought lest the Healer should shrink from her. She thought not of a will that seeks to bless and save, but of a physical influence passing from the body to the garments, and from the garments to the hand that touched them.

29. Straightway she felt in her body that she was healed—There was an inward sense, which could not be mistaken, of return to wholeness—the stanching of a wound through which life for long years had been slowly ebbing, and the rising of a tide of new existence which made her feel she could yet be and do something in God's world. When faith, under a sense of its need, touches Christ, the virtue that comes from him gives some such feeling to the soul. The cure was affected by an exercise of Jesus' will, which responds to the woman's faith in his miraculous power, not through the mere touching of the garment. The result was instantaneous and complete.

30. Knowing in himself that virtue had gone out of him—This is a remarkable expression. It seems to imply that faith would draw the healing power from Jesus almost without his volition. How unlike the unbelief of his own countrymen, which compelled the "virtue" to stay within him, so that he could scarce do a miracle among them! But in both cases the operation was really through the consent of his will. The word "virtue" is used in the old medical sense for the power or force which brings about a certain definite result. It is evident, from this and other similar expressions (Luke vi, 19), that the "virtue" by which Jesus performed these miraculous cures resided in himself, which is never said of any of the apostles or prophets. The cures wrought by them are ascribed to God, as at Acts xix, 11, 12; but those wrought by Christ to the divine virtue dwelling in him, whence he so often declares that "the Father dwelling in him did the works." Who touched my clothes—The judge who asks the prisoner whether he is guilty or not guilty really knows, perhaps; but he will none the less put him to the answer. The Lord knew who, but he must make her reveal herself. Christ will have himself openly confessed, and not only secretly sought. Our Christian life is not, as it is sometimes called, merely a thing between ourselves and God, but a good confession to be witnessed "before all the people." A solemn warning to all who crowd on Christ; who use his name lightly and profanely; who make familiar addresses to him in so-called religious hymns; who treat with carelessness and irreverence his day, his house, his sacraments, his ministers; or who read his holy Scriptures in a carping spirit, handling them as a common book. Although such as these may crowd upon Christ in his word, with a pressure of earthly labor and learning, they never touch him.

31. His disciples said—"Peter and they that were with him." It was much like Peter thus to speak, both for himself and as spokesman for the disciples. But Jesus affirmed that some one had touched him, implying a touch of intention and faith, and not a mere thoughtless and accidental pressing of the multitude.

32. He looked round about—Another proof of St. Mark's graphic power. The tense in the original is still more expressive. It denotes that he kept on looking round, that his eyes wandered over one after the other of the many faces before him, till they fell on her who had done this thing. He was not in doubt regarding the object of his search; the very gender implies his knowledge, "to see her." Observe, not to see who had done it, that is, inquiringly, but to see her who had done it. The implication is that she was already known to him. The case (of Jairus' daughter) was urgent; a matter of life and death; delay might be fatal; a few minutes might make all the difference between living and dying. Yet Jesus not only performed the miracle, but refused to perform it in a hurried way; paused to converse; to inquire who had touched him; to perfect the lesson of the whole. On his way to perform one act of love, he turned aside to give his attention to another.

33. The woman fearing and trembling—Alarmed lest her boldness should be punished by the renewal of the trouble she now felt to have been healed. Perhaps she feared that, from the impure nature of her disease, he would be offended that she touched him. Knowing what was done to her—All this is omitted in Matthew; and if we had only his account we should certainly derive the wrong lesson from the miracle; for there we miss altogether the reproof, and the shame to which the woman was put; and the words of our Lord look like an encomium on her act itself. A sense of her cure brought her forward to testify to and for Christ. So always the sense of pardon and acceptance will lead the trembling believer to full confession and an open testimony for Christ. It will embolden the timid to speak of the gospel, even before crowds. Told him all the truth—For the Savior held that she would not be truly blessed unless she should, with her mouth, before the world, confess her salvation. Then could he wisely speak her peace.

34. Daughter—Our Lord is recorded to have addressed no other woman by this title. It calmed all her doubts and fears. A term of affection, but, no doubt, as employed by our Savior, implying that all that was spiritually distinctive in her character had been derived from himself. Thy faith hath made thee whole—Her faith, her strong confidence in Jesus, had been the means of her restoration. It was the power of Jesus that cured her; but that power would not have been exerted but in connection with faith. So in the salvation of a sinner. No one is saved who does not believe; but faith is the instrument, and not the power, that saves. More than once a person first learned he had faith when the Savior told him of it. Continue to be whole; for she was already cured. Of thy plague. Thy disease; literally, thy scourge. So a word from Jesus heals the moral malady of the sinner. Go in peace—The phrase has become so idiomatic that we dare not change it; but it may be well to remember that the true meaning of the Greek is, "Go into peace, let that be as thy home and resting-place." Enter into peace, "as the future element in which thy life shall move," and be whole of thy plague.

PRACTICAL LESSONS.

Whosoever seeks Jesus may remember—

1. That Jesus knows the seeker's need.
2. That Jesus knows the means resorted to.
3. That Jesus alone imparts spiritual healing.
4. That Jesus expects confession of healing.
5. That Jesus imparts complete healing.
6. That Jesus promises continued spiritual health.

Words of Encouragement.

MR. EDITOR: How much pleasure I derive from reading the ADVOCATE can not be told. When I left home and came here to teach in a community where Methodists are unusually scarce—and, so far as I can learn, Methodist literature absent altogether—one of my first thoughts was of our papers. So now the ADVOCATE comes weekly; and I scan it quickly at first, for there are nearly always letters from some of our former pastors, and others we know. If a book "is a letter to the unknown friends one has in the world," what better term can we apply to the paper which contains writings from known friends than "letter"?

In the issue of January 3 is one of the most striking and deserving to be remembered poems I have read. How much more happiness we might make in the world if we would only break the box of "precious ointment" over our friends of to day rather than keep it in the darkness until they have left us! I hope it will cause others to think as it has myself. A paper with such material composing it as the ADVOCATE has, ought to be in every family, for it most certainly gives rest to a tired person to read it. I have tried this, and know it to be so.

Wishing you and the publisher the great success which you deserve, I remain,

Most respectfully,

LULA LEE SLEDGE.

From the Work

MEADVILLE CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: This is my second year on this circuit, and a more generous, hospitable, whole-souled people I have never met. When I called on the agent at Hamburg, on the L., N. O. and T. road, for a ticket to Vicksburg, he handed me over a ticket stamped and paid for, and then added a certificate good to return for one-third fare, which reduced the round trip from Hamburg to Vicksburg and back to about $1. When I politely deprecated so much generosity on the part of the agent, he informed me that he never charged preachers, and we both went to dinner on his invitation. When we reached Vicksburg there was a carriage to convey us to Judge Strother's, where we were entertained like doctors of divinity. When we returned to Humburg a buggy was in attendance, with a pawing horse and a sable "nigger," to take "us" (me and myself) back to Meadville, the county seat of Franklin, and the country seat of this itinerant and his family. Well, but how have the preacher's family been passing their time while he is away at Conference and faring so finely? In answer, I will say that they "fared sumptuously every day," accepting the repeated invitations of the generous friends of Meadville.

When Christmas came we thought sadly of the "old place" and our old friends, where we had spent so many happy Christmas Days when we were simple farmers away down in Louisiana. We hardly thought that even our kind friends of Meadville could charm away the gloom that comes to the "wanderer" about that time, above all others; but they did, and did it nicely. On Christmas Eve in came a large box on the back of a mysterious colored man, who placed the box on the front gallery of the parsonage, and bowed himself out the gate. That box had everything in it to make a preacher's daughter jump for joy and clap her hands for expression. Well, we have had gobbler dinners and turkey dinners and other dinners until I can almost see myself in my wife's face, and she says—of me—that if size will make a Bishop, that I may begin to "look up," for my day is "coming on."

One of our stewards sold me a buggy and harness, on a year's credit, at my own price, with the understanding that if I was not able to pay for it in twelve months, he would take it back and not charge me for the use of it. But paper would fail me to tell of the many acts of kindness of these noble people. May God help me to preach them a pure gospel, and may his temporal and spiritual blessings be poured out upon us this year! We are organizing our forces for a good year's work. We have an excellent prayer meeting, from house to house; doors are opening around us for our entrance. We have a Sunday-school that stood the winter without a stove, and is more solid and well disciplined than it was during last year. We have two other Sunday-schools in operation on our work. We are making preparations to build a new church, and to ceil another, and to picket the parsonage, etc. So you see that we are "alive and well," and if the Lord will prosper us, we promise to do liberal things this year.

REVIVAL AT CENTENARY COLLEGE.

MR. EDITOR: There are thirteen young men attending this college who have been licensed to preach, and several others who have recently admitted their call to the ministry. It is but right that the friends of these young men, who are aiding them in making preparation for this grand work, should hear from them as to their progress, mentally and religiously. I think I can safely say, without an exception, they are making the best use of their time. And, furthermore, by the aggressive religious spirit which they manifest there is a revival going on in the college. Young men are being converted and uniting with the churches through their instrumentality. It might be well to mention some of the meetings conducted by them: First, we have the Young Men's Christian Association, which meets Sunday afternoon. These exercises are attended with such interest, while so void of formality, that every Sabbath they find one or more who are willing to become an active member. This means willing to pray in public, and do such other work as they may be called upon to perform. Then they have the "young men's prayer meeting" that meets Thursday at four P. M. There are only a few of the boys who do not attend these meetings, which evinces the high esteem that the young men of Centenary have for practical Christianity. Then there is what we may call their "family worship." When the nine o'clock bell releases them from study hour, they repair to some one of the rooms and have evening prayer. It is not uncommon for conversions at these services. In addition to the above the young ministers especially have, on Friday afternoon, what they call their "consecration meetings." Here they pray for consecration to and direction in God's service. A special feature worthy of mention in this service is, they select some one as a subject of earnest prayer for the ensuing week. Then they show their faith by their works. One of their number will be this subject, and they assure him of their prayerful interest. About a week ago one of these young men, for whom prayers were being offered, was approached, and he admitted a deep concern which he had felt during the week. Result—he will be an applicant for license to preach. Ten of these young preachers are boarding with us, and oftentimes they come to the table overflowing with joy, shedding tears as they tell us of their glorious meetings.

Dr. Hunnicutt never preached with more earnestness than he is now doing. God is blessing him in his work. The church is moving on and up. Your boys can be safely entrusted to the care of the faculty of Centenary, if you would have mental and moral development to go hand in hand. And this alone makes the man as God designed him to be.

D. P. BRADFORD.

JACKSON, Louisiana.

P. S.—I attended a prayer meeting with the young men of the college last night after preaching. There were two conversions, and many made happy. These are glorious meetings.

NEWTON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I am not one of those given to edifying the public by my scribblings, nor do I believe in rushing into the papers upon the reception of any and every token of appreciation from my people; nevertheless, "honor to whom honor is due," and the generous reception given us, and the many substantial favors we have received from the good people on our new work—Newton circuit—deserves special mention, and may serve to stimulate others to go and do likewise. We can truly say, "The lines have fallen to us in pleasant places." Indeed, we do not believe there is a more delightful work in the bounds of the Mississippi Conference.

On arriving here, just before Christmas, myself and family were conveyed to the delightful homes of those staunch laymen, Bros. Watts and Selby, until our freight should arrive; and in their charming Christian families we were made to feel perfectly at home. Upon moving into the parsonage so many and varied were the favors which began pouring in upon us, that time would fail me to enumerate them. A sumptuous Christmas dinner graced our table—the largest turkey this preacher's eyes ever beheld; cakes, rich and rare, and in great variety, with other delicacies and substantials—all being the offering of many friends.

An elegant set of furniture came as a Christmas gift to the parsonage—so beautiful, my wife said it "fairly took her breath away" when she saw it; and, as to the substantials of life, why, sir, we have just been royally treated. Nor is this a spasmodic liberality; but every day brings some fresh token of thoughtfulness, and we have been here a month, showing that these good people act from sound Christian principle and a desire to hold up the hands and contribute to the support of those who minister to them in spiritual things. And, by the grace of God, we intend to be true and faithful to the duties we owe this dear people.

This work embraces four towns, viz: Newton, Decatur, Hickory and Garlandsville—two of them on the railroad, the other two within a few miles of the parsonage.

Our first Quarterly Conference has been held, and was an interesting occasion. The stewards made a liberal assessment for the support of the preacher and family, and everything is moving off finely. Bro. P. A. Johnston, our presiding elder, was with us in the power and spirit of the gospel. We will make an active canvass for the ADVOCATE. Pray for us, that the year may be one of success in every respect.

J. S. PARKER.

ENTERPRISE, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: Wednesday morning, January 23, at half-past three o'clock, we were met at the Northeastern station, and nicely and rapidly conveyed to the parsonage. Enterprise has had a reputation for taking excellent care of its pastors, and, with an auspicious beginning, we look forward to a pleasant year's service.

The Wesleyan Aid Society had cleansed, repaired and brightened, until their fine building looked a hearty welcome. While we have not yet had the privilege of meeting these good ladies, they left their cards in such substantial shape that we feel we are well acquainted both with them and their cooks. A tastily arranged bunch of violets sweetly perfumed the prophet's chamber, and the delicate touches of a lady's hand were introduced everywhere. We are here and at work, talking ADVOCATE and Centenary, with prospects of success for both.

PASTOR.

CANTON, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: After a silence of six weeks, we are now ready to report somewhat concerning our new work. As soon after Conference as we could pack our books and chattels, we took train for our new home at this place. While we were greatly saddened at leaving our many and kind friends in our former charge, so warm was our reception at our new home that we at once felt that we were among friends indeed, who welcomed us in the name of the Lord. We were met at the depot by a committee of brethren with carriages for all (and that means much at this house), which soon brought us to the parsonage door. There we were met by a still larger committee of "elect ladies," who had abundantly provided for our comfort in every respect—comfortable rooms, neat beds, cheerful fires, and inviting table, and a well-supplied larder—all of which were accepted as evidences of genuine friendship and true Methodist spirit. Furthermore, we can say that during these weeks not a day has passed without some practical demonstration of the kindness and thoughtfulness of the people whom we serve. Another charming fact, Mr. Editor; our congregations have been very good at every service from the first. No discouraging falling off from the usual curious first congregation to hear the "new preacher," but, rather, a steady increase; so we take courage, and go forward.

At our first Quarterly Conference, which was held a few nights since, the Board of Stewards exhibited such a spirit of confidence concerning the finances as to assure us that we need feel no uneasiness in those matters. If the spirit and life which now animates the people shall continue throughout the year, we shall make a full report. We hope to do something for the ADVOCATE also.

Fraternally,

T. B. HOLLOMAN.

COVINGTON, LA.

MR. EDITOR: This being my first work in the itineracy, a few notes from my charge will doubtless, be of interest to many of your readers. We arrived here from our home in Natchez, Miss., on December 19, and were met at the depot by our good presiding elder, Dr. West, Bro. John E. Smith, and some others, who escorted us to Bro. Smith's house, where we found a nicely furnished room, large fire, and supper waiting, to which we did justice. This was our home for a couple of weeks, the parsonage not being ready for us. We moved into our new home on January 2, and found a newly finished and neat comfortable house of five rooms with the yard opening into the churchyard. On the Monday after we moved in we were surprised, and received such a merciful "pounding" that we will not have to buy any provisions for the next six weeks.

I have made one round of my circuit, embracing eight churches, and received a warm welcome and promises of hearty co-operation. A summary of my work is as follows: Traveled 260 miles, visited 72 families, preached 20 times, received 1 member into the church, and buried three. I have also obtained one new subscriber for the ADVOCATE, and hope soon to send more, as I never fail to speak a good word for it when-ever I go.

Asking the prayers of the brethren for a continuance of God's blessing, I am,

Yours, etc.,

L. W. WOOD.

FANNIN CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: At this writing Fannin circuit is far ahead financially, of what it was at this time last year. Our first Quarterly Conference convened at Pelahatchie, December 29, 1888. Bro. P. A. Johnston was at his post, and conducted the business of the Conference, and preached to the satisfaction and edification of the congregation after which we took a collection for all the causes ordered by the Annual Conference, resulting in two-thirds of the whole amount for that church. The remaining one-third will likely be secured by April 1. At New Providence the first Sunday in January, we raised three-fourths of their pro rata of the various assessments. On the second Sunday, at Union, the good people cleared the decks, with about eight dollars in excess of their assessment; and, in the evening, Andrew Chapel over-ran their pro rata share of the collections, counting some contributions secured the day following. We expect to have every dollar of every assessment in sight by April 1 next, the Lord helping us.

Yours in Christ,

J. W. TUCKER, P. C.

A Correction.

The "report of Joint Board of Finance," published in the Minutes of Mississippi Annual Conference, held at Vicksburg, December 5–10, 1888, shows $30 for "Conference fund" from the Woodville district. The "financial table," published in same Minutes, shows only $335 paid by the Woodville district for this fund. This discrepancy accounts for the $25 not credited in the financial table, but paid by Wilson circuit for the above fund.

The College Decision.

THE SUPREME COURT DECIDES THAT THE THREE PLAINTIFFS MAY SUE FOR THE WHOLE CHURCH.

DECLARES A CONTRACT BETWEEN THE STATE OF OREGON AND THE SOUTHERN METHODIST CHURCH, WHICH THE STATE CAN NOT ANNUL.

The opinion of the Supreme Court in the college case recites the complaint, which is omitted here for the reason that our readers are familiar with it. It in substance declares that the plaintiffs, who are members of the Southern Methodist Church, sue for themselves and other members; that the deed made by the church board of the college farm is void; and asks that it be so declared. The defendants demurred to the compluint; that is, objected that the complaint did not make out a case against the defendants. The reasons given for the demurrer which are considered are that the plaintiffs have not such interest in the subject matter as to entitle them to bring the suit; and that the other facts stated do not constitute a cause of suit. The court then say:

Whether the appellants had a right to bring the suit depends upon the question of their having an interest in the subject matter of it, cognizable in equity.

They could maintain such an interest in no other way than by a suit in the form of the one brought.

The right which the appellant claimed had been violated, belonged to them as members of a particular association; but as the association was not incorporated it could not sue: and the various members comprising it were evidently so numerous that it would have been impracticable to bring them all before the court in one suit. The law in such cases, permits one or more to sue or defend for the benefit of the whole. (§ 385 of Code.)

It is unnecessary, therefore, to consider any other question in the case than the one appertaining to the rights of the appellants as members of the said religious association. The right of mankind to believe and teach such doctrines regarding religion as meet the approval of their consciences, is recognized under our form of government as inherent; it is freely accorded to every sect and denomination in the land; and is so interwoven with the principles which underlie our political fabric, that it can not be taken away without the general consent, or a violent revolution. The law not only tolerates the privilege, but protects everyone in the enjoyment of it.

The people are entitled as an incident of such right, to form associations, adopt creeds, organize churches and establish seminaries of learning for the advancement of their peculiar tenets of faith, and to acquire property and erect buildings to aid them in accomplishing that end.

Mere voluntary associations, however, can not take the title to real property in their society name, as they are not in law regarded persons; but it may be held for their use and benefit by trustees, and their right to the enjoyment of the property be secured in that way.

Such trustees, as I view it, may be artificial persons, as well as natural ones.

If this is correct, then, while the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, could not in consequence of its being unincorporated, take the legal title to real property; yet, it could secure the benefit of the property by having the legal title to it conveyed to a corporation for its use.

Such is the course which seems to have been pursued by the church, in the establishment of a literary institution at Corvallis.

It caused the formation of a corporation known as the "Corvallis College" and a provision to be inserted in its charter, that the object of the incorporation was to acquire and hold property in trust for the Methodist Episcopal Church South, in the State of Oregon.

It also, in order to secure a faithful execution of the trust, caused a further provision to be inserted therein to the effect, that the trustees of the college should be appointed by its Conference.

By the incorporation of the college, it became a distinct legal entity; yet it was the mere offspring of the church—an instrument employed by the latter, "to endow, build up and maintain an institution for educational purposes;" it received its life and inspiration from the church, and was one of the agencies which the latter made use of to perform its mission.

The college had no will of its own; it had no power to act independently of the church; it was capable of taking and holding the title to real property, only in trust for the church.

It can not be consistently contended, that the college, prior to the execution of the Roberts deed, owned any property except in the manner indicated; and unless it can be maintained that it acquired and held the property described in that deed in a different capacity from that in which it held the other property, we must conclude that it held that in the same manner as the other, in trust for the said church.

Counsel for the respondents have attempted to show that the college held the Roberts property independently of the church; they claim that an express trust was impressed upon the property by the said deed; that it was devoted by that instrument to the use and purpose of the Agricultural College of the State of Oregon, and that the church could not divert it to a different purpose, or exercise control over it in any manner.

It will be observed that prior to the time of the execution of the deed to the property, the Legislative Assembly passed the act designating and permanently adopting the Corvallis College, as the Agricultural College of the State, subject to its acceptance of the provisions of the act; and that it had duly accepted them.

The question then arises as to the extent of power and control which the State acquired over the college by that act and its acceptance; and what authority of the church over it was thereby relinquished.

Making the Corvallis College the Agricultural College of the State was not an arbitrary act of sovereignty on the part of the State.

The Legislature had no power to compel the Corvallis College to become such Agricultural College, without its consent. It became such by mutual agreement between two parties, who were capable of entering into a contract, and it included a subject matter in regard to which they could lawfully contract. Whether said church consented to the arrangement between the State and Corvallis College, is not directly alleged in the complaint; I think, however, it would be inferred therefrom that it did so, as it is alleged therein, that since said college was made the Agricultural College of the State, large contributions of property and money, by members of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and other persons, have been made to the support of it as such Agricultural College; and the acceptance of the act, which must have been given by the trustees appointed by said Conference, would authorize such inference in the absence of proof to the contrary.

Now, if the power of the State over the college arises out of contract, the extent of the power must necessarily be determined by the terms of the contract.

Viewed in this light, I do not see how the State acquired any interest in or control over the property in question, through the arrangement between it and the college as set out in the complaint; or how the said church could have been deprived of any of its rights in the property held in the name of the college in consequence thereof.

There is no stipulation shown or intimated entitling the State to control the property conveyed to the college, nor that it should not be held in trust for the church, as provided in the charter of the college.

The claim of the respondents' counsel, that the title to the property was taken in the name of the Corvallis College for the uses and purposes of the State Agricultural College, can not be maintained.

It was deeded to the Corvallis College in consideration of $4,500, and the only clause in the deed which limits the use of the property, is the following:

"And this conveyance is made to said Corvallis College to the end that the premises be used by said college as an agricultural farm, in connection and for the purpose of the Agricultural College of the State of Oregon. Now, whenever said premises shall cease to be used or occupied for the purpose of said Agricultural College, then the said premises shall vest and become the property of the several persons who have, or shall contribute the purchase money, in the proportion contributed by each person."

This clause created a conditional limitation.

The college, at the time the deed was executed, had been designated, as has already been mentioned, the "Agricultural College of the State;" and it is very apparent, from the circumstances of the transaction, that the founders and patrons of the college, who doubtless were instrumental in procuring for it the distinction referred to, bought the said lands from Roberts, and had the said deed, with the condition therein contained, executed for the benefit of the Corvallis College, and for their own benefit.

The condition is in favor of those who contributed the purchase money; no other person can take advantage of it; and the premises were given to the Corvallis College—subject to the condition—to enable it to carry out its contract with the State. It was the latter institution which was to use the premises; it had agreed with the State, in effect, that it would add another branch to its course of instruction, and that its leading object should be "to teach such branches of learning as are related to agricultural and the mechanical arts;" and it needed the premises for an agricultural farm. The deed itself created no trust that I can discover; it did not vest the title to the land in the college to hold for the use of any other institution or person, although it required the grantee to use it for the purposes mentioned.

How a trust could have arisen in favor of the Agricultural College of the State, when there was no such institution, at least that was distinct from the Corvallis College, is beyond my power of comprehension.

Counsel for the respondents seem to think there is a distinct entity known as the "Agricultural College of the State," and that it is essential there should be such an institution in order to enable the State to realize the benefit of the provisions of the Act of Congress, donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, passed July 2, 1862.

A State is not entitled to the benefit of that act except "for the endowment, support and maintenance of at least one college, where the leading object shall be, without excluding other scientific and classical studies, and including military tactics; to teach such branches of learning as are related to agricultre and the mechanic arts, in such manner as the Legislature may prescribe in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions of life."

But I do not see that it is necessary for the State to found a college in order to secure such benefit.

It appears to me that it would be sufficient, to entitle the State to the benefit of the act, to endow, support and maintain so far as the income of the fund will permit, an existing college to carry out the object indicated; and that it would matter not whether it was called the Agricultural College of the State, or was known by some other name.

The Agricultural Fund is undoubtedly a trust fund in the hands of the State, and if the State were to endow a college out of it, in compliance with the provisions of said Act of Congress, it would unquestionably be entitled to exercise visitorial powers over the college; but it would have no authority to interfere with the charter of the institution. The Legislature can not alter the charter of any private corporation. The old case of Dartsmouth College vs. Woodward 4 Wheat, 518, settled that question; besides private corporations, by our constitution, can only be formed under general laws.

If the theory of the respondents' counsel is correct, that Roberts and wife conveyed the said land in trust for some one, I am unable to discover who the cestui que trust could have been; nor do I think that any trust, as claimed, indicated in the deed of conveyance.

As I view this matter, there was no such institution as the Agricultural College except in name.

The appellants allege in their complaint that the Corvallis College became the Agricultural College of the State. They probably thought so from the fact that the Legislative Assembly, by an act approved Oct. 21, 1870, so declared; but it does not appear that any such institution was ever organized, and the Legislative Assembly has no power, by its fiat, to transform one corporate institution of that character into another.

It can not create a corporation by direct enactment, except for municipal purposes. (Sec. 2. Art. 11, Const.), although it may provide by general law, for the organization of such a corporation.

I apprehend that it will be discovered, upon close inspection, that the "Agricultural College of the State of Oregon" has only an ideal existence.

When the Corvallis College was organized into a corporation the name it assumed, and by which it was to be known, was specified in its articles of incorporation, and the Legislature had no power to change it, or to merge the corporation in another organization, either real or imaginary.

This view does not affect the relations between the Corvallis College and the State, nor question the former being such a college as is required by said Act of Congress; it merely regards its legal status.

The Corvallis College is an agricultural college; its leading object is to teach that branch of learning which relates to "agriculture and mechanic arts," and to distinguish the character of its work from that of other institutions of learning; it may properly be termed the Agricultural College of the State, but that is only its conventional name; its legal name is the one it received at its conception and birth.

I can not see that the declaration of the Legislative Assembly, declaring the Corvallis College the Agricultural College of the State, changed the relations existing between the former and the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. If the Legislature had intended that the property thereafter acquired by the college, should be held in trust for the State, and to inaugurate a new regime in the management and control of the college, and in the appointment of its trustees; it should have required it, as a condition of the arrangement entered into between it and the State, to teach agriculture and the mechanic arts in compliance with said Act of Congress, to so modify its charter as to declare such trust, and give the State the authority to appoint such trustees instead of pursuing that course. It left the whole matter in statu quo.

Unless, therefore, the deed from Roberts and wife declared a distinct trust, the one specified in the charter must prevail, and the right on the part of the said Conference to appoint the trustees continue.

I am aware that the church has no tangible or real interest in the land; that it can not divert it from the use specified in the deed or derive any direct pecuniary benefit from it whatever; nor that its right to appoint trustees to manage and control it is of any immediate advantage, but it is, nevertheless, entitled to exercise such right, and the Legislature has no power to deprive it of its authority in that particular. It belongs to the charneter of rights which courts of equity are required to defend against arbitrary encroachments. The trustees of the college had no authority under its charter to convey away the land. Their power over the property of the corporation must be found in its charter; which in that regard, is their paramount law, and is beyond the reach of any legislative enactment. It is their rule of action so long as it stands, and there is no power to alter it except that which inherently exists in the corporation itself and its beneficiaries.

Nothing but their voluntary act can change it, which could only be affected by filing supplementary articles adopted by the trustees of the corporation, with the consent of the church for whose benefit and advancement it was originated.

In arriving at this conclusion, I am not consoled by the reflection that the view expressed will promote the best interests of the public. I think it would be far better for the community, if the Corvallis College, in its present condition of affairs, were under the exclusive control of the State.

But if this court were to hold, under the facts of the case, that the interests of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, in that institution, and authority over it, as provided by its charter, were cut off by the legislation referred to, or that the said deed from Roberts and wife created a trust in favor of any party other than the said church, it would, I am constrained to believe, overturn well-settled principles of law, and tend to establish a pernicious and dangerous precedent. If counsel for the respondents are able to show that the conclusions arrived at are erroneous, we trust they will do so, in a petition for a rehearing, and we will gladly correct them. According to the view herein expressed, the decree appealed from must be reversed, and the case remanded to the circuit court, with directions to overrule the said demurrer, and for such further proceeding as that court may deem proper.—Benton (Or.) Leader.

From a Prominent Minister.

I am fifty-five years of age.

Half of my life I have been a sufferer from a disordered liver, and the last three years a victim of that dread disease, consumption; was reduced to eighty-seven pounds, a mere skeleton, helpless, pronounced beyond recovery by my physicians, and given up to die by friends. In order to gratify my loving wife, I began taking Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, which is a cure for consumption, and to-day I am healthy, and able to indulge myself in preaching the gospel from the sacred desk. RUFUS FIGH.

Dr. R. M. Davis, County Line, Miss., reports having cured a cancer of long standing that years of the most skillful medical practice had failed to benefit at all. Besides, we have numerous assurances of cures effected in Asthma, Bilious Colic, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Diphtheria, and Malarial Fever.

Rev. W. A. Mason, pastor of the Baptist Church, Crystal Springs, Miss., writes under date of July 2nd:

At your request, I will say that for about eight years I have been suffering with a sore on the back of my neck which was caused by the rubbing of a mole by my shirt collar. It gradually spread till larger than a quarter-dollar. About six weeks ago, I commenced the use of Microbe Killer. From the very beginning I felt an improvement, and it has gone on steadily till now; though I have been very irregular in taking the remedy. I am satisfied that directions closely followed would effect a speedy permanent cure.

W. A. MASON.

I gladly testify that, after suffering with a severe case of malarial fever, I tried Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, and am now perfectly well. I strongly recommend it to suffering humanity.

I cheerfully recommend Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer as being more than is claimed for it.

Briefs.

Brother pastor, some of your people are guilty of what is known as "extravagant economy," especially those who think they are too poor to afford a subscription to the ADVOCATE. It will pay both you and them to show them the extravagance of that sort of economy!

There are some curious facts which are brought to light by figures. For instance, it is said that in the United States the number of women is about equal to the men, but in the churches the male membership is only about one-third as many as the female membership. Again: it is said that there are about 60,000 penitentiary inmates, and of these, 55,000 are men!

Notwithstanding the proclamations of her enemies, that Christianity is about dead in this country, there seems to be a vigorous life about it somewhere. Just as the enemies of our Lord thought they had him safe in the tomb and strictly guarded by a soldiery that never slept on duty, he astonished them by rising from the dead. So in this land, Christianity is continually gaining adherents though the prophets of evil are forever proclaiming it a dead system. Here are the figures for the last year:

The United States now has 94,457 ministers, 138,885 churches, 19,890,323 members. Last year's gain was 4,505 preachers, 6,434 churches, 764,861 communicants. The daily increase was twelve ministers, seventeen churches, 2,129 communicants.

The Woman's Board of Missions of our church has now 1,844 auxiliaries, with 38,018 members, and 860 juvenile societies, with 25,086 members—making a total membership of 63,104. This Board has in the field 25 missionaries, 15 of whom are in China, 5 in Brazil, 2 in Mexico, 2 in Texas, and 1 in the Indian Territory. The Board publishes the Woman's Missionary Advocate, at fifty cents a year, and it has 9,719 subscribers. Problem: If 63,000 women and children can send out and sustain 25 missionaries, how many missionaries can be sent out and sustained by 1,100,000 men, women, and children? Answer: 436. So you see how small a part is being done of what we can do. Are we a missionary church simply in name?

We are glad to inform our readers that there have at last been found juries in this city who will convict men for violations of the Sunday Law. Notwithstanding the position taken by the Press here, there are still people who believe that law is law, and that its violations should be punished. The position of the Press here on the Sunday Law has, no doubt, tended to the increase of crime of all sorts here and elsewhere. We believe the people see it, and have determined to aid in carrying out the law. To advise the people to break one law opens the way for the infraction of all laws. We believe the turn has been taken. Two saloon keepers have been convicted by juries, and Judge Marr sentenced them to $250 fine and twenty days in the Parish Prison each.

We have received from one of our young friends the program for a "Missionary Ship," with the request to publish the same. We can not do this, for the reason that it would occupy one whole page of the paper.

The First Offering to Christ.

It is a most significant fact that the first offering ever presented to Christ was an offering of gold. The second chapter of Matthew contains the record of the beautiful incident in which the wise men from the East present to the infant Christ "gifts, gold, frankincense and myrrh." In this gift of gold is there anything beyond a special providence making provision for the supply of the future necessities of the holy family? We suppose there is no doubt that it was a special providence getting the family ready for a coming emergency. The history says that soon after this event they were sent down into Egypt; and as Egypt was a good distance away, the trip may have been an expensive one, and this gold given by the Eastern strangers may have been intended to defray the expenses of the journey. This much appears on the surface of the narrative.

We are inclined to think that there is more than special providence here; that there is an inner meaning to this transaction—a broader and more significant meaning than we are accustomed to give it. The presentation by the wise men of the choicest gifts out of their treasures is the first symbol of the highest characteristic of Christian life. It was a simple and graceful acknowledgment that the choicest and most valued treasures were due to Christ. In this presentation of gifts the most valuable were bestowed first—"gold, frankincense and myrrh." Why is the statement made in just that way? In his supervision of the records of inspiration it is presumed that the Holy Spirit will arrange facts and incidents in that way in which instruction shall be so clearly presented that it will make deep impressions upon the mind. It is presumed that he will arrange them in that order in which each fact and each incident will throw its light upon every other fact and every other incident; and all the facts and incidents combining their lights will cast the beams of truth into the inquiring mind.

What, then, is the lesson the Holy Spirit designs to teach when he says of the wise men, "They presented unto him gold"? Gold has, from the earliest times, been a medium of communication between men and countries, and that, too, whether between friends or enemies. Here there was a symbol that this "King of the Jews" was one whose kingship and royal influence would travel out upon this universal medium and affect the fortunes and lives and religion of universal man! Here is a symbol of the fact that Christ's kingdom, interfering with the natural and geographical boundaries of no other kingdom, was to overspread and permeate and transform all other kingdoms through the instrumentality of gold. This offering of gold pointed out the great fact that the plan of God's operations in the earth had been modified by an enlargement which brought all the nations, as well as Israel, within its benevolent embrace. The fullness of the predicted time had come—the long-looked-for Messiah had come; and men, not of Abrahaun's blood, laid at his feet their gold, thereby symbolizing the reaching out of his work toward those who had been considered beyond the limits of the covenant of grace and the spreading forth of his redeeming glory among all the races of men!

Our Lord claims all the gold of the earth—"The gold and silver is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills." He has put it in the hands of his creatures, and whenever he needs any of it, he draws upon them for it. One sign of the times is this: The world is more largely open for the entrance of Christ's religion than ever before; and we may be sure that Christ will make larger drafts this year upon his servants for his gold than he has ever done before. It is well, then, to think of this at the beginning of the year, and to get ready to honor our Lord's drafts. Brother, get your gold ready by the time the Lord calls. Don't be content to give "frankincense and myrrh" only, but give gold.

The Object of Religion.

A great many people, especially a great many young people, have taken up the notion that religion is simply and solely a preparation for death. With young people life has just commenced; and as they have no idea of dying, they feel no need to make preparation for an event that, in all probability, is far away. They defer seeking religion on the ground that they have no use for it until they are called to pass out of probation. This erroneous idea is working mischief, in that it causes people to neglect the only thing that can possibly prepare them to live properly.

The scope of the teachings of the Word of God includes the idea of a preparation for death in the larger and more important idea of a preparation for life. As solemn as death appears, there is something before it which is just as solemn; and that is life! As awful as eternity is, there is something before it which is just as awful; and that is time! The simple thought that we are now living and have but once to live, and that the life we are now living will color the endless future and fix our destinies in unalterable conditions forever, is one of the most awful thoughts that can ever come into the mind. Death is nothing but the gateway, opening into the boundless region towards which every step is bringing us! Judgment is nothing but a setting of the seal of permanence to all the tendencies of the soul which have been developed in probation! Death and judgment are simply the issues of life. Now, religion is to teach us the all-important lesson how to live! The man who knows how to live knows how to die! Right living insures right dying!

The object of religion is to teach us how to live. The great obstacle to right living is sin—sin in the heart, and from that center ruling the whole being. Religion takes the saving grace of our Lord right down to that center. It kills sin and counteracts the influences which it had cast about the soul, and destroys the evil tendencies created in the nature, and brings us back to communion with that which is good. Sin has alienated us from good, and disintegrated our characters and disorganized all our mental and moral forces. If we are alienated from truth and goodness, we can not live properly, because the highest end of life can be reached only when we put ourselves in harmony with all truth, and come to a loving accord with all goodness. With disintegrated characters and disorganized mental and moral forces we can not live properly, because the completest life is attained only when the mind and soul and body are brought to their proper relations with all other things. God's grace in the heart, inspiring the motives and ruling the actions, is the only thing that can bring us into these relations. This grace, working in us by the presence and power of the Holy Spirit, gathers up our duties and privileges and experiences, and unites them into a compact manhood and womanhood, and thus gives the best illustration of what the Scriptures mean by the word "life." When the rich young ruler came to our Lord with the question: "What must I do to inherit eternal life?" the surprising answer was: "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments." This is as much as to say: "No sort of life that is worth living can be had but by keeping the commandments of God." The truest individual life, the most blessed domestic life, the most benevolent social life, the most honorable business life, the most exemplary church life, the most patriotic political life, can be found only by way of the commandments of God. These commandments are the foundations of all true life. They are the fundamental laws of healthy being; and if the living does not harmonize with these laws, and the character is not built upon them and permeated through and through with their spirit, the life is a wrong life, and the character essentially defective.

This is the reason why religion is for life. It puts us in beautiful accord with everything good, and then we are living in the deepest and best sense of that word. When this saving grace comes in upon us, with its enlarging and enlightening power, the meaning of life leaps into proportions so colossal as to startle the soul. The little word becomes freighted with a thought whose magnitude can not be measured, and whose significance has passed out beyond the limit of human thought. Religion is for life! It reveals the intention of God in giving life, and presents to us all the strongest motives to induce us to aspire after its loftiest attainments and to seek its deepest experiences! Religion is for life! It girds us for duty, strengthens us for temptation, fortifies us against the approaches of evil, sanctifies all incoming sorrows, brightens all outgoing hopes, and places us in loving sympathy with everything in the universe except sin! Religion is for life! This tremendous thought intensifies all life's purposes, and thrills all its activities with a new energy, and we can use everything as it comes as a help to build for ourselves characters that shall stand firm while the world is falling in ruins around us, and that shall tower amid the ranks of saved saints as a monumental column to perpetrate to all eternity the great Scripture lesson—RELIGION IS FOR LIFE!

The Preachers' Meeting and the Advocate.

The preachers in the city have always taken quite an interest in the circulation of the ADVOCATE, but we are beginning to think that their interest in the matter is becoming more vigorous and they are doing more now to increase the circulation of the paper than usual. The question of how to increase the circulation of the paper was brought before them not long since, and the result of the informal talk was, that Bro. J. M. Beard, of the Rayne Memorial Church, was appointed to read a paper on that subject. We are permitted to give our readers the points of his paper, and ask for it the careful consideration of all the pastors and presiding elders in our bounds. We hope that all our brethren will give us their hearty co-operation in our effort to extend the circulation of the paper, that by the end of this year it may be read by thousands more than are reading it now. Bro. Beard, in answering the question, How can we extend the circulation of the ADVOCATE? says:

1. Let a minimum or maximum of attainment be fixed so that both publisher and reading public may know what is expected of them. This would have the effect to stimulate both. Those newspapers which have had the faith or the audacity to fix a numerical standard of subscription have usually reached it. It is interesting to note how often the trotting record has been broken in this country. (Vide Jaynes' Almanac.) It took three minutes to trot a mile in the beginning of the century. It now requires two and a few seconds, or a gain of one in three, which is, perhaps, due equally to an improvement in horseflesh and a constantly advancing tide of public expectation, gauged by a standard of achievement not exclusively founded upon fact.

2. Let the paper visit every home in the church, at least, once a year in a new dress and brimful of cheerful talk and good news; and as often as it is not invited to return, let it go again, and let it continue to go at briefer intervals until an impression is made.

3. Let clubs be established (if thought advisable) at, at least, living rates. This would take the paper into many wayside habitations which it would never otherwise reach, and would gradually, if slowly, build up for it a great constituency, like those which render phenomenal many of the publishing ventures of the East.

4. Let every preacher in the Conference be requested by the publisher to make, at least, four public addresses to each congregation he serves, pending the Conference year, in behalf of the ADVOCATE, and to make strenuous effort to introduce the paper into every family within his charge upon the ground of mutual profit to preacher and publisher, and because the spiritual interests of the work demand it.

5. Let the presiding elders of the patronizing Conferences be requested to make five-minute talks in each of their four Conferences for every charge, especially urging preachers and official members to build up the interests, temporal and spiritual, of the common cause by getting every member and friend of the church to subscribe for it.

6. By insisting in its own columns that the ADVOCATE is a constant benefactor to the community it serves, preaching fifty-two sermons in the year, besides giving all the news—religious, commercial, political and social—conducting a Sunday-school every Sabbath in the year, and furnishing learned symposia on selected moral and religious themes.

7. By the choice of a preacher or other official who shall be a member to represent the ADVOCATE in public and private at every Quarterly Conference, District Conference and camp meeting within its boundaries; such person to be appointed by the publisher, and to receive in return for his services, at least, fifty cents for every new subscriber obtained by him.

Corvallis College Decision.

We give space this week to the decision of the Supreme Court of Oregon in the case of Corvallis College—the most important case, next to that of the church suit of 1846, which we have ever had before the courts. This college was endowed in 1869 by the State of Oregon with the agricultural appropriation made by the United States in 1862 to the several States establishing colleges. It has had the benefit of this endowment, and has been doing good work, approved annually by the State Legislature, for seventeen years. Lately certain quasi friends of religion and of education conceived that the State could manage this matter better if the two interests were divided, and, upon an abstract theory, attempted to effect the separation. The Legislature granted a charter to a second Corvallis Agricultural College, and it was located on the ground belonging to us; hence the suit. The endowment is next to that of Vanderbilt in amount and security, and gives strength to our entire Pacific work, which has been unified by a railroad from California to Oregon. It is encouraging to know that after the severest persecution our brethren are so fully vindicated by the courts.

A regular contributor to the Advance has the following, which we reproduce for our preachers to ponder:

Every great preacher preaches doctrine, for doctrines represent the fundamental principles of life, divine and human. They represent the fundamental principles of God's relation to man, and of man's relation to God; and such preaching is preaching that at once moves and instructs.

Notes.

Rev. Sam Small, at last accounts was preaching to immense crowds in Hannibal, Mo. He is assisting our good friend and correspondent, Dr. Chapman, at Park Street Church, and many persons have been converted.

As leaders of the people, is it not our plain duty to give them the light? What better means can we employ for this purpose than the continuous endeavor to circulate the church paper everywhere. President Candler says, "The preachers can do whatever they resolve to do, if they work at it as they only can work." "This one thing" let us do—turn the church paper loose all over the church.

Here is something that ought to be an incentive to work to place the church paper in all the homes of our people. A preacher who has been in the effective work for forty-two consecutive years says:

I give it as a result of a long experience and observation that the greatest hindrance to missionary zeal and liberality, especially among our country people, is a want of missionary intelligence and knowledge. Would that some method could be devised to give them more light.

Often and again we have in these columns exhorted our readers to make special preparation for attending the church services. This is all-important. There is nothing which so facilitates growth in grace and knowledge as a proper hearing of the Word and an earnest, fresh, personal interest in the beautiful services of the sanctuary. If we would all cultivate enthusiasm in worship, how wonderously things would change! One of our exchanges has this:

Don't come tired out to the Lord's house. Get rested and ready for the service. One of our suburban pastors used to say: "On Sundays we ought to give the Lord not our exhaustion, but our enthusiasm of worship. Bring something else than the dregs of vitality. Bring yourself at your best."

Dr. Mark Trafton recently gave the theological students in Boston University a racy Monday Afternoon Talk on "Saddlebags." He produced those he used on his first circuit, and said they were fifty-eight years old! They held both his wardrobe and his library. He ended his spicy reminiscences with the following points, which we commend to the consideration of our young ministers:

1. Settle the question thoroughly in your own mind whether you are really a Methodist, and intend to remain such until you die or break down. You will be beset by many temptations, especially here in New England, but be true! 2. Preach, and don't read. Learn to think on your feet. Look for inspiration in your people's eyes. 3. Make every part of the service interesting. There is power in good Scripture and hymn-reading. Even the collection basket may be made a means of grace. 4. Speak well of your predecessor, and don't talk about your former place. 5. Above all things, don't find fault with your salary.

Harvard is the oldest institution of learning on the American Continent, and if the newspaper report is true, is the most progressive, having added to her faculty of instruction a professorship of baseball. According to the New York Tribune, "Prof. John Clarkson, who has won a world-wide fame as a pitcher of the Boston baseball nine, has taken his place in the faculty of Harvard University and will devote himself to teaching the youth of that venerable institution of learning how to play ball." The Tribune continues:

Who knows but that the time may come, before the lapse of many years, when Prof. Clarkson will have as his confreres in the august meetings of the faculty, Prof. John L. Sullivan, in the Chair of the Art of Self-defense; Prof. "Dick" Sears, in the Chair of Applied Lawn Tennis; and Prof. Edward Burgess, in the Chair of Yacht Building and Yacht Sailing! A great future is before Harvard, if she will but throw off the shackles of pedantic conservatism, and take the lead in raising American sports into the realm of the arts and sciences.

We have read with interest and pleasure Drummond's "Tropical Africa." There are many wonderful narrations in the book. One of the most curious is his observations on the white ants of that country. Here is one paragraph:

One may never see the insect possibly in the flesh, for it lives underground, but its ravages confront one at every turn. You build your house perhaps, and for a few months fancy you have pitched upon the one solitary site in the country where there are no white ants. But one day suddenly the door-post totters, and lintel and rafters come down together with a crash. You look at a section of the wrecked timbers, and discover that the whole inside is eaten clean away. The apparently solid logs of which the rest of the house is built, are now mere cylinders of bark, and through the tiniest of them you could push your little finger.

If Drummond's theory about natural law in the spiritual world is true, we might expect something like the white ants in the realms of the spiritual. How about the fashionable fiction that is permeating many Christian homes, and with its secret infidelity is eating "clean away" the spiritual fiber of many Christian characters and leaving nothing but the shell of a hollow profession? Look out for the white ants of modern literature!

Personals.

Our people are certainly growing toward their preachers. Did anybody ever see so many records of "receptions" as the people are giving the preachers at the outset of this Conference year? If those preachers do not do the best year's work of life, what ought to be done unto them? Give us now, brethren news of revivals and conversions and church and parsonage building, and with all such news send in large and long lists of subscribers for the ADVOCATE. Dr. Candler said, the other day, that "the preachers can do whatever they want to do!"

We are under obligations to H. F. Chreitzberg and H. B. Browne, secretaries, for a copy of the Minutes of the one hundred and third session of the South Carolina Conference. Also to A. P. Parker, secretary, for a copy of the Minutes of the China Mission Conference.

Rev. John Griffith, in a letter to the Southwestern Methodist about the Florida Conference, has this paragraph concerning Bishop Galloway:

The business of the Conference was despatched with wonderful celerity under the firm hand, yet kind and judicious management, of our good Bishop. Long speeches, useless debates and obstructive measures generally, found no favor in the eyes of this remarkably clear-headed presiding officer. As a consequence, Saturday night found us with the business done, all finished and settled, ready for a good spiritual feast on the Sabbath, and the appointments on Sunday night.

Dr. Josephus ANDERSON, the editor of the Florida Christian Advocate, says the paper paid him $200 for last year's work. The paper has been turned over to him for five years, with a loan to help him for awhile. Dr. Anderson deserves better of Florida Methodism than he has received.

We intended giving our readers one more article on "Thoughts on Preaching," but could not get it ready for this week. We hope to have it ready for next issue. We have received many expressions of thanks from the brethren for these articles. We rejoice that they have been appreciated, for anything that is appreciated will do good.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. R. S. Gale writes of Adams circuit, Mississippi Conference: "We found a nice new parsonage; one of the nicest, finest and prettiest in our Conference, stations not excepted, and it is comfortably furnished with new furniture. This is not all. We found the safe in dining-room filled with good things, the names of which are too numerous to mention. Store-room also filled; provisions enough for more than a month. Horse was not forgotten; corn for it. This is not all, for daily we are reminded that the people love us, and intend to care for us. God bless them, and may we serve them acceptably and profitably!"

—Rev. W. W. Morse writes thus from Forest and Morton circuit, Mississippi Conference: "Last Saturday my Quarterly Conference was held. Though it rained all day, our most worthy presiding elder, Bro. P. A. Johnston, was with us, and presided with that dignity and demeanor few exhibit. The Board of Stewards devised liberal things for the support of their pastor. The Conference granted R. L. Moore license to preach the gospel. He will go to Centenary soon. We have organized two Sunday-schools and one prayer meeting. The collections ordered are being taken, and the ADVOCATE is not forgotten. I hope to be able to send a long list of subscribers soon, and report all the collections in full at our next Conference. I wish you and the dear ADVOCATE success."

—Dr. Sullivan writes from Starkville, Miss., February 1: "We are having a mild winter. I am very busy—nineteen appointments in the district. The preachers are at their post—a noble band of itinerants, working for souls. We are improving the houses of worship and the parsonages. Bro. Long, of Macon, has sent to the treasurer $100 for foreign missions, and other pastors are moving on the collections. I trust the ADVOCATE will reap a good harvest in this section this year. You are enriching its columns. Those articles on preaching are timely and strong. You are doing a great work well. I congratulate you on having Bro. Grant in the business office. Our loss is very great in the departure of the strong, noble Dr. Adams. The Lord bless and reward you."

—Rev. R. M. Blocker writes from Rayne, La., February 2: "We reached our charge (Plaquemine Brulee and Rayne), at the end of about 250 miles' move, on January 3. We are being well provided for, and I am now ready to do the best work of my life, if possible. I am planning and praying for a revival in each church of this charge and to put the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE into every Methodist family. The stewards bought me a good horse to-day, and I shall ride him."

—Rev. J. N. Ware writes from Sandersville, Miss.: "As I have some new subscribers to send for the ADVOCATE, I will write a few lines about my work. At the last Conference Bishop Hargrove sent me back to the same charge (Sandersville, Meridian district, Mississippi Conference). This charge is on the New Orleans and Northeastern railroad, forty-seven miles from Meridian. Our people received us back kindly with many greetings. We have received many encouragements since Conference. Bro. Norsworthy, my presiding elder, held our first Quarterly Conference, on January 12, and said it was the best, financially, for the first quarter he ever held on this charge, which speaks well for the work. My people seem to take more interest in their pastor than ever before. We have received three nice hogs and many other nice things for the comforts of life, besides a nice little purse of money. We have received since Conference five members by letter, baptized one adult and one child, and received five new subscribers for the ADVOCATE, and raised a part of my Conference collections. My congregregations, large and attentive for the time of year. We have two prayer meetings very well attended most of the time. As I did not write any about the work last year, I will say, we have built three new churches last year, about completing the third one at Laurel, which will be ready by my next appointment, if no providential hindrance. We give God all the glory for this success."

—Rev. F. W. Featherstun, writing from Clinton, La., says: "There is certainly a mistake in the Minutes of the last Mississippi Conference. The twentieth question reads thus: 'Are all the preachers blameless in their life and official administrations?' Their names were called over one by one, and their characters were examined and passed, except Samuel J. Cotton, who had withdrawn from the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, to join the Methodist Episcopal Church, North.' I want to know if Bro. Cotton's character did not pass; and if not, what charge was made against him. Bro. Little, the presiding elder, said that there was nothing against him, and that he had done a good and faithful year's work. We certainly did not refuse to pass the character of this brother, after a good and faithful year's work, simply because he had gone to another communion. I would like to hear from the secretary."

Who Will Go?

We must go to lands recently redeemed from heathenism to find the highest standard of Christian consecration. It is stated that "one-fourth of the total number of Hawaiians who have been ordained to the ministry are now working in various parts of Micronesia and the Marquesas as missionaries." When will the church in our land reach that standard? We are far from it now. After our last annual meeting the call was made for four men for China. Two have gone. Two more are needed. Who will go? Is not this a time when the prayer for laborers in the harvest field should go up from the church of Christ?

Notice.

MR. EDITOR: As our sisters of the North Mississippi Conference societies intend raising the amount necessary to buy "the organ," I take this opportunity of asking the members of our Conference to remember the "missionary's outfit" asked for several months ago. Two hundred dollars is the amount required; only $75 15 has been received.

Anyone wishing a photo of the following missionaries—Misses Mary McClelland and Bettie Hughes, or Bro. and Sister Weems—can procure them by mail from the address below for thirty cents each.

Respectfully,

Correction.

MR. EDITOR: I desire to correct a mistake in the Minutes of the recent session of the Mississippi Conference. In the financial table, Vicksburg district, Rolling Fork, it reads: "Assessment, $880; paid $600"—whereas it should be: "Assessment, $600; paid $880." This correction I feel is due the Rolling Fork charge.

A Correction.

The published Minutes of the "Mississippi Annual Conference, Seventy-fifth Session, Held at Vicksburg, December 5-10, 1888," do not credit Wilson circuit with having paid a cent of the assessment for "Conference claimants." Our assessment for Conference claimants was $25. It was paid in full. The circuit paid every assessment in full, except the claims of the presiding elder and preacher in charge. The above statement is published in justice to myself and the brethren by whom the assessments were paid.

PERFECT MUSIC BOOKS

for CHOIRS, for CLASSES, for CONVENTIONS, are perhaps impossible—but DITSON & CO.'S matchless books are just on the line.

Emerson's Easy Anthems, (80 cents, $7.20 per dozen) are 49 in number—quite new—give about one for each Sunday in the year, and are full of grace and beauty.

Song Harmony, (60 cts., $6 per doz.) by L. O. Emerson, is a new and very "perfect" book for Singing Classes, perhaps the best of a long series of books by the same author.

The Graded Singing School, (50 cts., $4.50 per doz.) by D. F. Hodges, is a sensible, practical method, by a very sensible, practical teacher, and is fully furnished with good material for successful work.

Jehovah's Praise, ($4. or $5 per dozen) by L. O. Emerson, is a full size Church Music Book, with a large number of Anthems and Tunes for choirs, also Glees, Part-Songs, and a multitude of melodious exercises for classes.

Temple Chimes, (35 cts., $3.60 dozen) by Evangelist Luther, just published, is a very superior collection of new Gospel Songs, of Hymns and Tunes.

Praise in Song, (40 cts., $4.20 doz.) by L. O. and E. T. Emerson, is a new Sunday-School and Praise book, full of uncommonly good music and hymns. A very "perfect" book for vestry singing.

Any book mailed for retail price.

10,000!

Ten Thousand Subscribers is what the Publisher and friends of the ADVOCATE ask for.

Ten Thousand Subscribers is the number that all say the paper should have in the bounds of the three Conferences. How can we secure the requisite number to make up the 10,000? If each subscriber will send in one new subscriber, we will have more than enough to make the 10,000. If each preacher will send in ten new subscribers, it will give the ADVOCATE over 10,000.

THE PUBLISHER'S PROPOSITION.

Brethren and friends, if you will give the ADVOCATE a subscription list of 10,000, I will give $2,000 to the superannuated preachers, widows and orphans' fund, to be divided among the three Conferences, pro rata, in proportion to the number of new subscribers sent in from each Conference.

My object in asking for the ADVOCATE'S increased circulation is to enlarge its field of usefulness and increase its power for good in this part of our Zion.

In haste I bore the tidings:
"My darling, I'm afraid
Your pussy cat has stolen
The custard that you made."

I feared a burst of weeping,
But saw with glad surprise,
A look of joyous rapture
Light up the childish eyes:

"O, auntie! I'm so flattered
To have dear pussy feel
That I can make a custard
That's good enough to steal."

MR. EDITOR: I have thought for a long time that I would write you a letter. I think it is so kind in you to give the children a corner in your nice paper. How big it must make a little boy feel to see one of his letters in print. I will be seven years old on my next birthday. I have been very ill, and mamma and papa thought I would die; but God let me get well, while he took my sweet, little cousin, Annie, to live with him. We miss her so much, but we know she is happy with Jesus. My papa gave me a nice drum, and I have a parade nearly every day. Bro. Hart is our pastor this year. With best wishes, I am, Your little friend,

MR. EDITOR: As I have not written to you in a long time, I thought I would write. We have a good Sunday-school here. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday, except when it rains. Bro. Black left us this year. We have Bro. C. G. Andrews this year. We are well pleased with him. I am a member of the Methodist Church. I will ask a question: Where in the Bible is "brass" first found? I will close, as I am afraid of the waste-basket, hoping a success for the ADVOCATE.

The Little Band of Mercy.

BY MRS. S. M. READ.

As Millie and Frank were on their way from school, Frank took up a stone to throw at a robbin that was hopping along on the ground a little way in front of them.

"Do not throw the stone at the bird, please do not," said Millie. "I will tell you a story that auntie told me, and then I am sure you will not want to. It is a real, true story that happened up in the country where my Aunt Mary was staying last summer."

Millie came close to her little schoolmate, Frank, who still held the stone in his hand, as though undecided as to what he should do with it. To Millie's relief the bird flew up into a tree, and Frank threw the stone at a rock by the side of the road.

"Now, tell me what you was going to," said Frank.

"Well," said Millie, "up where Aunt Mary was they were moving a large building. They got it out into the street and on one side of the street there were some trees, and on one of them was a robin's nest with some little young birds in it, not near large enough to fly. The old birds were dreadfully frightened when the great building came crashing along against the tree where their nest was, breaking some of the branches, and bending others. The tree was shaken so that it seemed as though the little birds would surely fall out. Well, what do you suppose the mother-bird did? Why, she just went and sat on the nest, and held the little birds in. It was a fearful time for the birds, but the little mother stuck to the nest, notwithstanding all the noise and tumult: You see how much the mother-bird loved her little ones. She did not fly away to some place of safety and leave them to die, no more than our mothers would leave us, if danger was coming to us."

"My mother came after Katie and me," said Frank, "when we were playing in the barn, and the wind, all at once, came to blow so hard that she was afraid the barn would be blown down, and the doctor said she did it at the risk of her life. Baby was only three weeks old, and mother was not strong. Father said he did not see how she got us into the house, but she did."

Just then they overtook two more of the school children, James and Willie.

"Say," said Frank, "don't let us boys throw any more stones at the birds, because we might hit and kill a mother-bird, and then the little birds would suffer and die."

The boys agreed with Frank that they would not, and thus there was a little Band of Mercy formed right there on the way home from school. So Millie's influence was good, not only for the birds, but for the boys; because they will grow up to be better men for learning to be merciful to God's creatures.—Watchman.

A Dozen Good Rules.

We were struck, lately, by the orderly behavior of a large family of children, particularly at the table. We spoke of it to their father, and he pointed to a paper pinned to the wall on which were written some excellent rules. We begged a copy for the benefit of our readers. Here it is:

1. Shut every door after you, and without slamming it.

2. Don't make a practice of shouting, jumping or running in the house.

3. Never call to a person up stairs or in the next room; if you wish to speak to them go quietly to where they are.

4. Always speak kindly and politely to everybody, if you would have them do the same to you.

5. When told to do or not to do a thing by either parent, never ask why you should or should not do it.

6. Tell of your own faults and misdoings, not those of your brothers and sisters.

7. Carefully clean the mud and snow off your boots before entering the house.

8. Be prompt at every meal hour.

9. Never sit down at the table or in the sitting room with dirty hands or tumbled hair.

10. Never interrupt any conversation, but wait patiently your turn to speak.

11. Never reserve your good manners for company, but be equally polite at home and abroad.

12. Let your first, last and best confidante be your mother. —Anon.

The way to make money is to save it. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the most economical medicine to buy, as it is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Do not take any other preparation if you have decided to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Children's Sayings.

"How does commerce between nations affect them?" was asked of a little Irish girl in the geography class. "It makes them cousins," she answered promptly. The geography said, "Commerce between nations brings them into close relations."

"Which of you can tell me the meaning of 'amen!'" asked the teacher of a primary Sunday-school class.

Harry held up his hand. "It means that you have got through," he said.

Little Maggie, after a long day of play, found on the way to bed that her dolly had been lying neglected all day on a chair. "Why, you poor chile, I forgot all about you, and I'm your mother?"

Dickie, six years old, had a pair of boots. He cut one of them with his hatchet. The father became very angry, and scolded incessantly. The little fellow looked his father in the face, and said: "If you don't stop talking, you'll get me mad, too."

In descending the stairs Tommy's foot slipped, and he and the coal-hod which he was carrying rattled to the bottom. "Here, here!" shouted his father from the parlor, "what's up out there?" "Nothing's up, pa," shouted back Tommy; "everything's down!"—Selected.

Ethnology.

A writer on this subject, in a recent number of the Popular Science Monthly, adduces a striking evidence of the good effects flowing from the knowledge of what has been called "linguistic ethnology." It is taken from the history of British India. It is, perhaps, somewhat exaggerated, but certainly has a large basis of truth.

"When the people of Hindostan, in the last century, came under the British power, they were regarded as a debased and alien race. Their complexion reminded their conquerors of Africa. Their divinities were hideous monsters. Their social system was anti-human and detestable. Suttee, thuggee, Juggernaut, all sorts of cruel and shocking abominations, seemed to characterize and degrade them. The proudest Indian prince was, in the sight and ordinary speech of the rawest white subaltern, only a 'nigger.' This universal contempt was retorted with a hatred as universal, and threatening in the future most disastrous consequences to the British rule. Then came an unexpected and wonderful discovery. European philologists, studying the language of the conquered race, discovered that the classic mother-tongue of Northern Hindostan was the elder sister of the Greek, the Latin, the German, and the Celtic languages. At the same time a splendid literature was unearthed, which filled the scholars of Europe with astonishment and delight. The despised Asiatics became not only the blood-relations, but the teachers and exemplars of their conquerors. The revulsion of feeling on both sides was immense. Mutual esteem and confidence, to a large extent, took the place of repulsion and distrust. Even in the mutiny which occurred while the change was yet in progress a very large proportion of the native princes and people refused to take part in the outbreak. Since that time the good-will has steadily grown with the fellowship of common studies and aims. It may fairly be affirmed at this day that the discovery of the Sanskrit language and literature has been of more value to England in the retention and increase of her Indian Empire than an army of a hundred thousand men."

TELEGRAPHIC SPEED.—When the first electric telegraph was established the speed of transmission was from four to five words a minute with the five-needle instrument. In 1849 the average rate for newspaper messages was seventeen words a minute. The present pace of the electric telegraph between London and Dublin, where the Wheatstone instrument is employed, reaches 462 words, and thus what was regarded as miraculous sixty years ago, has multiplied a hundredfold in half a century.

The strongest wood in the United States, according to Prof. Sargent, is that of the nutmeg hickory of the Arkansas region, and the weakest the West Indian birch. The most elastic is the tamarack, the white or shellback hickory ranking far below it. The least elastic, and the lowest in specific gravity, is the wood of the Ticus aurea. The wood having the highest specific gravity, upon which the value as fuel in general depends, is the bluewood of Texas.

The best we can say of Compound Oxygen is not half so convincing as the report our patients give of it.

Long-Standing

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, (of Fernandina, Fla.,) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. Furbush, Haverhill, Mass.

BLANKS—Died, in Columbia, La., December 30, 1888, ANNIE BLANKS, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Blanks, age six years.

On the Monday following, the bowering clouds hung heavy, dark and full of tears, as if sympathizing with the scene enacting beneath them. Upon the hillside cemetery the people of Columbia had gathered to lay to rest little Annie Blanks, a child over whose head only six summers had passed away. Her life had been sinless and joyous. Her bright, sunny ways had made her the sunlight and joy of the household. Her intelligence, cheerfulness, affection, and loving obedience had made her the idol of her father and the darling of her mother. Sorrow had not touched her, shielded as she was by a mother's forethought, and a father's love had filled her life with childish pleasure and protected her from every care. She was a child of more than ordinary intelligence. Her active mind was just beginning to comprehend great moral truths and to understand the beauties of nature. But as the rosebud is plucked from the parent stem, so was this beautiful human flower transplanted to the realms of light. The winds sighed through the branches of the evergreen and ever-graceful pines as the minister uttered the words of the impressive burial service. Every heart beat in unison with the solemn words that fell from his lips, and was filled with sympathy for those that mourned, and sorrow that one so bright, beautiful and pure should die so young. But God's ways are mysterious. As the clods descended upon the coffin with a sound that fills all hearts with an indescribable dread, and the loving hearts of those that mourn with an emotion, that pen can not paint, the father, a man of strong nature and busy brain, cried out in the anguish of his soul: "O Lord, O Lord, it is hard! O Annie, how can I lose you?" He gazed upon the open grave with tear-bedimmed eyes, and his bosom heaved with an emotion he could not control. Could it have been possible, his love for his child was so great that he would have prevented the little form from being enclosed in the dark, dank dismal tomb; that little form that so often had nestled caressingly to his arms; whose eyes had looked into his with a love that can not be measured; whose lips had touched his with a kiss as pure as an angel's love. Now, Little Annie, the apple of his eye, his heart's delight, was being laid from his sight forever. And the strong man, whose broad brain had conducted great business enterprises, was crushed with grief. But could that pure being speak to its grieving father as he gazed upon the fast filling grave, she would have said: "Papa, dear papa, I am not in that darksome tomb. I am among the beautiful and blessed. Do not gaze upon the gloomy earth with sorrowful and streaming eyes. Look up. I hold out my little hands. I beckon to you to seek for me in the realms of light, where he reigns who blessed little children while upon earth and commanded his disciples to bring them to him. I have cast off mortality and have put on immortality." How comforting is the thought that when the trials, toils and tribulations of this life are done, we will gather about the great white throne with those we have loved upon this earth. But while here sorrows must come. However great that sorrow is, God sends it in his wisdom, and our will, if we yield obedience to him, will sanctify it.

May Mr. and Mrs. Blanks, though "God's hand has been upon the lever," and their hearts are crushed and bleeding, find that sweetest and serenest joy when they think of their little daughter standing among the pure and the blessed; through their tears may they see the rainbow of promise and hope, when they recognize that little Annie, who was so sweet and beautiful in this world, is now among the glorified and perfected in that land where "truth is the body of God and light is his shadow!" In the great beyond they have a precious treasure that is drawing their minds and hearts heavenward. D.

JORDAN—Mrs. JUDITH EASTIN JORDAN died December 22, 1888. She was born September 12, 1823. She was the widow of William G. Jordan, who died in the year 1885. William G. Jordan was the son of Mortimer Jordan, of Jefferson county, Ala., who was the son of old Reuben Jordan, of Oglethorpe county, Ga. Old Reuben Jordan came to Georgia with a colony of Virginians, including the Gilmers, Taliferros, Meriwethers, Barnetts, McGees, Johnsons, etc., and settled the Goose Pond district, on Broad river, in Oglethorpe county. This colony and their descendants have been described fully in Gov. Gilmer's book of Georgians. The Jordans were one of the most distinguished families in middle Georgia. Judith Eastin Jordan, the subject of this notice, was the daughter of Capt. John Seals, who married Margret Harvey Jordan, who was the second daughter of old Reuben Jordan, of Broad river memory.

I am thus minute in this obituary record for the reason that the descendants of the above-named families are settled throughout every Southern State. They are all akin by marriage or otherwise, and will all feel an interest in anything pertaining to one of their number. There are no people in the Southern States of better blood, nor none who have been more decidedly characterized by all the elements of true Southern manhood.

Mrs. Judith Jordan was not in her "teens" when she came to Mississippi in 1834, and with her father settled at a place on the Nashville road, in Lowndes county, ten miles below Columbus, now known as the Jordan place. Here she was raised, here she married, and here she died. She married William G. Jordan in 1840. They raised a large family of children. She joined the Methodist Church at old Concord in early life, and was a consistent member, trusted and loved by all who knew her, to the last.

Mrs. Jordan was one of the best women that ever lived on earth. The affectionate kindness of her nature knew no bounds. She loved everybody; her children she almost idolized. Her death was the most peaceful I ever witnessed. I stood by her bedside and witnessed her death. Her pure and peaceful spirit quit her body so gently that it was impossible to say at what moment she was dead. She lay seemingly sleeping, as restful as an infant; there was not a struggle, nor a single contortion of her dear face, but passed away to her last rest as gently as sinks a summer sun. L.

MASON MAGGIE A. B. WINN, daughter of G. T. and S. E. Winn, of Homer, La., born May 29, 1868; professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, September, 1878; was married to Mr. William Mason, of Atlanta, Ga., January 12, 1888; died at her father's residence, January 18, 1889.

We seldom chronicle the death of one so cherished and loved by all. Another breach is made in that family circle—another member of that church removed. How the majority increases! We will all soon have passed over. Having had her pastor for two years, I can say her steadfast and unwavering fidelity to the church of Christ enables us, with resignation, to give her into the keeping of him who doeth all things well. Mysterious, strange, unfathomable, we can say: "The Lord gave, the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." When dying, she said she "loved the Lord, and that he was good to her," and confessed her love for the Lord repeatedly, and continued to say, "I only regret to leave the baby;" and asked, "What will become of it?" The child, ten days old, will not know a mother's tender love and care; but others, upon whom will devolve the responsibility, with love and caresses, will train him for the skies.

Let us look for some good evolved from this sore affliction to grandmother, father, sisters, husband, child. We know not why. Let not our spirits be perturbed. We know our God is love, mercy, truth and goodness.

Our loved dead pass from our gaze here, "to be with the Lord," and we shall be satisfied when we awake in his likeness," "see the king in his beauty," and "with the ransomed return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon our head, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Glory to God for the Christian's hope!

THOS. H. WHITE.

STAFFORD—Mrs. SARAH STAFFORD departed this life, in good faith, January 23. She had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for several years, and during her protracted sickness she expressed a desire to depart this life and to be with Christ. She leaves a husband and two small children, with a large circle of relatives, to mourn over her death. May God bless and protect the babies! The writer preached at the funeral of the deceased on January 24, from Job xiv. 10, and used the 726th and the 729th hymns. J. H. EVANS.

MARTIN—WILLIE LEA, only son of W. G. and C. C. H. Martin, born in Houston, Texas, October 3, 1881, died in Covington, La., Monday evening, January 7, 1889, aged seven years, three months and four days. Although sick for four long months, the summons came unexpectedly, and the little soul broke the bonds of its earthly tabernacle and wended its way heavenward, in obedience to God's command. L. W. WOOD.

It is stated that Sir Julian Pauncefote, under-Secretary of State for the foreign office, has been appointed British Minister to the United States. Although the report is not officially confirmed, it is credited at the foreign office.

The Standard's Berlin correspondent says: "In spite of unmistakable friction with the Americans, nobody here fears that there is any danger of the Samoan affair leading to a war between the two nations. Germany will, in fact, make friendly proposals which, doubtless, the government at Washington will finally accept.

Mr. John Finucane, M. P., and others, imprisoned for offenses under the Crimes Act, were released on February 1. A meeting was held in their honor, in Limerick, at which the mayor presided. The mayor said that Mr. Balfour might expect the vengeance of the Irish nation if anything happened to Mr. O'Brien.

ATOMIC MEASUREMENT.—The molecular theory is classed by Dr. Roscoe, president of the British Association, among the most notable of modern scientific landmarks, and recent investigation has accomplished, as regards the size of the atom, what was formerly regarded as impossible. Recent researches have extended the methods of atomic measurement, with the amazing conclusion that the distance between the centres of contiguous molecules is less than a five-millionth and greater than a billionth of a centimeter; that is, assuming that the best microscopes magnify 6,000 to 8,000 times, a microscope which would magnify that result as much again, would show the molecular structure of water—or again, putting the statement in another or more absolute form, if it be supposed that the minutest organism which can now be seen were provided with equally powerful microscopes to those just named, these beings would be able to see the atoms.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS. This is the heading of the advertisement of Mr. J. G. Grant's, 50 and 52 Baronne street, New Orleans. Now, we would suggest to our readers to peruse it carefully, and they will be astonished at the low prices which Mr. Grant is selling furniture for. As this gentleman is thoroughly reliable, and guarantees the smallest article that leaves his store, we feel satisfied that those who may try him once will have further dealings with him. There is no store of this character in the South that keeps a larger or finer assortment than his, and as his expenses are less than others in the same line, he has informed us that he can sell lower. Try him.—N. O. Weekly Picayune, January 24.

There has been a lively exchange of notes on the Samoan question between the governments of Germany, England and the United States; but as this takes time and trouble, a conference of plenipotentiaries will probably be arranged to settle the question.

A PSALM OF LIFE.

ough the wild Babel of our fever'd time
e song of Homer cometh, grave and stern, h lilting from the world's fresh, healthy prime—dings which our worn, wearied age concern.

hanged, through all the long, unnumbered, years,
e voice of Homer sings the song divine,
ch tells of godlike toils, of heroes' tears,
d of the punishment of Priam's line.

battle in the plain is raging yet,
watchfires blaze, the beak'd ships line the shore:
s the foe in grim array is set—
but the we fight as they fought of yore?

we, too, like the hernes long ago,
set wage slow wars and sail the bitter sea;
re is the conflict, loud the trumpets blow,
d the waves roar and rage unceasingly.

must we wander o'er the stormy main;
at rocks and whirlpools a dead passage make;
must the Sirens sing to us in vain;
ll from the tolls of Circe must we break.

, then, to Homer's Psalm of Life, and see w they endured whose pilgrimage is done; hear the message they have left for thee—
ly by patience is the victory won.

Preaching.

BY REV. D. G. W. ELLIS.

late editorial in the NEW LEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE me to thinking about preach-; not that I had never before ught on that subject, but pos-y my thinking along that added to what Dr. Carter said, may be of some inter-to some of the readers of the VOCATE. I do not remember ave seen in my reading hith-an answer to the question, at is preaching? A clear, t, full definition of the word each," containing just enough nothing superfluous, I be-e I have not seen. Nearly ttempts to define preaching, I have noticed, have in-led too much in the defini-. For instance, the follow-: "Preaching is the proclama-of the truth contained in the and New Testament Scrip-s, to induce the hearers to pt it and obey its require-ts." The above contains, as rt of the definition, the ob-or end of preaching. Upon other hand, if one should an-the question, What is ching? by saying, "It is a lamation of the truth," he ld not include enough in his ition; for to be preaching it be an announcement of a icular kind of truth; hence definition must designate the of truth that forms the sub-matter of preaching. When says to Timothy, "Preach Word," he limits Timothy reaching only what is con-d in the Word. There is truth not contained in the e, which, though important, not the subject-matter of ching. If I were to venture nswer to the question, What eaching? I would say, It is ing the truth contained in oly Scriptures. The truth ained in the Bible is inex-tible. The preacher enters a study of truth that is in-in extent, boundless in its , and that takes in the eter-ges in its sweep. He is not fettered by the paucity of the facts he is enjoined to teach. The book from which he takes his lessons reveals the character and mind of the infinite and eternal God. It tells us what he has done in creation and providence and redemption. It gives us the only satisfactory account of the origin of all things. It contains deep mysteries that may await the higher and more perfect revelations of the eternal world. Here, if anywhere, there may be deep and long-continued thinking. He that assumes to teach the lessons of this wonderful book without patient study and deep thinking dishonors his calling. I agree with you, Mr. Editor, in discarding the idea that it is incumbent upon the minister to enter upon a formal defense of the Christian religion every time he enters the pulpit. The proclamation of the truth carries with it evidencing power. Pulpit belligerents in the present age are rated at a heavy discount. It is only the small, one-ideal, bigoted sectarian that enters the pulpit with the tomahawk and scalping-knife. Infidel scientists have been so often demolished by the volunteer champions that it would seem a work of supererogation to repeat the process. Yet this class of preachers thinks it devolves upon them to throw shells into the camp of their dead antagonists. To be always proving that the Christian religion is true begets the suspicion that the preacher does not himself feel assured of its truth. There is, however, one way of defending the truth not open to the foregoing objections. Preach it, illustrate it, and enforce it by giving the reasons upon which it is based, and the arguments by which it is sustained, without reference to antagonistic views. State your proposition without announcing beforehand the conclusions to which the proposition will conduct. Then make your proposition strong in the conviction of your hearers by perfectly fair and logical arguments (for a weak, illogical argument is worse than none) before you state the conclusion or conclusions contained in the proposition. In this way you may lead your hearers to accept the truth before they are aware that it conflicts with their preconceived opinions. But if you announce at the outset that you are going to demolish some certain errors, all in the congregation abetting such errors will have their prejudices aroused on the instant, and they will fortify themselves against your attack. A defense of the Christian religion, or any particular doctrine of the Christian system, conducted in this way is not objectionable. But third-rate preachers make themselves ridiculous by their weak and silly attacks upon Huxley, Tyndall, Darwin and Spencer. If it be necessary to notice the speculations of these scientific gentlemen, let it be done by one competent to deal with them through the medium of the press. The pulpit, I protest, is not the place for the discussion of scientific and philosophical questions, except in so far as science and philosophy may help to a better understanding of the revealed word of truth.

"Christian Womanhood."

BY D. W. FOSTER, M. D.

My highly esteemed friend, Rev. W. C. Black, D. D., now of Jackson, Miss., has published a book entitled "Christian Womanhood." He also preaches a sermon on the text, "If a man die, shall he live again?" Now, if he will modify his book somewhat and add to it his sermon, then I would unhesitatingly say that every man, woman and child in the whole length and breadth of the land, on both this and the other side of the water, ought to read it by all means. One dollar brings it within the means of everybody.

The sermon ranks high among the grandest things ever preached by mortal man. And the book, with a little qualification, will amply repay for the cost and the reading of it. One modification needed is where he has written about the "employments" of woman. The Doctor seems to have overlooked some of the improprieties and inconveniences that would be inseparably connected with certain avocations were she to venture into them. For instance, if a girl should be allured by visions of fame or fortune into the profession of medicine (which he claims to be her legitimate and appropriate sphere), she would inevitably encounter appalling, if not ruinous, obstacles which she (nor the Doctor it seems) had ever conceived of. Nobody will deny that the female sex possesses the mental capacity to acquire a knowledge of "the healing art." But to become expert enough in it to practice it safely and successfully requires long years of close application to hard study—not so fascinating as that of flowers, either. First, the girl should decide upon that avocation, if at all, early enough in life to enter a female college and go through a thorough course of study; there to prepare her for the curriculum of three years in the medical college—say, she will have to study, first, five years in a female college, and then three in a male; and so quite a sum of money, as well as time and study, will be required. I can see how the nice, innocent and unsuspecting girl may be well and safely provided for and preserved unharmed while at school with only other girls; but, like a man who shuts his eyes when he takes a leap into a dark abyss, I beg leave to close my eyes upon her fate when she enters the medical college where there are, and likely always will be, ninety-nine or more males to one female attending the lectures, dissections, hospitals, etc. And who would like to have his daughter thus mixed up with a promiscuous crowd of young men in the lecture-rooms, where all subjects are treated of during the day? And then mixed up with the same young men until a late hour of the night among the dead subjects in the dissecting-rooms, studying the various parts and organs of the human body of both sexes! or packed alongside the boys in the amphitheater witnessing all sorts of operations on all parts of the human body of both sexes! or crowding along with boys through large hospitals filled with all sorts of diseases in both sexes in all stages and conditions!—all these things she must endure to learn how to practice "the healing art." If she should boldly venture to go through the shocking and dangerous ordeal (for a girl, at least), is there any probability that she would ever escape the temptations and come out as pure as she entered the lists? She might see and learn a great deal (too much) of the anatomy and physiology of the different parts and organs of human kind, and the pathology of diseases and the therapeutics of treatment; but it is greatly to be feared that she would also learn more of human depravity than she would be able to combat and overcome successfully. But suppose that, by means of bars and bolts, spies and surveillance, the two sexes could be kept separate or properly restrained during the three years in a mixed medical college in a large city (where such schools have to be located to have plenty of live patients to illustrate the multifarious diseases and their treatments, and plenty of dead subjects to demonstrate anatomy and pathology), and the girl should (by bare possibility) come out unscathed, unblemished and "unspotted from the world" (with which she had been so long thrown in such rude and trying contact), with her diploma stating that she is fully qualified to practice medicine, surgery and obstetrics in all their various departments and branches; then what? She by this time is (say) twenty-two or twenty-three years of age; and what does God and nature intend she should do now? Marry some good man, of course, and raise up a houseful of children, which she should "train up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord;" and will that not be a noble and useful life?—a happy wife and mother, raising up and training a houseful of children (that's the way God intends it to be) to go forth in the world and be good and useful men and women—one son a President of the United States, and others governors and judges and lawyers and doctors and preachers and teachers and farmers and mechanics, etc., while the girls become the wives of these honorable men. Ought not that to be glory and honor enough to satisfy the ambition of any reasonable woman?

Letter from Japan.

BY REV. J. W. LAMBUTH.

MR. EDITOR: I did intend writing long before this, but I was absent some two weeks in December on a part of my work, 270 miles from Kobe, and did not return here until the day before Christmas; and then I had two quarterly meetings to attend and one mission meeting, besides my regular work of preaching and visiting. I can not complain of not having enough to do, for my hands are full. During the month of December I visited Najima, one point in my work, which takes me one day and two nights to reach by steamer. I was with those good people nearly two weeks, meeting with them twice a day, teaching them the words of Jesus, and encouraging them to trust in him. Truly the Lord is with them, and filling their hearts with joy and gladness. I felt it was good to be with them, to rejoice with them, and to praise God together. While there I baptized fourteen persons, and left twenty-five on probation. During my visit to Najima I witnessed the conversion of an entire family. The grandmother of the family was among the number baptized, and had been on probation some months. She was eighty-four years of age, was very happy, and, I believe, truly converted. It was her son, sixty years of age, and his wife, who were converted during my visit there. The grandmother had thrown away all her idols, and everything she had used in the worship of her ancestors, and she had pleaded with her son to give up his sake (wine) and become a Christian. At last he yielded, threw away all his wine cups, and determined to be a Christian. They all kneeled and prayed together, and the mother pleading for her son in prayer until he felt the peace of God in his heart, which made him happy. He could not understand it at first, and the grandmother sent his wife to the hotel, asking me to come and see them. I went, and found them all rejoicing and happy in the love of God. We praised God together, while many others came in and united with us in praise and thanksgiving to God. They expect to be baptized on my next visit. Nothing is too hard for the Lord! He can convert the hardest heart.

I had an invitation to go to another place, twenty miles from Najima, to baptize some six or seven others; but I had no opportunity to get there just then. I expect to go there on my next visit. One young man from there came with me to Kobe, and was baptized, with six others, on January 6, in our new church.

While in Najima, Prince Date sent me about two bushels of excellent oranges. He was one hundred years old on January 1; does not use glasses, and reads well. He is reading the Bible, and I have sent him some commentaries on the Gospel of Matthew in Japanese.

I have baptized twenty-one adults during the quarter, and three children, and have thirty in my district on probation. Truly the Lord is good to us, and we bless his holy name.

I have just had another invitation from a young man converted in Honolulu, to go and preach to his people, about one hundred miles from Kobe, in the interior. He offers to buy a house for any missionary who will go there and preach the gospel to his people. I expect to visit them in a few days. Pray for us. I will write again soon.

KOBE, JAPAN, Jan. 11, 1889.

Letter from Los Angeles Conference.

BY REV. Q. A. OATS.

A number of my brethren of the North Mississippi Conference said to me when we separated at the close of the session: "Bro. Oats, write and tell us about California, and how you are getting along!" and you, Mr. Editor, said: "Bro. Oats, write us something for the ADVOCATE." I thought best not to be in a hurry to comply, and have waited to see how things would seem after a better acquaintance. I am now possessed of some facts that may interest your readers, which I may safely state, subject, however, to revision and correction in case I find it necessary to change my mind in the future. We spent the last Sabbath of the old year in Wesson, Miss., saying "good-bye" to relatives, and visiting the grave of my wife's mother, whose resting-place till resurrection morn is in the cemetery there.

We took the train for New Orleans at three A. M., Monday, reaching there just three hours before time for the train leaving on the Southern Pacific. Having been invited by Bro. Grant, we went immediately to his residence, where my family were kindly entertained by his good wife, while, with his assistance, I looked after matters preparatory to our trip. But for Bro. Grant's help, stranger as I was, I would not have been able to get the train that day.

Our trip was continuous and uneventful from the "Queen City" to this place, which we reached on Friday. As I knew none of the names of my members here, I could give them no notice of my coming; hence they could make no preparation to receive us. Leaving my wife and little ones in the depot, I sallied forth in search of my church and people. I soon succeeded in finding them, and a good brother took his carriage to the depot for us, and conveyed us to his residence, where we were kindly cared for till matters could be arranged for us to move into the parsonage, which we did the next day. Very soon news went forth that the new preacher had come, and a number of our members called to see and get acquainted with us, and in a few hours we almost forgot that we were over two thousand miles from our old friends and loved ones, and felt that we were at home.

This is truly a delightful country, and may, indeed, be termed the Italy of America, with its grand scenery and salubrious clime. Coming, as we had, from the leafless, flowerless December of Mississippi to this land of perpetual spring, with its profusion of the richest and rarest fruits and flowers, and grand scenery, we almost felt as if we had entered an enchanted world. After crossing the Rockies we found flowers and fruits of the most delicate nature growing everywhere, with their foliage, buds, blooms, and fruits, just as though it were May. Everywhere the country is improved, and in a high state of cultivation.

Santa Ana is a beautiful little city, thirty-four miles from Los Angeles, near the Santa Ana river, from which it takes its name, and ten miles from the Pacific coast. The city proper has only about 5,000 inhabitants, but it is surrounded by a number of towns of importance, all connected by street-car lines. The population is of the better class of people from the Eastern States, who have come here in the last few years. They are a religious and church-going people. We have representatives of nearly all the churches, and every sort of religion this country affords. We have the Northern and Southern Methodists, three different branches of Presbyterians, Campbellites, Baptists, Congregationalists, Episcopalians, Roman Catholics, a Holiness Church, Adventists, and an encampment of the Salvation Army—all having regular services. The Southern Methodist Church is a neat building, small as compared with churches in the East, but the largest, except one, in the place, and much the prettiest and best furnished. It is well located on one corner of the public square, and near the center of the town. The parsonage is a neat cottage-building of six rooms, all very well furnished, situated on the same lot with the church. The whole is valued at $10,000.

A few nights after we moved into the parsonage our people, young and old, burst in upon us, unheralded, and gave us a genuine "pounding," leaving in the pantry and store-room such things as will make glad the hearts of the inhabitants of the parsonage, and make them smile many days to come.

Our church has about 175 members. The standard of spiritual religion will compare well with any congregation I have ever known. The church is very well organized, and seems alive along all the lines of church work. The membership is made up mainly of Southern people and people who have Southern sympathies. The Methodist Episcopal Church is, numerically, stronger than our church. Our church was the first on the ground, and for some years was the only church here. Our brethren from the North have grown more rapidly by reason of the greater influx of people from the North and Northwest than from the South. From the information I have this is the case on all this coast, and will probably continue, by reason of the fact that Southern people are learning more and more to love and appreciate their glorious Southland, and will stay at home. In the South they have the favorable climate, every variety of soil, unbounded mineral wealth, and resources for enterprises unexcelled in all the world. Here, as in the North and Northwest, lands are held at an enormous price. They sell here anywhere from $200 to $1,000 per acre, while the best farm lands through the South can be procured for $10 and $20 per acre. If resources for wealth are what our people in the South want, they had better stay at home. This is not said in depreciation of this section, for I am fully persuaded that it is one of the grandest places God has ever provided for the habitation of man. The soil is unequaled for fertility, but it will not compare with the South when all its varied resources are considered. This is, beyond all doubt, the place for people in quest of health. Come over, Mr. Editor, and try it. Possibly it will beat Sour Lake, and then you could find so much here to write about.

ELECTRIC MOTORS.—The Manufacturer and Builder declares that there are at present no less than ten thousand electric motors in use throughout the United States. The uses to which these are put are extremely varied; they embrace the running of sewing machines, printing presses and ventilating fans; operating dental instruments, driving street-cars, coal and ore haulage in mines, pumping water, washing bottles, and in machine-shops, shoe factories, book-binderies, knitting-works, etc., for miscellaneous uses, they are becoming quite common.

Wit loses its respect with the good when seen in company with malice; and to smile at the jest which plants a thorn in another's breast, is to become a principal in the mischief.—Sheridan.

THE SURPRISE.

BY EDITH THOMAS.

Joy met Sorrow in a place
Where the branches interlace.
Very secret, still and sweet,
Safe from all prohaning feet.
"Why art here?" Joy, startled, cried;
"Why art here?" gravely Sorrow sighed.

"I came here to weep," said Joy.
"Tears are never my employ."
Murmured Sorrow, "Yet I see
Tears as grateful were to thee.
Come, young sister, and be taught
How to ease thy heart o'erfraught."

Joy sat down at Sorrow's feet,
And was taught a lesson sweet.
Pain would he make kind return;
Sorrow, art too old to learn?
Nay. Then fairy, yet awhile,
Till I've taught thee how to smile!"

Since that hour the two have been Bound as by mysterious kin;
Since that hour they so exchange
Tears and smiles, 'tis nothing strange
If sometimes a puzzled heart
Scarce can tell the twain apart.

Sunday-School Lesson.—Feb. 24.

The Great Teacher and the Twelve.

Mark vi, 1-13.

GOLDEN TEXT.—And they went out, and preached that men should repent.—Mark vi. 12.

TIME.—A. D. 28.

PLACE.—First in Nazareth, and then in other parts of Galilee.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—With verses 1-6, Matt. xiii, 54-58; with verses 7-13, Matt. x, 1-42; Luke ix, 1-6.

1. He went out from thence Not, from the house of Jairus, by the expression, his own country, in the corresponding clause.

2. The Sabbath day...to teach in the synagogue—On the Sabbath day he joined the crowd of village worshipers, and made his way to the synagogue, where for nearly twenty years he had been a constant attendant. Everything must have been perfectly familiar to him: the emblem over the entrance, the holy lamp, the ark with the sacred rolls, the reader's desk, or preacher's chair. What his thoughts were none can tell, but we may be sure that when the ruler asked him to read the appointed lessons, and address the congregation, his heart must have studied with even more than wonted desire to tell the glad tidings that he had to bring. Many hearing him—Or, "the many," that is, the greater part of those present. Were astonished—Still the effect of our Savior's preaching to the Jews we find to be amazement and astonishment, but no faith. Men may be affected by the Word that are not converted by it. From whence hath this man these things—That is, although they heard such things from him, and saw such mighty works done by him, as they could not but think required a divine influence and power, yet because by their reason they could not comprehend how one who had almost thirty years lived as a mechanic among them should come by any such acquaintance with, or extraordinary influence from, God, their passion quickly went over. What wisdom is this—They admitted the existence of great intellectual and rhetorical superiority: but they stood in doubt in reference to the origin of such superiority; was it from above or from beneath? Such mighty works—As the evangelist notes, in verse five, that no mighty work had been done in Nazareth, these must refer to what had been reported then as done in Capernaum and elsewhere.

3. Is not this the carpenter—In St. Matthew the question appears in this form: "Is not this the carpenter's son?" It is, of course, in the nature of things probable that he, as being "subject to his parents" (Luke ii, 51), both helped in the workshop during Joseph's life, and assisted the "brethren" to carry on the work after his death. If Christianity shows our Savior as a carpenter, and his apostles as fishermen, how ought they to be ashamed of their mean pride who scorn the useful avocations of the laborer! Well would it be for society if there were less of extravagance and effeminate pride, and if Christians would adopt the maxim of the ancient Jews, that every man, however high his rank or intellectual his profession, should learn the mastery of some manual trade. Son of Mary. Though neither of the evangelists speak of Joseph's death, yet it may be plainly inferred that Christ was now called "the Son of Mary" because of her being a widow. Brother of James, etc.—The fair interpretation of this passage is, that these were the sons and daughters of Joseph and Mary. The people in the neighborhood thought so, and spoke of them as such. Upon the whole, we think it is a clear case that the brethren of our Lord, so called, were not cousins, but literal, holy brothers. The idea, therefore, that Mary was at once a wife and a nun, is an ecclesiastical tradition unsupported by Scripture, and is the offspring of the false notion of the superior sanctity of celibacy. They were offended at him The Revised Version has it, offended in him. They could not reconcile the new wisdom and the claim which the teaching implied with the obscurity and commonness of the earlier life, and so they did not believe.

4. A prophet is not without honor—This seems to be a proverbial expression. He advances it as a general truth. There might be some exceptions to it, but he was not an exception. Everywhere else he had been more honored than at home. There they knew his family. They had seen his humble life. They had been his companions. They were envious of his wisdom, and too proud to be taught by him.

5. No mighty work—It would be a waste of power to perform miracles that would be disregarded and condemned by anticipation; besides, it is probable that they abstained from affording him any opportunity for performing miracles of power and mercy such as alone lay within the bounds of our Lord's mission. Save that he laid his hands etc.—Jesus wrought miracles, even in this circle, according to the slender measure of faith there was. Thus he distinguishes from these lower miraculous works the great manifestations of his wonder-working power; these latter could have and should have no demonstration under such circumstances.

6. He marvelled—These verses contain two remarkable instances, in a short space, of the manner in which the feelings and circumstances of men are ascribed to God in the Scriptures. It is said of him, who is almighty, that he could do there no mighty work." It is said of him, to whom all things were known, that he marvelled because of their unbelief. To reconcile omniscience with surprise is no part of our privilege or duty. All such seeming contradictions are parts of the great mystery of godliness. God manifest in the flesh, the union of humanity and deity in one theanthropic person. He went round about the villages—But, though he left Nazareth never to return, he remained in the neighborhood for a time, preaching in the villages of the great plain of Esdraelon, far and near. The whole theater of his activity, however, in this circuit, as in previous ones, was limited beyond ordinary conception. From north to south, between Chorazin, above Capernaum and Bezreeh in the great plain, was only a distance of ten hours, and from east to west, from Chorazin to Cana, or Nazareth, only six or seven. His whole life was spent in a space represented by one or two English counties, but the seed sown on this speck of ground is yet to cover the earth!

7. He called unto him the twelve—The time had now come when Jesus could make some use of the twelve whom he had set apart as apostles. Hitherto they had been with him exclusively as learners, but as those who were learning that they might be able to teach. They had been privileged beyond the generality of disciples that they might be fitted for apostleship. And began to send them forth—St. Mark alone records this. They were sent forth probably in different directions on a tentative mission, to make trial of their powers and fit them for a more extended mission afterward. Two and two—That they might help and encourage one another, and take counsel together. It would have been well for the church in all ages if the principle laid down at the outset could have been generally maintained. There is, perhaps, no sphere in which companionship is more desirable. To be called upon to witness sin and misery in their worst forms, to see the disease spreading, and eating the life of the people, and to find one's self powerless to check it through distrust and unbelief, brings with it a depression of spirits unknown in its intensity in any other field of labor. If, as so often happens, the laborer has none to take counsel with, none to cheer and sympathize with him, it becomes almost unbearable. He gave them power over unclean spirits—"He gave them power and authority;" in other words, he both qualified and authorized them. There is something greater than preaching—it is to make preachers; there is something greater than performing miracles—this is to impart the power to perform them. It is this new stage which the work of Jesus now reaches. He labors to raise his apostles up to his own level. It is an instance of divine power to which no other prophet, true or false, ever pretended. In this, as in many other respects, he stands unrivaled and alone.

8. That they should take nothing Our Lord's next care was to make the mission in a sense self-supporting. "The workman was worthy of his meat;" and if they went forth in simple dependence upon their Master, he would put it into men's hearts to supply their wants. They were to lay aside everything that would impede their progress in the way of baggage, every provision for the luxuries and conveniences of travel, and their "bread should be given to them, and their water be sure," and therewith they must be content. Save a staff—Matthew x, 10, says, "nor yet staves," or "staff," as the margin and R. V. read. They were not to seek or procure a "staff" for their journey, for the meaning there depends on "provide," in verse 9. If one has a staff, let him take it, but let him not provide one specially. This explanation is strictly grammatical, and removes any apparent contradiction in the narratives. No scrip—no bread—no money—The scrip of the Galilean peasants was of leather, "the skins of kids stripped off whole, and tanned by a very simple process," used especially to carry their food on a journey, and slung over their shoulders. The word "money" signifies a piece of brass or bronze worth about a farthing, but is probably used here for any kind of money. There was no departure from the simple manners of the country in this. At this day the farmer sets out on excursions quite as extensive without a para in his purse, and a modern moslem prophet of Tarshisha thus sends forth his apostles over this identical region. No traveler in the East would hesitate to throw himself on the hospitality of any village. In their purse—Literally, into the girdle, the construction implying previous insertion, and the whole phrase a custom still prevailing in the East, of using the belt, which keeps the flowing dress together, as a purse or pocket.

9. Be shod with sandals—That is, they were to take no other shoes with them for traveling "than their ordinary sandals of palm bark." So now the Galilean peasants wear a course shoe, answering to the sandal of the ancients, but never take two pair with them. And not put on two coats—Go in your ordinary habits, making no provision for yourselves, as travelers who think they may need something before their return. Such was the character and the commission which Messiah gave to the twelve apostles, whom he sent forth to preach the glad tidings of his kingdom; and when he afterward preferred other servants to the same high office, he gave them their instructions in nearly the same terms. He never afterward repeated these instructions. He never afterward added to them.

10. In what place soever ye enter into an house They were not to spend their days in merely social visits, nor to lose time in ceremonious greetings. Besides, by remaining at one place during their stay in a neighborhood, they would be the more readily found by those who wished to converse with them concerning the kingdom.

11. Shake off the dust under your feet—The action must be regarded as symbolical of a complete cessation of all fellowship and a renunciation of all further responsibility. More tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah—The cities that stood out in the history of the world, as most conspicuous for their infamy, were yet less guilty (as sinning less against light and knowledge) than those who rejected the messengers of the King. Yet further, before their departure our Lord quickened their sense of responsibility by reminding them of the terrible consequences awaiting any who should reject the message with which they were burdened. Sodom and Gomorrah had perished in one of the most signal of God's punishments, but no messenger had been sent direct from him to warn them of the consequences of their awful sin. They, on the other hand, were going with credentials such as no embassador had ever borne, and the guilt of impenitence would be proportioned to the force with which the truth was revealed. Day of judgment—That is, of final judgment. It must be noticed that this denunciatory part, as also the command to shake off the dust, applies only to the people of Israel, who had been long prepared for the message of the gospel by the law and the prophets, and recently more particularly by John the Baptist, and in this sense it may still apply to the rejection of the gospel by professing Christians; but as it was not then applicable to the Gentiles, so neither now can it be to the heathen who know not God.

12. That men should repent—They not only preach the doctrine of repentance among other articles of doctrine, but their whole preaching had for its end the producing of penitence and change of mind. The work of the apostles appears from this to have been a continuation of that of the Baptist.

Bro. Methvin's Parsonage.

I thank God that the hearts of his people were open to this call for help in behalf of one of the noblest and meekest of his servants—in behalf of a mission that should move all, even the "slow of heart," who love the Lord Jesus. The house is secure; the mission to the "wild tribes" at Anadarko is saved. Towards the last donations special for Bro. Methvin came in so generously that he will be able to build such a house—wisely planned, with one large room for teaching—as will establish his mission on a sure footing, and prepare him for all emergencies for some time to come. He is now well prepared to receive the two young men, as helpers, he has begged for, offering them a home in his house. May God call them to go! God has rewarded Bro. Methvin for his noble, self-sacrificing determination not to leave that "perishing people;" not to leave a dying heathen—people pleading like paupers at our door for the Bread of Life; for, however brave and resolute his will to remain, death or disease would have driven him from his post had not the God in whom he trusted sent his Spirit abroad in the church and moved the hearts of his people to bring up their offerings to build that house unto the Lord. And when did our God fail one who trusted him in truth?

In another place, among the "wild tribes" at Pawhusky, in the Osage Nation—"blanket Indians," and perfect heathen—there is a delicate woman working alone, lifting up holy hands in prayer to God for help to save them. I am lost in wonder at the utterly self-forgetting zeal, the amazing powers of endurance shown by that brave, trusting woman in her great love for those dying souls. She has labored among them nobly for two years. Yet she writes me her efforts are paralyzed, her labor in vain, because there a woman can not work effectively alone. She can accomplish nothing without the presence and co-operation of a minister. Last year a preacher was sent, and she appealed to our Parsonage Building Society for aid, saying: "It is impossible for a preacher to live here without a parsonage." To my deep regret we had not the means to give it. This year no preacher was sent. Now, the question is, "Shall that mission started at Pawhusky be given up for the lack of such a house as established Bro. Methvin's?" It all turns upon that one point. For the lack of a parsonage the mission to the Osages must be abandoned and a heathen people be left to perish in the midst of a Christian nation. But I prophesy the trust of our noble pioneer missionary there, clinging so tenaciously to the last hope of rescuing the perishing, will not be in vain; her labor of love, her prayers will prevail; that parsonage also, so necessary to save the mission to the Osages, will be built and be used by a preacher whose zeal will give her the co-operation she must have or, however reluctantly, abandon the field, leaving a failure scored to the account of our church. I have given the information; the rest I leave to the Holy Spirit.

The eyes of our people are opening to the importance, the absolute necessity for parsonages in many places to save the church from retreat. The fact that the fund for Bro. Methvin's parsonage was made up principally of small sums, coming from all parts of the church, shows the interest widespread. A list of receipts was published in The Christian Advocate, January 26. I was especially encouraged and gratified that so many pastors laid the matter before their congregations and called for collections. These brethren not only added to the fund by the sums sent, but extended the interest in our work; and many of them, I am glad to say, have since organized auxiliaries to our society. Some sent self-denial offerings, saying: "Actual suffering as an itinerant has taught me to feel for Bro. Methvin." God knows all those words cover, and he appreciates the gifts. Brethren, it was your love for our Lord that prompted you to remember his brother laboring among a barbarous people with no Christian sympathy to cheer him. In the Master's name I thank you. The praiseworthy efforts made by several societies to secure for us large and most acceptable donations were highly appreciated, and the Christian love shown by them greatly admired. Most sincerely I thank all my brothers and sisters for the kind words of encouragement that came with their offerings to refresh my sinking heart; for, though I hoped and trusted the work would finally be done, I feared the donations which came in slowly at first would be too long delayed that my brother, my Lord's brother, might suffer beyond his physical strength. As it is, it is now mid-winter, and the house is not yet finished. Oh, my brothers, oh, my sisters, can you not see how in this matter the "Lord's business requireth haste"! Could you but read the applications that come before our Board, and hear all that, by virtue of my office and through investigation, comes to my ears in regard to the unknown heroes bearing the standard of our church in the hard places, you would not fail to see Bro. Methvin's case is but one among many, and realize, if never before, the absolute necessity for a general organization to raise and have ready a fund to meet the needs of the church in this direction.

Another instance, proving that in our dearly beloved Methodism there still lives that heroic zeal that has made its existence a marked epoch in the history of God's church, is given by Dr. M. H. Wells, formerly of Texas, now at Walnut Street, Louisville. He tells of a good brother in West Texas, an intelligent, effective preacher, who determined to remain where sent (this some will not do, and the church loses ground); but, unable to secure a house, was compelled to dig a hole in the side of the mountain for shelter. There, with wife and children, he lived one year. He became, as one might expect, a victim of rheumatism, and is now ineffective and almost helpless. It was noble in the man who so suffered for his Lord; and he will receive the martyr's crown in glory. But, on our part, is it not a reckless waste of human life if we allow it? Is it not blood-guiltiness to send these men to the front of the battle, and to leave them to their fate? Their prayers have gone up to God, and he has put it in the hearts of the women to bring relief not to them only, but to the cause for which they were willing to suffer; for our church must go forward and do its part. Help us to organize, for organization is power and necessary to permanent success in this all-important matter. Send to your Conference secretary of the Woman's Department of Church Extension, if you know her address—to me if you do not—for our constitution, leaflets, etc., which show the full meaning of our plan for the extension of the spiritual church of God.

A Presiding Elder Pounded.

MR. EDITOR: I have seen in the ADVOCATE accounts of many preachers in charge being pounded; but not a word about presiding elders' poundings. Now, your readers may think that presiding elders are never pounded. If so, they are very much mistaken, for I can testify that they, at least, receive occasional poundings. I will report to you one I have received since Conference: First stroke, by letter—"Bro. Stirling, the preacher you sent us don't suit at all. Could you not change him to some other work in your district, and give us another man?" I replied: "My dear brother, I made the best representation to the Bishops and his council of your circuit that I could; but I will see what can be done for your relief." Second stroke, by letter: "Bro. Stirling, why have you treated us so? You have taken away our eleven A. M. service and given us three o'clock preaching. We can't be silent when we are thus robbed of our rights." "Brethren, I did the best for you I could." Third stroke: "Bro. Stirling, why did you take our preacher away? We all wanted him back." I said: "Sister, I did the best I could." The fact is, the preacher asked to be removed; said it would be an affliction to be returned. Fourth stroke: "Bro. Stirling, why did you send Bro. X back to us? We wanted a change." "My brother, why did you not tell me this before Conference?" "Well, I thought I would do so, but I forgot it when I saw you, and, besides, I thought that some of the brethren would tell you not to send Bro. X back to us." One brother did say, "Send X away;" but several others said, "Return him." Some said: "He is the most faithful man and best preacher we have ever had." Fifth stroke: "Bro. Stirling, why did you change our day from the second to the third Sunday? We are not pleased with the change. We have had the second Sunday fifteen years, and we don't want to change to the third." Sixth stroke: "Bro. Stirling, I wish I knew who it was that asked you to send our preacher away." I replied: "It was quite a number of the brethren; but, of course, I ought not to say who." "Well, I wish they had let it alone." "Well, brother, I want to ask you if you did not expect a change." "Yes, I believe it was generally expected." "Well, not a single member said to me, 'We want our preacher returned.'" "Well, we would have been pleased, I suppose, if we had got the man we expected." I said, "The man that was asked for I could not get." Seventh stroke: "Bro. Stirling, why is it that you put our Quarterly Conference in the middle of the week. I don't call that a Quarterly Conference at all." My brother, unless you devise some plan by which twenty more Sundays can be crowded into the year, I will be compelled to hold Quarterly Conferences in the middle of the week, unless the size of this district can be diminished.

Now, Mr. Editor, it is plain this task is too hard for me. I am insufficient for these things, and I said to myself some time since: "If the Bishop at the next Conference will give me a small circuit, I will not complain, unless he sends me to some circuit that expected Black, Carter, Andrews or Carradine. The disappointment, then, would be too sharp." Some years ago I was a presiding elder, and a very prominent and influential steward in a $250 circuit said to me, earnestly: "Bro. Stirling, we want a stronger man next year. Bros. Galloway or Black, I think, would suit us. Now, do the very best you can for us." Well, after all, it is not strange that every circuit and station should desire and seek for the best preacher, nor that they should be disappointed a little when they don't get the man they wanted. And should a presiding elder complain of his hard lot if people should complain at his course and blame him when he has done his very best? I take some comfort in the fact that things might have been much worse with me. The preachers also might have complained. One brother might have said: "Bro. Stirling, why was I removed? The people all wanted me back, and I wanted to go back." Another: "Bro. Stirling, why was I sent to this little shabby circuit? I am tired of the way I am treated by the Conferences." Another: "Why was I returned to this work? Could you not get a better work for me?" Another: "Bro. Stirling, why is a man of my [illegible] treated so? I have always been faithful to duty. I toiled [illegible] hard circuits, as large as some districts are now, before some of these young brothers were born, and now they fill the fat places and I am cast out on the [illegible] edges. Is there no gratitude in our church?"

This is a small sketch of my pounding. Oh, that I were an editor!—to sit quietly in my office, read the news, clip extracts, write elegant editorials, receive presents of fine overcoats, silk hats, and never have anybody to complain at me and blame me! How happy you must be!

TOM STIRLING.

(If that is all the "pounding" which a presiding elder gets these days, we will swap the "editorial tripod" for the "presiding elder's saddle," and give all the "beaver coats" and "silk hats" to boot.—EDITOR.)

From the Work.

COFFEEVILLE, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: I have just returned from Paragould, Ark., where we have been engaged in a revival meeting. Sixty persons, or more, reported themselves converted, and forty seven names were added to our church roll. These, too, of the first circles of Paragould society. The meeting was continued three weeks; hundreds were in attendance; Christians of all churches took part, and the work was great every way. Bro. Smith, P. E., of the Jonesboro district was with us, and did good work.

Paragould is a beautiful town of about two thousand inhabitants. The buildings are all new and neat, most of them having been built within the last five years. The people are refined and social, making it in every way a desirable place, except that it is cursed with saloons. This will not be so long, however.

Leaving this place, we ran down to Jonesboro—distance twenty miles—where a little more than a year ago our church was blessed with a great revival. In both these places Methodism is at the front. This is strikingly so at Paragould. Rev. J. A. Ritter is in charge here, and is in great favor with his people. At Jonesboro they have our Rev. D. Mathews, formerly of the North Mississippi Conference. He is doing a fine work there. Our church there has a beautiful house of worship, and an elegant new parsonage. So in this respect, at least, Bro. Mathews is in clover; but this is not all: he serves a worthy and appreciative people. We spent three days very pleasantly with him and his people on our return. Much more might be said about this trip, but I forbear. I have already written much more than I intended when I sat down.

Allow me to add one word as to the kindness shown us by the good people of Coffeeville, where we live. During my absence my family was well "pounded" with a great many nice things, notwithstanding we had no claims on them whatever. This, too, after they had already treated our good pastor, Bro. H. B. Scruggs, in the same way. So you see the good Lord does not neglect us in the general distribution. May these people be blessed according to their good deeds! But no more. May the Lord bless you and the dear ADVOCATE!

Yours fraternally,

E. G. KILGORE.

He was having his fortune told. "I see," said the medium, contracting her eyebrows, and turning her toes in, "I see the name of John." "Yes," said the sitter, indicating that he had heard the name before. "The name seems to have given you a great deal of trouble." "It has." "This John is an intimate friend." "That's so," he said, wonderingly. "And often leads you to do things you are sorry for." "True, every word." "His influence over you is bad." "Right again." "But you will soon have a serious quarrel, when you will become estranged." "I'm glad of that. Now spell out his whole name." The "meejum" opened one eye and studied the face of the sitter. Then she wrote some cabalistic words, and handed it to him in exchange for her fee. "Do not read it until you are at home," she said, solemnly. "It is your friend's whole name." When he reached home he held the gas and gravely examined the paper. There he read in picket-fence characters the name of his "friend," "Demi-John!" —Detroit Free Press.

Missionary.

The World's Progress in Missions.

We can hardly call the attention of our readers too frequently to the intense activity which prevails in the various fields of Christian missions. We are living in a critical period of missionary effort—a time full of decisive opportunities, and of high, exciting hopes for the religious effort which grasps and utilizes them—and the Christian public should be kept in constant and intelligent sympathy with the work which is being done in furtherance of the missionary plan. A knowledge of missionary progress is essential to encouragement and increased effort. It is well to review the general advance made and the position now held by Christian missions, as a whole. More particularly, knowledge of the foreign, as distinguished from the home fields, is desirable: for it is in the foreign fields that the greatest opportunities are now offered and the most effective work done.

High missionary authorities affirm that, especially during the last twenty years, foreign fields have witnessed more converts in proportion to the effort put forth than the home fields. Christianity has been established in more than fifty islands of the Pacific. Among the most remarkable instances are the Fiji Islanders, 90,000 of whom gather regularly for Christian worship. Madagascar was almost wholly a savage nation twenty years ago, while at present its sovereign queen, with 200,000 of her subjects, are professing Christians. There are over a hundred Christian congregations on the western coast of Africa, and in Sierra Leone over 50,000 Africans profess Christ. The slave trade, and as it is in the interior, has been suppressed along two thousand miles of sea coast. In China, missions are in operation in forty walled cities and three hundred and sixty villages.

Dr. Abel Stevens, writing from Yokohama, Japan, says: "I have been inspecting the great Asiatic battlefields, and I report the general conviction of both foreigners and intelligent natives here that the epoch of a grand social and religious revolution has set in in India, Burmah, China and Japan—that this old Asiatic heathendom is generally giving way before the continually increasing power of Western thought and Christian civilization."

In Brahminical India, the increase of native Christians is at the rate of 81 per cent. Contrary to the statistics usually given, which are very fallacious, the Christian religion, as regards the numbers of its adherents, now surpasses any other. A writer in the Missionary Review says: "The ordinary statistics by which Buddhists are made to outnumber Christians are totally misleading. To call all Mohammedans Christians would be much more reasonable than to consider as adherents of one religion all who call themselves Buddhists. In China, the stronghold of Buddhism, this is only one belief among many."

The most reliable returns show that Christians, and the dark races under their sway, are increasing at a much more rapid rate than outside nations, and that the churches, since 1858, do far more than keep pace with the growth of the human race. "A hundred years ago, in all the non-Christian world of 570,000,000, there were not 300 evangelical converts; now there are 3,000,000." South American missions at present offer a very difficult field for evangelistic work; but in Chili the cause is hopeful. In Turkey and Persia, missionary work is prosecuted with vigor and success. The general results recorded have been, of course, attained through methods which are now being revised and amended, and thus do not afford accurate data in forecasting the future. When we reflect upon the new ideas and the greater desire for co-operative mission work which have been infused into missionary effort since the recent Conference in London, we may well anticipate much more glorious results in the near future. Medical science, and improved railway and telegraphic communication, are now being pressed into the service with far greater speed and effect; and they will lend wings to the consecrated zeal which has renewed Christian missionary effort throughout the world. We may expect to see more progress made before the close of the present century than has been made since the century began.—Christian Guardian.

The Itinerant System.

At the last session of our Conference our beloved pastor was returned to us for another year, to our great joy. But the death of one of our preachers caused a readjustment of forces, and our pastor was moved, which we regretted very much, as he had greatly endeared himself to us by his godly walk among us, and by his earnest, successful work for the Master. But our new pastor came, and was cordially received and liberally pounded; and everything is moving nicely and smoothly along.

The day our new pastor came a brother, who belongs to a church that calls their preachers, asked, "Who is that?" One of our members replied, "That's our new preacher, Bro. A." "I thought Bro. B. was sent back," said Bro. Caller. "He was, but Dr. T. died, and so the Bishop moved Bro. B. and sent us Bro. A." "Well," said Mr. Caller, "I didn't know the Bishop could move a preacher after Conference adjourned." "Yes," replied Bro. Methodist, "the Bishop can move them when necessary." "Well," said Mr. Caller, "we don't have Bishops, and don't have to take preachers whom we do not want."

Now, to my certain knowledge, during the past seven years Mr. Caller's church has been without a supply about one-third of the time, and has not had a pastor in six years; and the latter part of the last supply's time the relation between the supply and Mr. Caller's church was very unpleasant. Mr. Caller's church has been without even a supply about four months, and is likely to remain so for some time. A church (of the same denomination as Mr. Caller's) in our town has not had even a supply in sixteen months, and has no prospect of having one soon. Thank God for the Methodist system!

"Junior" on Reading.

Will the editor please to give my hearty thanks to my young friend, "Junior," whoever he is, for his timely remarks on this subject in your paper of January 31. Nothing is more true and not many more important than his caricature of our ordinary pulpit reading. I suppose he intended to apply it to pulpit reading chiefly; at least, I do. Five-sixths of it, as I hear it, is absolutely ridiculous. But I do not agree so readily with my young friend as to this being "astonishing." Reading can be neither taught nor acquired after adult years are well set in, and none of our schools or colleges ever pretend to teach correct reading. I think this may be said with safety because, first, with some little experience with the world, I never saw or heard of such a thing; and, secondly, if such a thing had been done anywhere about, the secret would most likely get out. If anybody should hear anybody read a hymn or chapter pretty well, the news would fly, and most of us would be likely to hear of it.

Now, this is not intended for exaggeration, but for sober talking. The truth is, not one in a thousand of us ever heard any good reading, and, of course, we have no appreciation of it. Theatre men are almost the only men I know of who learn to read. And then comes up the old saying: "You read truth as though it were fiction; I read fiction as though it were truth."

Though a man who did not learn to read when young can not expect to attain to anything like good reading, it is probable that any middle-age man who will try studiously might improve greatly. But the truth is, it is seldom one tries to read. The age in which we live does not appreciate good reading. It is not insisted on—indeed, it is not expected. Mumbling satisfies a morbid public taste.

Mallit was among the best readers of Scripture I have heard. Hammet, apostate as he was, was among the best; so was Alexander Campbell. J. Cross was one of the best readers. Reading is a wonderful power and a great accomplishment.

R. ABBEY.

To-Morrow.

To-morrow! To-morrow!—what will it bring forth? How many plans are laid for the coming day? Alas! how many hopes will be blasted. How thick and dark the veil that hangs between this day and the coming dawn! To-morrow will bring a joy or grief before unknown. It will rekindle the fires of ambition or quench the flame forever. Oh! the painful uncertainty of the coming day, or if it is coming at all to many in this world. To-morrow, if it comes, will be the anniversary of some great event of life—a birth, a marriage or a death; the recurrence of the natal day, the nuptial scene, or that mournful day when the death-angel came and took away the idol of the household—my aged mother, my venerated father, my precious child, or rudely tore from love's embrace one-half of my very self—my precious wife. To-morrow will be the anniversary of some one of these to millions of our race. Thus I muse to-night upon the eve of my own natal day. To-morrow (God willing) I reach my sixty-seventh year. Fifty years ago, in October, last, I gave my heart and life to him who gave himself for me. Fifty years ago, in May, next, wife and I were married; the 26th of September, next, will be the semi-centennial of my ministerial life. Forty-six of these years I spent in the traveling ministry. Winans, Drake, Lane, Campbell, Green M. Rogers, J. G. Jones, Preston Cooper—all these were in their prime when I joined the Mississippi Conference. These and a host of others have all "passed over the river." Clinton, Pipkin, Marshall—oh how many of the loved and honored have passed away! Thank God for his mercy to me! I want to be a traveling Methodist preacher, but can not. The fault is not mine, God is my witness. But I endure, hope, pray, and while I toil every day for food and raiment, I try to do all the good I can. There is not a day that God does not answer my prayer in some way, and provides for the wants of those dependent upon me. I love the church; I am at peace in my heart with all men. If I have ever grieved or wronged any man intentionally, I can not recall it, but beg to be forgiven if I have. I have received scores and hundreds into the church, many of whom "died well," and are in heaven now. I know that "my Redeemer liveth," and if faithful yet a little while, "I shall see him as he is."

H. J. HARRIS.

A Mistaken Notion.

A very prevalent notion among church goers is the apprehension that words of deserved commendation spoken to a pastor or preacher respecting his sermons or work will unduly inflate him, render him conceited and tend in some way to his injury. Such a notion is a gratuitous assumption, and deserves castigation. Preachers are human, and very often need the sympathy and encouragement which a word fitly or timely spoken regarding their sermons or work would convey to them. Because such words are not spoken many a pastor labors on in utter discouragement for years, and with a crushed spirit is brought at last to resign his charge, while all the time many in his congregation have choked the utterances that often welled up from their hearts in thankfulness for the good his words had done their souls and for the comfort his kindly thoughtfulness had often brought to their lives. A pastor when treated thus never knows when he pleases his people. No true pastor thirsts for praise when it is not deserved. But when it is deserved, when the hearer feels that a sermon has been to him a blessed means of grace, or when he knows it has gone home as a warning, or as a comfort to some soul, then it is his duty to hear the message to his pastor as a word of encouragement and of support to him who is often burdened with the neglect of his hearers in this respect. On such occasions take your pastor by the hand and, with a warm grasp, say to him at least, "God bless you for that sermon." Your neglecting to do so is killing your pastor.—Treasury.

From a Prominent Minister.

I am fifty-five years of age.

Half of my life I have been a sufferer from a disordered liver, and the last three years a victim of that dread disease, consumption; was reduced to eighty-seven pounds, a mere skeleton, helpless, pronounced beyond recovery by my physicians, and given up to die by friends. In order to gratify my loving wife, I began taking Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, which is a cure for consumption, and to-day I am healthy, and able to indulge myself in preaching the gospel from the sacred desk. RUFUS FIGH,

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, July 12, 1888.

Dr. R. M. Davis, County Line, Miss., reports having cured a cancer of long standing that years of the most skillful medical practice had failed to benefit at all. Besides, we have numerous assurances of cures effected in Asthma, Bilious Colic, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Diphtheria, and Malarial Fever.

Rev. W. A. Mason, pastor of the Baptist Church, Crystal Springs, Miss., writes under date of July 2nd:

At your request, I will say that for about eight years I have been suffering with a sore on the back of my neck which was caused by the rubbing of a mule by my shirt collar. It gradually spread till larger than a quarter-dollar. About six weeks ago, I commenced the use of Microbe Killer. From the very beginning I felt an improvement, and it has gone on steadily till now; though I have been very irregular in taking the remedy. I am satisfied that directions closely followed would effect a speedy permanent cure.

W. A. MASON.

I gladly testify that, after suffering with a severe case of malarial fever, I tried Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, and am now perfectly well. I strongly recommend it to suffering humanity.

I cheerfully recommend Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer as being more than is claimed for it.

To Itself in many important particulars, Hood's Sarsaparilla is different from and superior to any other medicine.

Peculiar in combination, proportion and preparation of ingredients, Hood's Sarsaparilla possesses the full curative value of the best known remedies of the vegetable kingdom.

Peculiar in its medicinal merit, Hood's Sarsaparilla accomplishes cures hitherto unknown.

Peculiar in strength and economy—Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only medicine of which can truly be said, "100 doses one dollar." Medicines in larger and smaller bottles require larger doses, and do not produce as good results as Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Peculiar in its "good name at home"—there is more of Hood's Sarsaparilla sold in Lowell, where it is made, than of all other blood purifiers.

Briefs.

A young brother in his second year, in a private note, says: "I am pushing the ADVOCATE into as many families as I can. I find that it helps me as well as others." Strange that older preachers have not yet found that out!

The Capitolian Advocate, of Baton Rouge, has given some interesting figures in regard to "literacy and illiteracy" in Louisiana. In 1880 the total number of "illiterates," white and black, was 93,000; the total in 1888 was 126,938. In the meantime there has been an increase of population that brings the percentage of illiteracy from 53.61 in 1880 to 50.80 in 1888. This shows improvement, but it is a woful thing that one-half of our adult population are classed as "illiterates." We believe, however, that more is being done now, and more success is being achieved on this line than in the years past.

As some of our readers would like to know the amount of business done in a great post-office, we present this:

The total number of pieces of mail matter handled by the New York Postoffice during the year was 808,375,808, a daily average of 2,457,969. The general office issued and paid 1,095,915 money orders, amounting to $10,230,893, and 783,872 postal notes, amounting to $1,263,378. At the sixteen branches 220,141 money orders were issued and paid, amounting to $3,250,961, and 88,511 postal notes, amounting to $174,476. The total business of the department was $87,299,158, an increase over the preceding year of $4,788,347. The receipts of the office amounted to $5,162,968, and the expenditures, including $802,017 for free delivery services, to $1,891,982, leaving a net revenue of $3,270,986.

The Pope has been examining the accounts of his income and expenditure for the year 1888. Here are some of the figures:

From St. Peter's Pence he received £300,000; from interest of capital invested abroad, £100,000; from alms and other sources, £20,000; making a total income of £500,000, to which must be added about £80,000 received during the Jubilee. The expenses of the Vatican during the year include: Alms, £12,000; sums for the propaganda, £20,000; sums for the diplomatic service, £20,000; sums for missions, £40,000; administrative expenses, £40,000; maintenance of apostolic palaces, £20,000; pay of the cardinals, £80,000; maintenance of seminaries, £90,000. The total expenditure is £339,200, which leaves a surplus of not much less than a quarter of a million sterling.

From the Interior:

Spurgeon tells about certain men coming under his notice "who opened their mouths like a barn door in boasting of what they would do if they were in somebody else's place." Perhaps, every person who reads this paragraph has heard similar boasting at some time. But suppose we all turn our attention from the open boasting of others, which may have offended our ears, to the silent thinking of the same stamp, of which we are repeatedly guilty. How often have we sat in judgment on some brother and his opportunities, and have flattered ourselves with thinking what we might or would do if equally privileged and blest. Meanwhile, the privileges actually in our possession were going to waste, and we forgot to be thankful for such measure of blessing as was ours. Something is the matter with our spiritual eyesight, when our own field of effort seems to us so narrow and rocky, while all the tracts over the fence are far-reaching and exceedingly fertile.

Thoughts on Preaching.

We have said that the preacher must be called of God and qualified by the Holy Spirit, and, further, that he must do deep thinking along the lines of gospel facts and truths, and then study to acquire a clear and simple style in which to present the results of his thinking. When he comes to this point, we are ready to conclude that such an one is well equipped for his work; that his armory is well stocked with weapons. Just here a question comes which has bothered us no little in the past, and one which we have submitted to several older ministers without getting a satisfactory answer. We state it in this way: There are in the pulpit to-day brainy men—men of most extensive acquirements, men of superior endowments, men whose intellectual power is evident, and whose piety can not be questioned—and yet the results of their pulpit work are few and feeble in proportion to their equipment! Why is this? The more frequent answer to this question has been about this: "The preacher's business is to preach; the results of his preaching belong to God." This answer does not answer; in fact, we have come to believe that it is an absurdity. We have come to the conclusion that when God calls a man to preach the gospel he intends him to be a successful winner of souls. We do not believe that God calls a man to be a failure in the most responsible position in which a man ever stood. To attribute our failure in preaching successfully to God's will contradicts the divine call to the ministry. To regard our failure with a sort of reverential submission that places it among the inscrutable providences is a reflection upon the divine sincerity in giving the call to preach. Hence we think it is high time for us to cease to lay the blame for our failures upon God, and we ought to repent of such a reproach upon the divine love.

The question is, Why does preaching on the great facts and sublime truths of the gospel ever fail? Given the call of God and the possession of the Holy Spirit and an open revelation, how can we account for failures in preaching? The only answer, it seems to us, is, that the facts and truths of revelation are not known in the right way. The Holy Spirit stands by every preacher's side, pledged by his own immutable word to make the proclamations of the truth effective in saving the souls of men; but he uses the human instrument to produce this effectiveness. Truth is always and everywhere authoritative; but this attribute of the truth is not perceived nor felt by hearers until, like a master passion, it sways the mind and heart and voice and manner of the speaker. The preacher must realize in every fiber of his spiritual and mental nature the authority of the truth which he preaches. His whole being must be thrilled with the awfulness of this authority, and tremble under the weight of its divine majesty and power. The man called of God to preach the gospel must get as near the center of truth as it is possible for a feeble mortal to come. This puts him in connection with God, the Author of the truth, and in sympathy with men, for whose salvation the truth has been revealed. Standing at that point, in perfect faith in the truth and its power to convict and save, the Holy Spirit makes him master of the situation by sending his own divine energy along with the Word proclaimed.

The great thing is to get to this point. Now, the preacher must come into possession of the truth in a certain way, because he wants it for definite purpose. There are different ways of knowing truth. There is nothing so important as to know how to know a thing. The preacher, being called of God for a definite work, must know how to know the facts and truths of the gospel, because his success depends upon his use of those facts and truths. If he does not know them in the right way, he may "discourse" about them, but he can not "preach" them. It is a mistake to suppose that a preacher must learn gospel facts and truths as he learns other facts and truths. If we adopt that view and learn them in that way, we may become scientific professors of theology, but we will not be preachers of the gospel. As far as the professor is concerned, that may be the way for him; but the proclaimer of divine truth must learn the truth after a different method. A scientific knowledge is a stately, orderly, logical sort of thing, but it is entirely unsympathetic. A botanist knows all about a flower, and is an expert in describing it, but his knowledge of it is very different from that of the gardener who nourishes and cherishes it as a loved companion. One is scientific knowledge; the other is sympathetic knowledge. One is mind knowledge; the other is heart knowledge. This last is the knowledge of God's truth that the preacher must have—a sympathetic, heart knowledge. When the preacher, by deep study of God's Word, has put the truth into his mind, he must then learn the process of passing it out of his mind into his heart, so that the truth shall become a part of his own experience. The transfer of knowledge from the mind to the heart is effected through the instrumentality of faith. When we believe the truth, in the Scripture sense of belief, that faith brings the truth into our souls in power proportioned to the intensity of our convictions. Everybody knows that there is an intimate connection between faith and speech. Paul quoted from the Psalmist, and gave the quotation a new emphasis when he said: "We believe, and, therefore, speak." An implicit, undoubting faith in the truth brings the truth into the heart; and God's love fuses it, and it flows through the whole spiritual nature, and becomes an inseparable part of the experiences of the soul. We think it is here that the Holy Spirit concentrates his tremendous power and holds it in readiness for the use of every man called of God to preach the gospel. What the ministry needs to-day is not more knowledge of the truth, for that knowledge is more general among ministers than ever. The great, pressing need of the pulpit is, more faith in the truth. We need a transference of the truth from the intellect to the awakened consciousness that shall make it a felt experience of the life. We need that sort of faith that will concrete our doctrines into glowing facts of the heart; that power of conviction that will bring the grand old truths of the gospel into our souls. We need that faith which absolutely knows that "the sword of the Spirit is sharper than any two-edged sword" of man's make; that faith which renders us absolutely certain that we are proclaiming God's truth; that faith in the truth which will marshal all our intellectual powers and spiritual forces, all our acquirements and endowments, and place them under the leadership of the Holy Spirit, that he may hurl them with all his infinite energy against the lines of the enemy.

What we mean, brethren, is simply this: If a preacher sees the necessity of preaching on regeneration, let him not preach the memories of an experience that is ten or twenty years old, but let him, by prayer and faith, get a fresh experience, and go before the people with the new life throbbing mightily in his soul, and the Holy Spirit will give a tongue of flame and words of power. And so of every other subject, let us get it in our hearts, and then we shall have God's ordination for our work.

Look on the Things of Others.

We are very apt to be selfish in our religion. Taking advantage of this tendency, Satan often succeeds in drawing us a long way from our true position. The church is apt to think too much of her condition, and thus forget the condition of the world "lying in wickedness." The Alabama Advocate, last week, had a short, but ringing editorial, on "Sin in Unbelievers," which we reproduce. It will bear the meditations and prayers of Methodists in Mississippi and Louisiana as well as those of Alabama.

Let us now turn our attention from the discussion of "sin in believers" to sin in unbelievers, and see if we can not find a subject upon which we can all agree.

In discussing this question, we must stick to the text, unbelievers, and not raise a quarrel over the cradle, and get off into Pelagianism. As to whether infants are born depraved or not is another question; we believe, however, that they are, for there is no other way of accounting for the thousands of unbelievers now in the world, and many of them totally indifferent to the love of the Savior and the efforts of the church to save them.

Look at the wild sea of human passion lashed into still greater fury by the demoniacal purposes of bad men—men who are far removed from the restraints of the gospel.

Look at the criminal reclining behind the bars of his prison cell with his hands crimsoned with the blood of his own offspring, while in his guilty conscience the death agonies of a murdered wife still echo.

Look at society, rotting in the very topmost branches, while attempting to render a german the highest expression of social enjoyment.

Look at the gambler as he throws his last dice, or stakes his last dollar on a game of chance.

Look at the saloon keeper, with a miserable and besotted herd of human beings around him, among whom he is the most guilty, if not the most miserable.

Look at the cities in Alabama where sin is organized, compacted and solidified; where virtue is sold in the market-places, and where moral filth reeks in the alleys without moral drainage.

My brethren of the ministry, look calmly at the work briefly mapped out before you, and then tell us if the question of sin in unbelievers does not engage your thought, tax your best energies and call for your mightiest efforts.

May the Lord honor the ministry of our church this year by holding every man steadfastly to the one work of rescuing perishing sinners.

Centenary College.

MR. EDITOR: The friends of Centenary College will be glad of a good word concerning that noble enterprise for Christian education. Just now there is a great spiritual work going on amongst the students. The movement seems to be the outgrowth of daily godly living on the part of the Christian young men in the college; not of any extraordinary efforts, or of special services by the pastor and church. I quote what one of the instructors has written to me, without ever dreaming that it would get into print. He says: "Yesterday (January 20) proved to be an ugly day—wet, muddy, and cloudy. Yet it was a day never to be forgotten. In the morning we had a good attendance at Sunday-school and service, and Bro. —— gave us a good sermon from the text, 'Where art thou?' carrying the idea of locality into character. He gave us another good sermon at night. But it is of the Young Men's Christian Association meeting that I will speak more fully. After dinner, Sunday, I read awhile, and was thinking of spending the afternoon in that way, instead of going to the Young Men's Christian Association, as it was so disagreeable out of doors. But I went, and was thankful for it. After one of the members made a talk on 'Work and Its Results,' all were called on to speak as they wished. Nearly everyone in the room said something, and nearly everyone was happy beyond expression. * * * A number of inactive members became active. I do wish you could have been with us. After the meeting Will L—— announced that there would be a prayer meeting in his room after service at night; and such a meeting I never have seen. I can not take time to tell you of it now. A large number of students were present; several were converted; a number prayed who had not before, and nearly every Christian gave some of his experience. P. B—— got up and said he could not keep out of the pulpit. * * * Sunday before last, at a similar meeting, five or six were converted. Next Sunday the meeting will be held in the other dormitory, and we look for great results."

Writing to me a week later, he says: "We had another glorious time. Two more were converted, and the attendance so increased that we will meet in the Young Men's Christian Association Hall hereafter. The work is reaching out into the town, and the great result is yet to be seen."

Who will not rejoice that the spiritual life of these young men grows apace with the intellectual training and culture; that here is a true nursery for the sons of our homes, where they shall be trained, full and strong, for the great work needed of them in Church and State? What parent will hesitate to seek such a school for his son? Let the people of our church be glad for Centenary, and come forth with liberal hands to enlarge her power for good by making her endowment complete and filling her halls with these precious young men.

A FRIEND.

The Ballot Reform.

This question is undoubtedly at the front to-day. In a government constituted like ours no subject is of more importance than the purity of the ballot, because the government is by the people through the ballot. Many plans have been proposed to secure so desirable an end, and yet none have been adopted that has brought about the object sought. At the present time what is known as the "Australian method" is engaging the thought of a good many people. A modification of this system, known as the Saxton Bill, has been introduced into the New York Legislature. That our readers may have some idea of the features of this bill, we quote from the Voice:

The Saxton Bill, as it now stands, is an honest attempt to purify the ballot. It proposes that the ballots used shall be printed at public expense, and shall contain the names of all the duly constituted candidates of all parties; that the voter shall prepare his ballot in secret, and deposit it without showing it to any person, under a heavy penalty. Such a law would be an indirect solution of the question of illiterate voting, since every voter must know enough to make out his own ballot, or run his own risk of making a mistake, for he can receive assistance, or have another person present only by making oath that he is unable, by reason of some physical disability, to mark his ballot. The law should pass, and similar laws should be enacted in other States.

The London Times is said to pay its correspondents in the cities of the continent salaries varying from $1,250 to $16,000 annually, this branch alone of its service costing the journal nearly $150,000 a year.

Notes.

A good brother, in our office the other day, discoursing on various matters, among other things said, that his faith in the millennium was completely upset when he got into "district stewards' meeting."

A man, recently deceased in San Diego, Cal., left $5,000 to found a university in New Hampshire. The money is to be put at interest for years, when there will be several millions available for the university scheme. What a far-reaching man that was! There is provision that the university shall be full-fledged, besides having parks, drives, fountains and other adornments. It is to be conducted on the co-education plan. What a fortunate town Derry will be 150 years from now!

Here is something for husbands to think of:

Ella Wheeler Wilcox says that if she were asked to define the meaning of successful man she would say, "a man who has made a happy home for his wife and children. No matter what he has not done in the way of achieving wealth or honors; if he has done that, he is a grand success. If he has not done that, and it is his own fault though he be the highest in the land, he is a most pitiable failure. I wonder how many men in the mad pursuit for gold, which characterizes the age, realize that there is no fortune which can be left their families so precious as the memory of a happy home."

The Southwestern Methodist, in a note concerning the question discussed in the Evangelical Alliance of Kansas City, "How shall we reach the masses?" goes directly to the point by saying: "What we most need is not new methods, but increased zeal and faith in working by the old methods. Christ reached the "masses;" and if we will do as he did, we will reach them too. He reached them by hunting them up and doing them good, and when we cease discussing the question and go to work, as he has shown us, we will reach all the "masses," "there are!"

Again we respectfully ask the pastors to send us short and crisp notes of what their churches are doing. We want as many such each week as we can get. We want to let the world know what the Lord is doing through the churches for the people. There is nothing that pays so well as advertising. Hear what Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, one of the foremost Wesleyan ministers in England, says:

No church in England has suffered so much as we have suffered, as a church, by our neglect to avail ourselves of the advantages of modern journalism. When shall we have as much sense about these things as they have in the Salvation Army? We have quite as much sense; but it is latent. Look at our newspapers, they are full of what the devil is doing, and what I want to see is the newspapers filled with what Jesus Christ is doing. The papers say that the churches are decaying. It is a complete delusion; only we don't take the trouble to get ourselves well advertised, as the theatres do. You must be talked about nowadays if you want to do anything. And if we can defeat the devil anywhere it is highly desirable that every Methodist, and everybody besides, should hear of it. Some Methodists appear to be suffering from what they call modesty; but I am prepared to argue as a theologian that true modesty consists in taking a front seat. (Applause.) Why this apologetic air? No man need ever be ashamed of being a Methodist. It is about the only thing, perhaps, that will be remembered to the credit of some of us when we are gone.

One has said of the preacher's work:

He has to enter into the varied wants of a thousand, all different, and all needing to be helped, not a few of them unable to think much, who must be interested if they are going to be profited: old folks with aches and loneliness who need to be comforted wisely; busy men, hardened with anxieties, who need to be strengthened: young folks with their eagerness and enthusiasm ready to be caught and claimed for the Lord Jesus Christ, if only the minister can do it; little children who can be made to feel the beauty and loveliness of the Savior; hardened sinners to be moved; Pharisees to be stormed at; penitents to be bent over and brought to the Savior—and all that in a service of an hour and a-half—much of it by means of a sermon lasting from thirty to forty minutes, and in much danger of undoing it all if it be much longer.

Reader, look into your pastor's face and see the request of his soul, "Pray for me," written in agony on his countenance.

The same writer asks this question:

How can a preacher combine the sturdy sense which hard-headed men accept, the instruction which cultured people demand, the sweet simplicity which little children love to listen to, the gracious tenderness which beams on men like the shadow of the apostle in olden time, the spiritual power which brings into living contact with the Father of spirits—and yet to keep the fires of our indignation burning and ready when need be to burst forth like a volcano slumbering beneath the terraced vineyards and the flowered slopes! Who is sufficient for these things? Certainly, no man. And yet lacking these, who can be a successful minister of the Lord Jesus Christ?

Reader, above all others, your pastor needs your most earnest prayers!

Personals.

There is a saying of Ben Franklin which we commend to some of our contributors. He said: "I owe my first success to a good handwriting." Let it be remembered that from that time onward Franklin was always a success. Hoc fabula docet, etc.

The last number of the Methodist Times, London, contained eight obituaries, and all printed in fifteen lines! Can't our obituary writers condense somewhat after that style? Unless in some exceptional case, why should there be more than the simple announcement of death?

The Texas Advocate and the Arkansas Methodist have broached the plan of giving "death notices" instead of "obituaries." We suppose the plan is that followed by the daily papers.

Jacob Tome, of Port Deposit, Md., who is said to be worth over $5,000,000, has decided to establish a seminary at Port Deposit for boys and girls between the ages of ten and eighteen years. Besides the usual studies, a manual training-school will be included in the discretion of the trustees, telegraphy, shorthand writing, typewriting, cooking, sewing, etc. The school will be free, and children of Port Deposit and Cecil county will be preferred above others.

Sam Jones began a meeting in Sacramento City, last Sunday, and will be in San Francisco, March 3.

If the preachers will remember that in preaching they sometimes get "in the brush," and that some of their hearers find it out, it will prepare them to appreciate the fact that an editor also sometimes does likewise. Verbum sap.

A London publisher has said that the best advertisement a book can have is, "a review by Mr. Gladstone." That shows the world's appreciation of Mr. Gladstone's literary abilities.

Dr. Barbee is calling for the outstanding bonds of the Publishing House. He says: "Every bond will be redeemed at full face value." He wants to report at the May meeting that every dollar of the old debt is paid. If you hold any of them, send them forward to Nashville and get your money.

Rev. G. W. Gordon, pastor, cleared the decks at Carrollton, Miss., Sunday, February 10. The assessments on Carrollton and Greenwood station aggregate $255—$127 50 to each place. Carrollton paid $203 65, and more will follow. And Greenwood will pay more than her part of the assessments.

The Minutes of the Louisiana Conference made their appearance last Monday. We are indebted to Secretary Sawyer for copies.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. T. B. White writes from Mansfield: "Mansfield Female College, under the leadership of Pres. A. D. McVoy, Sr., is moving out on its high plane of work—Christian education. The institution is having a healthy, vigorous growth. Corps of instructors and instructresses full and capable (all Methodists); discipline, good; many of the girls, pious and promise much good work for the church in their peculiar sphere. About twenty-five boarders and others coming. Our beloved Bro. McVoy and his excellent family are happily domiciled in the college. Our church work moving on pleasantly, hopefully. We have all the machinery; not much friction. We need that strange, subtile factor—power—'power from on high.' Christian education in our schools, and Christian consecration in pulpit and pew, is our ambition."

—Rev. J. E. Riddle writes from Waterproof, La.: "We are getting on reasonably well with our work in this charge. I trust this may be a gracious year with us here. May the Lord bless you and Bro. Grant abundantly in your glorious newspaper work! Many of my people read it, and say it is a most excellent church paper. Its columns and pages are so clean and pure."

—Rev. B. F. White writes from Alexandria, La.: "The Conference year opens propitiously for Alexandria charge. We have nine accessions for January; good congregations, and a growing Sabbath-school; financial outlook much improved. Our high school is growing in every good way. To God we look for success; to him be the praise."

—Rev. G. W. Bachman writes from Kosciusko, Miss., February 9: "During the past month I have visited West Walden, Winona, Grenada, Courtland and Water Valley pastoral charges. Preached seven sermons; talked to the Sunday-schools; sold nearly $200 worth of books, and secured a goodly number of subscriptions for the church papers. Presiding elders and pastors are in place and at work all along the line. Dr. Wheat, the new presiding elder on the Winona district, is making a fine impression. Bro. Tucker, the new preacher of Kosciusko and Durant, is giving full satisfaction. Other preachers, so far as I know, are well received, and are hopeful in their work. Bro. and Sister Tucker have the sympathy of their many friends in the illness of their baby boy. We hope that he will soon be well. Many preachers and others will hear with sorrow of the sad death of Sister Martha Flippin, a faithful and long-time member of our church at Duck Hill. Her clothes accidentally caught on fire, and she was so severely burned that she died in a few hours. This distressing event occurred January 27. 'The righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance.' May we all be ready for the summons whensoever or howsoever it may come!"

Books and Periodicals.

BOOKS.

HIS TWO WIVES. By Mary Clemmer. Ticknor Paper Series. Ticknor and Company, Boston. George F. Wharton, 5 Carondelet street, New Orleans. Price, fifty cents.

Mary Clemmer was for a number of years the "Washington correspondent" of the Independent, and in that position won quite a name. In His Two Wives she has shown fine powers of character drawing and great skill in description. She had good natural endowments and would, doubtless, have taken a front place among the leading writers of the day, had she concentrated her efforts upon the more permanent forms of literature.

WOMEN OF THE BIBLE. By Leigh Norval. Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Sunday-school Department, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $1.

This is a book of short sketches of all the prominent female characters in the Old and New Testaments. It is written for the young people of the Sunday-schools, and the writer evidently shows a straining after simplicity of style without attaining it. A strained style is always bad. The main facts of the lives of Bible women are given, and some doubtful facts are also given. If the illustrations had been omitted, it would have been better, for they are simply absurd. The grammar of the author is quite faulty, and the rhetoric mixes its figures in a wonderful manner. Taking it altogether, we think the magnificent subject of this book should have been better handled even for children.

THE NUN OF KENMARE: an Autobiography. Ticknor and Company, Boston. George F. Wharton, 5 Carondelet St., New Orleans. Price, $1 50.

"The Nun of Kenmare" is the name by which Sister Mary Frances Cusack is generally known. She is an accomplished Englishwoman, who was reared in the faith of the Church of England. Through the advice of Dr. Pusey, she entered an Anglican sisterhood in London. Finally, influences led her from this to the Roman communion, and she was confirmed by Cardinal Wiseman. As a "Sister of the Poor Clares" of Ireland, her efforts in behalf of the poor and starving peasants of Ireland made her name known throughout the Emerald Isle. It was here her first troubles began with her ecclesiastical superiors—the dissensions ending for the time being by her leaving the convent and coming to America in 1880. In America even, she claims, her usefulness has been interfered with by the persecutions and tyranny of the Catholic Church. Her book claims to give an inside view of the workings of the abuse of authority in the Catholic Church. It shows that the Roman Church does not practice justice in dealing with its members, and that its Bishops can be revengeful to an extreme degree and even disobedient to the Pope. The book is a prolonged and reiterated statement of personal grievances, and, like all such personal matters, there is in it reiteration and repetition very wearisome to an ordinary reader.

PERIODICALS.

—The Studio is a journal devoted to the fine arts. It has illustrations of works of art and articles about art and artists, and is published by the Studio Publishing Company, New York. Price, twenty-five cents a number.

—The Book-Buyer, for February, opens with a portrait and sketch of Wilkie Collins; then follow Literary Topics in Boston, by Arlo Bates; English Notes, by J. Ashby-Sterry; Portrait and Sketch of Olive Schreiner, the author of the African Farm; then follows an extensive catalogue of the newest books; and then some Readings from New Books. The Literary Querist, edited by Rossiter Johnson, is a fine feature of this monthly. Book-buyers will find this a valuable periodical. Charles Scribner's Sons, New York. Price, $1.

—Musical Herald, for February. This is a progressive, independent and entertaining journal of music. It keeps the reader informed about music composers and their works, and its monthly chat about musical matters in general is highly entertaining even to non-musical readers. We frequently find in it admirable articles on church music. Franklin Square, Boston. Price, $1.

—Book News, for February. This is a monthly published by John Wanamaker, Philadelphia, for fifty cents a year. It is a publication giving early and accurate information concerning new books and articles of special interest to readers, authors and publishers. One fine part of this monthly is its publication of short reviews of new books by the best critics of the day. Every lover of literature will find this periodical as valuable as anything of its kind that has yet been produced.

—Outing, for February, has a second paper on American College Athletics, by R. M. Hurd; A Russian Wolf Hunt, by Tom Bolton; Third Paper on Outdoor Life of the Presidents; Andrew Jackson, by John P. Foley; A Canadian Farm in Midwinter, by W. B. Harte; Across Wyoming on Horseback, by L. P. Rolde, and other papers. To persons fond of outdoor sports this is an interesting magazine. The Outing Company, New York. Price, $3.

Literary Notes.

The great Century Dictionary, which has been in a course of preparation for seven years, is approaching completion, and it is expected that the first sections of the whole book, which is to consist, all told, of about 6,500 pages, will be issued within a few months. Probably no work of greater magnitude or importance has been put forth by an American house. The editor-in-chief, Prof. William Dwight Whitney, of Yale University, who is perhaps the highest authority in philology in both America and England, has been assisted by nearly fifty experts, college professors and others, each a recognized authority in his own specialty—the design of the dictionary being to make it complete and authoritative in every branch of literature, science and the arts. It is intended that the botanist shall find in the Century Dictionary full definitions of terms in his special line of study; that the civil engineer and the architect can turn to it for the definitions (usually with plans and pictures) of the terms in their own specialties. And so with every other pursuit or profession—law, music, medicine chemistry, anatomy, archæology, zoology, mineralogy, theology, etc. Each expert is reading the proofs of the entire work; indeed the proofs are read by more than sixty people. For seven years not fewer than a hundred persons, and sometimes more, have been working upon this dictionary. Trained readers have been searching the fields of English literature for words and uses of words and quotations. Over two thousand authors will be quoted, and it is understood that American books, and even the current literature of the magazines, have been liberally drawn upon. There will be about six thousand cuts in the text, the subjects of which have usually been chosen by the experts in charge of the special departments. They have been drawn, whenever possible, from the object itself.

G. P. Putnam's Sons announce, among their earlier publications for 1889, the first volumes of the letter-press edition of "The Writings of Washington," edited by Worthington C. Ford. The edition, uniform with the previously published sets of "Hamilton" and "Franklin," is to be completed in fourteen volumes, and will be limited to 750 sets. The same firm are issuing a second edition, revised and enlarged, of "The Best Books: A Reader's Guide to the Choice of the Best Available Books in all Departments of Literature, down to 1888," with dates of the first and latest editions, and the prices, sizes and publishers' names. The work has been revised and enlarged by the author, William Swan Sonnenschein.

Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett usually writes in the morning from nine until one o'clock, and spends the afternoon in recreation. If, as rarely happens, she is in a writing mood and the ideas come readily, she works through the afternoon.

"Suggestive Therapeutics," a study of the nature and uses of hypnotism, by Prof. H. Bernheim, of the University of Nancy, translated under the authority of the author by Dr. Christian A. Herter, is in preparation for early publication by the Putnams.

The eight papers by W. C. Brownell having the general title of "French Traits," which have appeared in Scribner's Magazine and in the New Princeton Review, together with two new essays on French "Democracy" and "Morality," will be published in book form by the Scribners this month.

Mrs. Oliphant lives for the greater part of the year at Windsor, though she makes frequent visits to Scotland. Mrs. Oliphant's residence in Windsor has favored the formation of friendly relations with the Queen, of whom she is a great favorite. Her majesty, indeed, has every one of Mrs. Oliphant's books read aloud to her.

Publisher's Department.

Three Reasonable Requests.

1. Let every subscriber carefully read this issue of the ADVOCATE, and then show the paper to some neighbor who does not take it, and ask him to subscribe.

2. Let every minister arrange for a complete canvass of his circuit, so that every family of every Methodist congregation may have the paper offered to them. Where the minister can not do this personally, let him appoint some suitable person to do it.

3. Let the benefit and duty of subscribing for our church paper be mentioned in every congregation, and all reasonable efforts put forth to obtain new subscribers, and secure the renewal of old ones.

"Gentlemen of the jury," said an Irish barrister, "it will be for you to say whether this defendant shall be allowed to come into court with unblushing footsteps, with the cloak of hypocrisy in his mouth, and draw three bullocks out of my client's pocket with impunity."

Next to your subscription the greatest favor you can extend the ADVOCATE, in a business point, is to mention the paper in writing to advertisers.

"Is this a trunk line?" asked the summer girl at the railway station. "No," replied the ticket agent, "it is a branch." "Oh, I'm so sorry; for I wanted to take four trunks along with me!"

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

J. C. Morris Co. (Limited).

We call attention to the change of name in the above firm so long and favorably known as J. C. Morris. The change is only in name, as the firm is now conducted, as it has been for years, by the same corps of energetic business men who are worthy the confidence and patronage so liberally bestowed upon the firm. Mr E. P. Mackie, the treasurer of the firm, is one of our staunch Methodists, a member of Felicity Street Church, financial secretary of the Seashore Camp Ground, and an earnest worker. We commend him and the new-old firm to our readers. See the new advertisement on page 3 of this issue.

STOP AND THINK.

BY E. K. BEXFORD.

My boy, when they ask you to drink,
Stop and think!
Just think of the danger ahead,
Of the hearts that in sorrow have bled
O'er hopes that were drowned in the bowl,
Filled with death for the body and soul!

When you hear a man asking for drink,
Stop and think!
The draught that he drinks will destroy
High hopes and ambitions, my boy,
And the man who a leader might be
Is a slave that no man's hand can free.

O this terrible demon of drink!
Stop and think!
Of the graves where its victims are laid,
Of the ruin and woe it has made,
Of the wives and the mothers who pray
For the curse to be taken away!

Yes, when you are tempted to drink,
Stop and think
Of the danger that lurks in the bowl,
The death that it brings to the soul,
The harvest of sin and of woe,
And spurn back the tempter with "No!"

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to the ADVOCATE, I thought I would write. My papa takes the ADVOCATE, and I like to read it very much, especially the young folks' corner. Bro. M. H. Moore is our pastor this year. We all love him. He preaches for us once a month. I will answer Mabel Langford's question: What man mentioned in the Bible had six fingers on each hand and six toes on each foot? A man of great stature, mentioned in II. Samuel xxi, 20. Now I will ask one: Where in the Bible are we told that the remains of a dead body brought a dead person to life? With love and many good wishes to you and the dear old ADVOCATE, I will close. Your little friend,

HENRY D. ROBERTS.

GLOSTER, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: Please spare a little room in your valuable paper for one more little girl. I have no pets, except my little baby brother. I have two brothers and two sisters. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. I have a dear little friend that I think very much of. I am going to have this as a surprise for my sister, so I hope you will publish it. I am going to school now, and study word-book, grammar, geography, history, arithmetic. I am ten years old. Bro. Leech is our pastor. I will close by asking a question: Where is "gold" first found in the Bible? I hope to see my letter in print. I am, Yours forever,

BEULAH HINTON.

MT. PLEASANT, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy two years and a half old, so I get my mamma to write this for me. I want to tell you how much I love for mamma to read the letters in the children's corner to me. I enjoyed little I. W. Cooper's letter very much. I, too, have a kitty that I think is very smart. I named her Min Foster. I know all the alphabet—learned it in the Bible which mamma reads to me every day. I have a little cousin named Annie Groves, who has gone to Florida to live. I must say good-bye before my letter gets too long.

Your little friend,

MARION HOPE FOSTER.

OPELOUSAS, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I seat myself to write a few lines to the ADVOCATE, to join the little cousins. I have been a reader of your paper for a long while, and like it very well, and will like it much better if I see my letter in print, as this is my first attempt. I live in the prairie country, near Indian Bayou Church. Our pastor is Rev. R. Harry. For fear my letter will reach the waste-basket, I will close by asking a small question: Where in the Bible is the word "twelve" spoken twenty-three times in the same chapter? With many good wishes to you and the ADVOCATE. I am, Your true friend,

JAMES H. HOFFPAUIR.

LAFAYETTE PARISH, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: As I have not written to your paper, I will write. I have no pets, but I have a little twin-sister and one little brother. We go to Sunday-school every Sunday and to day-school every day. I study spelling, grammar, geography, analysis, history, arithmetic and mental arithmetic. In our school are about fifty-two pupils; there are two teachers. I am 11 years old; I live near the school-house. My sister does not know that I am going to write, so I hope you will publish it. I hope very much to see my letter in print.

One of your little cousins,

CALLIE SCRUGGS,

MT. PLEASANT, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little Methodist, too, and love to read the children's letters. I am eight years old. I belong to Grand Bayou Church. I love to attend church and Sabbath-school; but I am sorry to tell you that we don't have any Sunday-school. There are plenty of little folks, but the big folks won't unite in this grand work to build up God's kingdom, and enlighten the minds of the little people; the why's I am too young too say. We are glad that our preacher was sent back to us, Bro. May. I believe all the children love him. Little sister and I are going to school to Mr. Jeff Oglethorp. He's a good teacher. My studies are spelling, fourth reader, arithmetic and writing. I will close by asking the little cousins where in the Bible will "pulpit" be found? Hoping my first effort will not find its way into the waste-basket, I will close. Success to the dear ADVOCATE.

GUY WIMBERLY.

LOVE'S LAKE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: We are two little girls eleven years old. This is the first time we ever wrote, and so we hope you will publish it. We always want to see the dear old CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. I don't think we could spare it. Bro. Leech is our pastor. We have a very good Sunday-school and go nearly every Sunday. We hope this letter will not reach the waste-basket, as this is the first time. Good-bye! Wishing the ADVOCATE much success, we remain, Your little friends,

LUCY HINTON,
NANNIE SCRUGGS.

Funeral Rites

CURIOUS FACTS CONCERNING THEM.

The Mohammedans bury without a coffin of any kind.

The Greenlanders bury with a child a dog to guide it in the other world, saying. "A dog can find his way anywhere."

The music continuously kept up at the Irish wakes used to be for the purpose of warding off evil spirits.

The Russians place in the hand of the corpse a paper certificate of the character of the deceased, to be shown to Peter at the gate of heaven.

In India the devoted wife formerly ascended her husband's funeral pyre and perished in the flames.

The Australians tie the hands of the corpse and extract the finger-nails, that the dead may not scratch his way out of the grave.

The North American Indians buried with the corpse a kettle of provisions, bow and arrows and moccasins, with pieces of deerskin and sinews of deer, for the purpose of patching the moccasins.

The Chinese scatter paper counterfeits of money on the way to the grave, that the evil spirit following the corpse may by delaying to gather them, remain in ignorance of the locality of the grave. They also scatter in the wind, above the grave, paper images of the sedan-bearers and other servants, that they may overtake the soul and act in its service.

The Greeks sometimes buried and sometimes burned their dead.

In the Roman empire the body was invariably burned.

A GENTLEMAN.—I saw two gentlemen on a street car, lately. One of them was grown-up. He was handsomely dressed in a gray business suit, and had very neat kid gloves and fine boots. The other was about twelve years old. His jacket had several patches, and needed more, and his shirt was of brown cotton, and not very clean. Do you wonder how I knew he was a gentlemen? I will tell you.

The boy went through the car to give some message to the driver. As he returned he gave a little jump through the door, and as he did so, his bare foot touched the grown gentleman's knee, and left a little mud on it. Turning around on the platform, he raised his straw hat, and said, very politely, in a clear tone, "Please excuse me." Then the other gentleman bowed in his turn, just as he would have done to one of his own age, and said, with a pleasant smile, "Certainly."—Youth's World.

There is more experience, time and brainwork represented in the preparation of Hood's Sarsaparilla than in any other medicine. It is this which makes Hood's Sarsaparilla peculiar in its curative power, and in the remarkable cures it effects. Give it a trial.

Household.

HOME.

BY H. M. GOODWIN.

[Suggested by Sir William Jones' celebrated Ode, "What Constitutes a State?"]

What constitutes a home?
Not high-raised roof, stone front, or palace wall,
Square tower or rounded dome;
Not pillared porch, wide doors, or stately hall;
Not parlors richly dressed,
Where curtained light, streaming through perfumed air,
Fall from the crimson west
On sculptured vase, gilt walls and pictures rare;
Not terraced walks, or lawn,
Where elm-tree shadows mark the lingering hours,
And through the night till dawn
Moonlighted fountains fall in silver showers.
These can not make a home;
But love, that nestles in a steadfast bond,
Nor wishes e'er to roam;
Hope, through east windows looking far beyond
The narrow vale of time,
To the great mountains and the tideless shore;
Sweet memories that climb
And cluster fragrant round the open door,
Through which the blessed feet
Of loved ones gone have often passed before;
And winged fancies fleet
(Day dreams that young imagination weaves)
That lightly come and go,
Like twittering swallows underneath the eaves:
Joy that doth ever flow
From the clear fountain welling in the breast,
And maketh all things glow,
With radiance and celestial beauty dressed;
Calm trust in God and man;
Contentment sitting by its own fireside,
While winter's stormy van
Gathers the household group in circle wide.
Where old and young do meet
Around the evening lamp and social blaze,
And children's voices sweet
Blend in the symphony of love and praise.
These constitute a home,
However rude or humble be the cot;
All else is empty room—
A body garnished where the soul is not.

ALABASTER BOXES OF HUMAN SYMPATHY.—Do not keep the alabaster boxes of your love and tenderness sealed up until your friends are dead. Fill their lives with sweetness. Speak approving, cheering words, while their ears can hear them, and while their hearts can be thrilled and made happier by them; the kind things you mean to say when they are gone, say before they go. The flowers you mean to send for their coffins, send to brighten and sweeten their homes before they leave them. If my friends have alabaster boxes laid away, full of fragrant perfumes of sympathy and affection, which they intend to break over my dead body, I would rather they would bring them out in my weary and troubled hours, and open them, that I may be refreshed and cheered by them while I need them. I would rather have a plain coffin without a flower, a funeral without a eulogy, than a life without the sweetness of love and sympathy. Let us learn to anoint our friends beforehand for their burial. Post-mortem kindness does not cheer the burdened spirit. Flowers on the coffin cast no fragrance backward over the weary way.

HINTS FOR HUSBANDS.—When a man has once established a home, his most important duties have fairly begun. The errors of youth may be overlooked; want of purpose, and even of honor, in his early days, may be forgotten. But from the moment of his marriage he begins to write his indelible history; not by pen and ink, but by actions by which he must ever afterwards be judged. His conduct at home, his solicitude for his family, the training of his children, his devotion to his wife, his regards for the great interests of eternity—these are the tests by which his worth will ever afterwards be estimated by all who think or care anything about him. These will determine his position while living, and influence his memory when dead. He uses well or ill the brief space allotted to him out of eternity, to build up a fame founded upon the most solid of all foundations, private worth, and God will judge him, and man judge of him accordingly.—Words and Works.

MASON & HAMLIN

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the ORGANS $22 TO $1000. great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the PIANOS high excellence achieved GRAND & UPRIGHT by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "MASON & HAMLIN PIANO STRINGER," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity for standing in tune, and other important advantages.

REHER—About four o'clock, on January 1, 1889, Dr. WILLIAM REHER took his journey from earth to heaven, being in his eightieth year. He was born in Fairfield county, Ohio, May 20, 1809, and was thoroughly educated at the State University, which is located at Athens. During his junior-ity at school, a protracted meeting was inaugurated, and it resulted in his conversion. Subsequently he was taken into the Methodist Episcopal Church by Bro. Frazee in 1827. Immediately after his conversion (to use his own words): "I would retire to the banks of the flocking river in as secluded a place as I could find to have communion with my God in secret." After he completed his education he came to reconnoitre the State of Mississippi, especially Rankin county. In 1836 he returned to his native State, and on November 5, of the same year, was married to Miss Susan Houston, with whom he lived until his death. Immediately after his marriage he returned to Rankin county, Miss., in companionship with his wife, and boarded temporarily with a family near where Brandon, the shire-town, now stands. In 1838 he and his wife began housekeeping as the first settlers on the site of the present town of Brandon. Prior to this time no one stick of timber had been felled towards a settlement within the present corporate limits of Brandon. His occupation during the first years of his citizenship here was that of school-teaching, but subsequently he took up the study of medicine, attended lectures in Philadelphia, Pa., in 1854, 1855, afterwards entered into the regular practice and continued therein until a few years before his departure.

Very few husbands, indeed, who can claim what he and his wife claimed for him while he was lying on his death-bed, that during the fifty-two years of their married life he had not spoken an unkind word to her. It affords his children who survive him much pleasure to mention the kind attention and tender treatment that they received from him during their childhood and even since the attainment to manhood and womanhood. He had six children—four girls and two boys—all of whom are still living except one son, who died while quite young. The following are some of his last utterances concerning his children: "I always had hoped that Eugene would some day become a good Christian man and go along with Anna (his wife), who is a Christian. Lucy is a Christian; Ann is a good Christian woman; Winnie is a Christian and Jennie is a Christian. Bud (Eugene) I am glad to see is a changed man, but I want him to be a Christian, and I hope that his early training will yet rise up and he will be a good Christian man. My other little boy, Willie, is in heaven, and, oh, how happy we would be if after death we could all be a reunited family in heaven!" He had few equals and, perhaps, no superior as a Christian. As soon as he was converted he began praying in secret, and continued to do so until the day of his death. While helpless on his bed he would request his family to retire from his room for a few minutes that he might hold secret communion with God. Everyone who knew him seems to have had the utmost confidence in his piety. He was the same affable and genial Christian every day. He said: "I love Christians—I know no distinction between Christians if they are genuine Christians. While I selected the Methodist Church as the church of my choice, the Presbyterian, Baptist and all other orthodox churches I consider to be on the road to heaven."

His health was always very good, and he was quite agile until about four or five months before he died. He went to Jackson, Miss., August 23, 1888, on business, and while he was getting off of the train an engine ran against the caboose in which he was, throwing him in such a way as to dangerously cripple him. He was carried back to his home at Brandon and recovered sufficiently to walk a little with a stick and crutch, but was soon seized with paraplegia, from which he never recovered. His sufferings at times were quite intense, but he endured them very patiently.

The undersigned had the pleasure of visiting him a few times during his last illness, and, therefore, can testify to his endurance and resignation. It was a great comfort to him for his pastor to visit him. He said: "God bless our preacher and the preachers that I know. I feel that they are God-fearing men." His chief talk was about God's infinite goodness, and no one could listen to him attentively without being deeply impressed with his unwavering faith in God. Towards his last he had his wife and all of his children to gather around his bed, and he kissed each one good-bye, and then had them to sing some of his favorite hymns, such as, "Nearer, my God, to thee;" "Do not I love thee, oh, my God;" and "Rock of Ages, cleft for me." After the singing was over he said that as soon as his soul left the body it would fly off to heaven like a bird to its nest. Although his respiration became difficult, he passed off sweetly. May God continue to comfort his wife and children who survive him, and enable them to say, "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." (Job i, 21.)

ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

RECORD—Departed this life, January 22, 1889, of paralysis, GEORGE L. RECORD, Esq., an old resident of Vicksburg, where he had resided over fifty years. He was in the seventy-fifth year of his age; was born in Buffalo, N. Y., and left two daughters and several grandchildren. One daughter, Mrs. G. S. Boyd, resides in Arcadia, La., and Mrs. Rose, in Indiana. Mr. Record was the last survivor of his family—all gone over the river before him. His sons-in-law are noble gentlemen, and Christian withal.

Bro. Record was a staunch and unwavering Methodist—a man of God. His great aim was to be always useful. No man was more earnest and thoughtful about the interest, the growth and welfare of the church and the cause of religion. He will be greatly missed in a large circle of Christian friends, for he had many all over the two States of Louisiana and Mississippi.

The citizens of Vicksburg assembled at the Methodist Church in large numbers and paid solemn respect to the memory of the good and useful brother and friend whom they will see no more among them. This writer delineated the character and excellent virtues of a cherished friend, and we then bore his remains to their final rest. There his masonic brethren bestowed the customary tribute over his grave in a tender and pathetic service, and we returned sad, yet joyous, to the daily paths of duty.

C. K. MARSHALL.

REAMES—JAMES W. REAMES was born September 21, 1822, and died at Arbroth, parish of West Baton Rouge, La., January 17, 1889. Bro. Reames was truly a Christian in every sense of the word. Having been converted in early life, he knew not what it was to deviate; but, on the contrary, proved a bright and glowing light on the shores of time, the brilliancy of whose rays have brought many under the shadow of conviction. His daily prayer was that he might die the death of the righteous, and that he might be delivered from the fear of death; and, thank God, his family and myself are witnesses to the answer of that petition, for he remained conscious to within two or three minutes of his death. He told me that he had a well-grounded hope, all fear having flown, for it was "perfect love." He was notably hospitable, and his house has been the preacher's home for many a year. His only regret seems to have been his inability to do more for his Master. He leaves a wife and ten children—three sons and seven daughters—to mourn his loss, all determined by the grace of God to meet him in the shining courts above; and may God bless and strengthen them in the effort! T. L. L.

WILLIAMS—S. G. WILLIAMS, son of J. A. and Margaret Williams was born near Yazoo City, Miss., February 23, 1866, and died at the residence of his father, near McNutt, Miss., February 2, 1889; consequently twenty-five years and twenty-one days of age at the time of his death. He died as he had lived the last few years of his life—a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. His illness was short, but severe. His body rests in McNutt Cemetery, to await the second coming of his Lord. Our hearts go out in sympathy for his desolate widow and those two little children. We can but commend all the sorrowing family to the good and merciful Father. W. S. SHIPMAN

The Sunny Side.

Enough has been written on the subject of consumption, to make even a well man morbid and apprehensive.

But this has all been in its discouraging aspect. Now, we are led, or more exactly speaking, Compound Oxygen urges us to say cheerful things.

However, better than all we can possibly say, are the words of our patients, or we might say, our ex-patients, for they are relieved or cured now.

Observe the comfort and encouragement in the following brief extracts.

POINTAOK, WIS., Jan. 30, 1888.

Scientific.

Momentary Insanity.

That there is "momentary insanity" is scientifically certain. Men of best balanced mind commit unaccountable follies. Trained locomotive engineers, noted for care and coolness, run square in the face of plain orders. Conductors cautioning passengers of dangers step off, in a quick fit of forgetfulness, a platform of a coach in rapid motion. Business men, whose minds move with the certainty of a fate, fall into a delusion for a moment only, and by a single act wreck a fortune. A distinguished professor is mentioned as walking in broad daylight into a canal, the water and ooze smarting him back to sanity. Persons of unusual watchfulness have been known to step off a bridge, and never could account how they fell. An old and shrewd politician of Virginia was killed by a train while he was waiting at a depot for it, and saw the engine come right up to him and crush him. A gentleman, in a Virginia city, of superior guardedness, familiar with cars, daily passing trucks, went right across the rails on which the train he was noticing was slowly backing, and just in time for the wheel to mash him. Druggists know that eminent practitioners prescribe deadly doses, and write them out for compounding in a fit of swift aberration.

Men utter strange sentences out of keeping with their character, or write wild letters. In a long editorial experience we have received many communications prepared in an abnormal mental state and out of harmony with the writers. We have been thanked for suppressing them.

It may be there is a sudden and vanishing disturbance of the loadstone and loss of polarity at some time and in all men. We have learned to show pity for any accident and upset of cranial poise, for we ourselves are "in the flesh." Who does not tilt over at times and tumble out his judgment by way of the tailboard? There are people who claim infallibility, but the needle in their case is permanently off its pivot. I can't dip or veer. It insists forever that the south is the north. An electric tornado in the sun that sets in disarray all magnetic instruments doesn't vary that stolid egotism.—Richmond Advocate.

A LARGE CLOCK.—A new clock, weighing 2½ tons, has been placed in the tower of the Glasgow University, similar to the great clock at Westminster. The frame of the clock newly erected is horizontal, and of cast-iron plated. It is 6½ feet long, 2 feet wide, and 1½ feet in depth. It is supported on beams built into the wall of the tower, so as to obviate vibration. The wheels, which are of gun metal, can be moved separately, as the pivot holes are screwed to the frame. The main wheels of the striking and quarter trains are 20 inches in diameter, and attached to them are cams to lift the hammers, which are fixed in iron frames connected with the clock by cranks, and having a check spring to prevent vibration. The weight of the hammer that strikes the hour is 120 pounds, and it is lifted 10 inches. There is an automatic apparatus attached to the clock, which stops the quarter peals at night and starts them in the morning. The escapement of the going part is known as the double three-legged gravity, invented by Lord Grimthorpe. The pendulum is of zinc and iron, to counteract influences of temperature. The tubes are arranged so that the expansion of one raises the centre of gravity, while that of the other lowers it. The bob of the pendulum is cylindrical, and weighs 3 cwt., and the beat is 1¼ seconds. The "bolt and shutter" appliance of the nobleman already named maintains the motion while the clock is being wound. Messrs. J. B. Joyce & Co., Whitechurch, Shropshire, manufactured the clock.—Engineering.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

A slight earthquake shock was felt, last week, in lower South Carolina.

Secretary Bayard has notified the German Minister at Washington that this government accepts the proposition for a resumption at Berlin, of the conference begun in Washington in 1887 in regard to Samoa.

President Cleveland has approved the joint resolution accepting Germany's invitation to the United States to become a party to the International Geodetic Association.

The conference report on the bill to incorporate the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua was presented to the Senate, on February 7, and was agreed to. The bill now goes to the President for his approval.

The Senate Committee on Military Affairs, on February 7, offered a favorable report upon the proposition to present Mrs. Irene Rucker Sheridan $50,000, in token of the country's appreciation of the services rendered by her husband, Gen. Philip Sheridan. This is to be urged in lieu of a pension.

A disastrous fire occurred in Vidalia, La., on February 8. One-third of the town is in ashes, and more than half of the business houses have been destroyed. Loss $50,000; not one-half insured.

A large and magnificent hotel, just completed and furnished, at Sutherland, Fla., was destroyed by fire on February 7, at two A. M. The guests awakened from sleep, barely escaped with their lives, and several were injured. Loss, $58,000; insured for $22,000.

The extensive establishment of James Wyeth & Bros., manufacturing chemists, in Philadelphia, was completely destroyed by fire on February 10. The building was completely gutted, and the loss will be between $200,000 and $300,000, nearly covered by insurance.

It is thought that the attendance of visitors to the Capitol at the inauguration of Gen. Harrison will be larger than on any previous occasion of this kind. The troops alone number between 15,000 and 20,000, and an enormous crowd of civilians is expected.

The President approved the Act creating a Department of Agriculture. Commissioner Coleman was appointed Secretary of Agriculture, but there is probably no chance for his confirmation. The Republican candidate for seed distributor is said to be Warner Miller.

The Senate, in executive session, on the eleventh, passed the resolution declaring the attitude of the United States with regard to the Panama Canal.

FOREIGN.

An unknown steamer was sunk in a collision off Spithead, last week, and fifty-two lives are said to have been lost.

Advices from Shanghai state that a riot has occurred at Ching Kiang Foo, and that the British consulate and seven houses belonging to foreigners have been wrecked by the rioters. It is said the American consulate was looted by the mob.

The authorities in Italy are alarmed on account of the activity of the socialists, who are busily engaged in spreading their doctrines among the working classes and especially among those who are now out of employment. It is feared that the socialist agitation will result in riotous demonstrations.

The severity of the winter in China is increasing the distress caused by famine in Shang Lun and Manchitera. It is estimated that 250,000 persons are starving in Chiei Kiang.

General Boulanger, in an interview, declared that his programme was the adoption of the American Constitution, but with a ten year presidency, the formation of a council of state to prepare and submit laws to a non-deliberative national council of 500 members, half to be elected by universal suffrage and half to be chosen by the provinces and to sit only one month in the year, and the granting of limited local government to the provinces.

A riot occurred in Rome, on February 8, which was brought about by the thousands of unemployed persons in the city. They marched through the streets, carrying off from the stores whatever plunder they could, smashing street lamps and windows and doing much damage to buildings. Several collisions occurred between the police and workingmen and a number of persons were wounded. Several of the ringleaders among the rioters were arrested.

Notwithstanding the fact that a heavy snowstorm prevailed in London, on the tenth, the demonstration announced to be held in Hyde park, to denounce the government's coercive measures in Ireland and to express sympathy with Mr. William O'Brien, was successfully carried out.

Snowstorms prevailed throughout Great Britain, France and Germany, on the tenth, blocking railways and interrupting telegraphic communication.

The Russian government has granted a concession for a period of eighty-one years to a company which proposes to join the Black Sea and the Sea of Azov. The company has a capital of 85,000,000 francs.

Mgr. Prokopios, primate of Greece, died on the eleventh, of heart disease the Chamber of Deputies adjourned as a mark of respect, and the queen and princesses carried wreaths to the house of the dead primate.

The Blood

Is the source of health; therefore, to keep well, purify the blood by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. This medicine is peculiarly designed to act upon the blood, and through that upon all the organs and tissues of the body. It has a specific action also upon the secretions and excretions, and assists nature to expel from the system scrofula, humors, impure particles, and effete matter through the lungs, liver, bowels, kidneys and skin. It effectually aids weak, impaired and debilitated organs. A trial will convince you that it does possess peculiar curative powers.

GENUINE SINGER.

All hail, thou Everlasting One, where genius reigns on high!
All hail, great lighthouse to the earth, great monarch of the sky!
Sound loud the timbrel far and wide, o'er earth and land and sea,
And unlock Genius' iron door with a gold emblazoned key.

Some forty years ago a man, forlorn and sad,
Through poverty was wretched, and his brain went almost mad;
But, with courage in his iron heart, he plodded through the way,
Until at last he gave us the Genuine Singer of to-day.

Elias Howe, a skillful man, undertook a machine to make.
And in the attempt he failed, we know, losing all he had at stake;
When, lo! a man with a golden bell stepped up and said, "I'll ring her,"
And the world to-day hears the golden bell of Isaac Merritt Singer.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow," was Singer's heartfelt thought,
And this belief and energy made the wonder that he wrought;
With simply forty dollars this brave man, true and bold,
Built himself up before the world like a genius wrapped in gold.

What lady having a Singer does not see its many points,
Its well-constructed cases and its harmony of joints;
The new oscillating shuttle is used safely without fears,
And is the result of study after labor of many years.

This machine will use a shorter and a finer needle, too,
Than any machine in market brought to the public view;
Thread can be used of any size, and what's pleasing still and bright,
It defies competitors to sew their seams with a machine that runs as light.

The reputation of this shuttle has become world-wide spread,
For the reason that it holds in fact almost one spool of thread,
The thread is drawn both up and down with needles out of goods,
And manufactures anything from silk dress to ladies' hoods.

Another grand, superior point which sewers so much need,
The material sewed can never choke, for it has a positive feed;
Another great advantage which to all we here will mention,
It sews with any size of thread without having to change the tension.

Like an iron horse it speeds away with a stitch at optional length,
And anyone can see at a glance the grandeur of its strength;
It is known all through America and in almost every nation,
And stands UNEQUALED in the march for ease of operation.

Its simplicity of construction is another point to know,
And is as noiseless as a mouse the more rapidly you sew;
'Tis equipped with every improvement, and our banner is unfurled!
To produce its equal ANYWHERE we challenge the whole world.

Companies have sprung up everywhere, like mushrooms in the woods,
And have boldly counterfeited it, because they know the Singer's good;
Were it made up like all others they would have let it pass,
For no man living undertakes to counterfeit old brass.

It has carried many prizes in this and other climes,
And can show it has carried such over three hundred times,
At the great Chicago fire was a proof of genius Singer,
For the poor selected then from many makes, only Singer.

For harness work and leather, its equal can not be found;
And when it makes its lock-stitch, it stays there safe and sound.
You might tear and pull and twist, you might give it an awful jerk,
But you'll never find the stitch to give, so thorough is the work.

A drop-leaf table, too, on which the work is nicely laid,
Is one improvement, certainly, which can not be gainsaid.
The work can then be turned around, in any way you please,
And help the one who sews, to work with much more ease.

The great orb of the solar sky, refulgent in his light,
Shines its own rays on Singer, with a smile both kind and bright,
He knows that all his brightness, he is like a fiery ball,
And the Singer shines through all the earth, outshining machines all.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders. The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

Fifty-two pension bills were passed by the Senate, on the eighth instant, in twenty-three minutes.

From Most Rev. Bishop Ryan, of Philadelphia.

I can testify to the efficacy of J. & C. Maguire's Cundurango, it having been my favorite remedy for several years past. I believe it to be the best Anti-Bilious Cathartic and Corrector of Liver, Blood and Kidney derangements that can be taken, and its general use in families would no doubt avert attacks of sickness.

For Throat and Lung Troubles there is no better medicine than PE-RU-NA. Better proof of this than the case of Mrs. L. C. Baker, of Bradford, Tenn., could not be desired. For eighteen years a Terrible Cough had afflicted her. That it was Consumption there could be no doubt. During all that awful time she could not sleep once on her back. The poor woman got no relief till PERUNA brought her sound sleep, and six completely restored her to health. Dr. Hartman's "Ills of Life," sent free by the Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, O., gives many other cures effected by PE-RU-NA. Sold by all druggists—$1 a bottle; 6 bottles for $5. Manufactured by ONLY.

BY AGNES TIDESHAM.

It was only a word of kindness;
But it brought a wealth of rest,
As it lovingly lay enfolded
In the midst of a weary breast.

It was only a small white daisy
That lifted its tiny head;
But it preached a sweet spring sermon
Of the rising from the dead.

It was only a thoughtless answer
To a young inquiring heart;
But it made the soul grow careless
Of the good and better part.

It was only a little shamrock
That the outward eyes could see;
But it told a blessed lesson
Of the hidden Trinity.

"Christian Womanhood."

BY D. W. FOSTER, M. D.

Will it not be infinitely better "employment" for the daughters to become the loved and honored and happy wives of good and great men, and, becoming affectionate, good and prudent mothers, train up the children to fill well, in turn, the places of their useful and honorable parents, than to neglect the sacred precincts of "home, sweet home," to practice medicine or any other calling that separates them from home and family?

"'Mid pleasures and palaces, tho' we may roam,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home.
A charm from the skies seems to follow us there
Which, ever thro' all the world, is ne'er met with elsewhere

An exile from home, splendor dazzles in vain.
Oh! give me my lowly thatched cottage again;
The birds singing gaily, that come at my call:
Give me them, and sweet peace of mind, dearer than all;

Home, home, sweet, sweet home,
Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home."

If Paul did not fully understand all about human nature, or did not himself know exactly what part in life was best for woman to perform for the well-being and happiness of the family and the world, certainly the Holy Ghost did, and inspired him to write the injunction that: "The aged women teach the young women to be sober, to love their husbands, to love their children, to be discreet, chaste, keepers at home, good, obedient to their own husbands, that the Word of God be not blasphemed." Now, lovely woman, there is the law your kind heavenly Father has given for your guidance into usefulness and happiness. Obey it, and "he will cause all things to work together for your good," just as surely as you will "love him and keep his commandments"—all of them—"in spirit and in truth." If you live in violation of any of them, you don't obey any of them properly. If the law of God constrains you to obey one of his commandments, the same law would prompt you to obey all of them. If your motive of action be more to captivate a man than to please God, he will know the secrets of your heart, and not suffer a good man to be imposed upon by a hypercritical woman. If you succeed in entrapping some man for a husband upon false principles, be assured that he will prove to be "a thorn in the flesh;" and that is just the cause there are so many old maids and worthless bachelors in the world now, and so much unhappiness in married life also. There are so many of both sexes, alas! who are "lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away," saith the inspired writer, and every other sensible person will do the same thing. Oh! ye unholy and deceitful young men, and giddy and inconsistent young women, take timely warning, and learn lessons of safety and happiness therefrom. How many of both sexes are resorting to all sorts of strategies (sinful ones even) to deceive and impose upon one another! Young men, reeking from haunts of infamy and debauchery, perfume themselves and go "into houses, and lead captive silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts." And the young women; instead of attending church and worshiping God, and praying for his guidance, protection, and blessings, go to the ball-room with these self-same young men, whom they know to be dissolute. This can't fail to sully the purity of thought, at best. And even some, who are Members of some church, do these abominable and damning things! Young people, do stop, and think of the absurdity and folly and danger of such.

"God made man in his own image and likeness:" and what a noble specimen of a man Adam must have been (perfect in every respect), in form, size, and beauty, intelligence, purity and goodness! And the Lord put him in a most beautiful "garden" of fragrant flowers and luscious fruits, flowing streams and balmy breezes, and it was ornamented, it seems, with statuary of pure gold and precious stones—the most enchanting abode ever seen this side of the glory-land. Perhaps there was a beautiful model of the coming Eves there, which so charmed Adam that even the Lord himself could not reconcile him until he made the beautiful woman and presented her to him, to be his bosom companion for life; for, although Adam was, at first, surrounded in the "garden" with everything God himself could afford to render him contented and happy, except a wife, yet,

"The world was sad, the 'garden' was a wild,
And man, the hermit, sighed, till woman smiled."

And what man would be without a good wife, or what woman would be without a good husband, for all the gardens and all the wealth and all the kingdoms of the world?—all of which is but trash that mocketh the heart without the companionship of a suitable wife or husband, the sine qua non of contentment and happiness in this life. Home can not, in the very nature of things, be "home, sweet home," without that very companionship which the all-wise God devised, in his bountiful goodness, for the well being and happiness of mankind. And the Lord knew, of course, just what Adam, in his loneliness, needed to complete his happiness, which he was willing and anxious to promote. But he withheld woman, the best gift of God to man, except the Savior himself, for the last and greatest crowning boon of all. I suppose the good Lord delayed awhile the making of Eve, that Adam might experience what solitude was, and then he would be the better prepared to appreciate a wife properly. Although the Lord himself used to visit Adam in the "garden" every morning and evening, he seemed unhappy and inconsolable in his loneliness. "And the Lord said: It is not good that man should be alone; I will make him a helpmeet for him." So woman was made to be "a helpmeet for man." And where can she find authority to "set up shop" alone for herself? What's to become of the "man," to be whose "helpmeet she was made?" Must the poor, hapless creature go straggling through life alone, unloved and unhappy and worthless, without a good wife who could have made him happy, useful, and honorable?—while she remains alone, unloved and unhappy, and pines away and grows old and sour in her abnormal state. Why not the two become husband and wife, as the Lord intends, and be happy and useful together—mutual "helpmeets?"—The Lord has made the sexes in pairs, and the links should all be in their proper places in the chain of love God has made to bind together the sexes into good, useful and happy families, to bless the world. If man was able to make and run successfully that huge engine which moved smoothly, and without a jar, all the complicated machinery in the Exposition Building, in New Orleans, a few years ago, is not the Almighty able to plan wisely, adapt perfectly, and work out successfully the welfare and happiness of the human family, if everybody will just fall into line and do his and her part well? If nobody will frustrate God's designs, the world will move forward in perfect order and harmony to the greatest prosperity and happiness. As Eve was made out of one of Adam's ribs (the nearest one to his heart, perhaps), he declared that she was "bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh; therefore shall a man cleave unto his wife: and they shall be one flesh." No intimation here that each or either sex may "strike out on his or her own hook," solitary and alone! That is not God's plan, and it can never succeed well, either. He let Adam try bachelorizing awhile, just to demonstrate to him, and all mankind, that it must always inevitably ultimate in miserable failure. And the good Lord soon got sorry for poor Adam all alone, and so disconsolate without the companionship of a good wife, and he made him one, who filled up the measure of his happiness so completely that it seemed like heaven had come down into the garden to stay. They were both perfectly happy together, and inseparable; the only way the sexes can be happy and fulfill their destiny on earth.

Sanctified Ambition.

THE PREACHER.

BY REV. J. D. NEWSOM.

The average youth, or young man, as he thinks of life, entertains some emotion of ambition. The more sanguine who mark out their course and conceive their model, or adopt their pattern as they read, or learn of the success of those answering to such models, or filling such pattern, they feel a thrill of actual achievement as news of such coming as a telegram over the mysterious wires operated by the agent of the future. To one who has a natural-born instinct for worldly distinction, cherished as the end and aim of life, and carefully fostered by education, and feels for the sake of Christ to give up fame, wealth, political place or military glory, is like laying one or all these upon the altar of sacrifice. This surrender may and must be made; but, in truth, the ambition, but certainly the object and aim as to its worldly ends. This, taken in its full force from a worldly standpoint, makes life not worth living. Such education and training as lead the mind along these earthly lines is far short of that high which discloses an earnest, godly life to be the highest attainment in this world, and deeds of self-sacrifice and true charity the noblest achievements among men.

The average Methodist preacher, if the elements of the true man are in him, has some thoughts of fame, position and place. The great pulpit orators of this day have a fame to which the greatest statesman pay tribute. The great administrators of church economy have won a place among men, which will be told of them until the angel swears that time shall be no more. It may be assumed that preachers are sometimes appointed to places requiring and demanding the highest order of talent when they were not expecting such a thing, and that some have been elected Bishops at a time when such a thought was not entertained by them. We might infer from this that any man entering the ministry should diligently strive to prepare himself for any probability, even for every possibility, "so he may be thoroughly furnished (perfected) unto all God's works" to which the voice of the church might call him. If this diligent study and preparation be carried on with more direct reference to the honors and preferments in the gifts of the church, then, in addition (which would be in accordance with such motives), a system of electioneering, scheming, intriguing, pandering and wire-pulling be carried on among the brethren: However popular such a man may be, he develops an ambition as certainly unsanctified as that of the cajoling and plotting politician of our day. But after years of successful study of the Word of God, the theology and laws of the church, and has always been faithful in his work, prompt at his post in poverty, in sickness, pestilence and plague, he continues true to his charge. He sees as the years go by that his fields of labor are still hard—the very duplicates of those of the first years of his ministry; the brethren are in sympathy and are wont to condole with him. If the complaint escapes him, or is even secretly entertained, there is some element of unsanctified ambition asserting its presence. He has given Scripture exegesis in a way that showed himself superior on this line to the average preacher; he has discussed law with a decided advantage over some appointed as its administrators, yet he sees these pass him to places of ease and comfort, appointed over him to places of honor and trust. He is still oscillating between third and first, and between first and third-class appointments, but gravitating steadily towards the latter. Does he complain? Then his hopes are blasted; he hung them on something beneath the sun: his ambition is disappointed; he was looking for its achievement in this life. Let us suppose (and I am sure it can be supposed) that the man makes no complaint: that he is happy and grows happier in his life-work. He recognizes that, in the main, he has been doing the work to which God called him, though some mistakes may have been made in his appointments, though there may have been some want of appreciation of qualifications and merits. He knows he has been working for the church, and that his labors have been within the precincts of the Lord's vineyard. It is plain to him, too, that his knowledge of the Scriptures was not out of place; his expositions were needed eminently just as he was able to give them. His judgment and application of law was needed just at the time and in the place where he was able to do it. He knows that God has been with him as surely as he could have been with those preferred before him. With an abiding sense of his presence, the man continues to go to each new field of labor in actual joy, thankful that he is still able to do something to bring the world to Christ. He recognizes, too, that he is following in the precedence of angels, who went with as much alacrity to clean out Sodom as to proclaim and sing a Savior born into the world. He is filling his mission on earth—no Bishop nor church dignitary could do more, possibly not so much. His high ambition is a place away beyond the rewards of life—high up in the kingdom of his Father, close beside the blessed Savior, where he can gaze without obstruction in the face of his beloved forever. Such a man, though seen and recognized among men, is not clearly desired by the masses, as he is now giving the finishing touches to the lofty points of the pinnacles to which his sacred ambition has carried him. Glintings of his presence there are faintly discerned as he discovers himself in those altitudes, but that is at times put down to "queer" in him.

City Mission.

BY "JEAN PAUL, JR."

Human hearts are desperately wicked in the city and country alike. Everywhere the carnal mind is "enmity against God." Nationality makes no difference. The American farmer, French dancing-master, German brewer, Irish politician, Italian peddler—all have an evil heart of unbelief. It requires no less divine grace to save the one than the other. The miracle of regeneration is equally amazing in all cases.

But, with all this, I hold that mission work in the city is much more difficult than in the country. City people are usually very ignorant in matters of religion. True, a few religious books are found in our parlors, but they have been bought, on account of their exquisite binding, for purposes of ornament. Wholesome sermons, usually preached in our country churches, in themselves complete bodies of theology, appreciated there, would be fragrance wasted on the desert air in many city congregations. The perusal of several daily newspapers tends to dissipate the mind, rendering it unfit for protracted religious reflection. The adoption of the custom of the continental aristocracy of having late breakfasts and dining late, has led to the collapse of the time-honored family altar. It must also be borne in mind that large cities are often the moral "dumping grounds" of the country. The wayward sons and daughters of our farmers, the lazy, the shiftless, worthless, usually seek domicile among the illiterating multitude of the city.

How reach these masses? I answer, that we intending to reach them, must first have been reached, enjoying the indwelling of the Holy Ghost. Thus, ourselves consciously saved, we unswervingly adhere to the scriptural declaration, that without the renewal of heart sinners will be eternally lost. We constantly bear in mind that we are divinely commissioned to go to the highways and hedges, compelling the morally unwashed and uncombed to come to the Savior. Never falter in the belief that the blood of Jesus will ne'er lose its power, and that this blood can make the foulest clean.

Ecclesiastic benefit ought not to be the primary goal of our missionary effort. The salvation of sinners is the chief concern. When sinners have become saints it is an easy matter to win them for the church. I fear that some preachers are merely servants of their particular denomination, and are not servants of our Lord and Master Jesus Christ. The true soldier serves his country; the menial is in the employ of some general.

All methods employed in reaching the masses are good, when the mind which was also in Christ actuates us. A live church is invariably a missionary church—a missionary church not only because the assessment for foreign and domestic missions is being promptly collected and paid, but, principally, because of its energetic measures employed in winning new members from every class of the billowy multitude. Recreant to its charge is a church which seeks for recruits only among the "nice, educated and well-to-do." Is Jesus not willing, yea, anxious, to save the scum and offal of society? A live church reaches out to the vast multitude of wage-workers, the toilers at factories, foundries, shops, warehouses, shipping, etc. These require no alms but the "wedding garment;" no pecuniary aid but prayer.

If every city church would employ a few faithful exhorters to assist the pastor in winning souls for Christ and members for the church, much good could be accomplished. Their remuneration could be readily secured. They need not be eloquent, but must be men of good common sense, of bonhomie. August Gottschall contributed largely to the success of Dr. John Mathews in New Orleans and Kansas City.

When increased population demands additional church facility, let another centrally located house of worship be erected, the existing churches furnishing a fair quota of experienced members. Thus, without weakening the older churches, the new one springs into being, fully equipped, even as Minerva from the pregnant brain of Zeus. Mission churches, feeble and unpretending, organized with the hope of timidly becoming self-supporting, continue to lead a sickly life until, after a few years of untold struggles and disappointment, they collapse. We want mission Sunday-schools and preaching-places, but these should be branches and feeders of the central churches.

Annual Conference Entertainment.

BY R. ABBEY, D. D.

I wish to state my objections to "Jean Paul's" proposed method of entertaining Annual Conferences, in this ADVOCATE of January 31; not that I am opposed to innovations, as he seems to suppose, for I am decidedly an innovating man—that is, favoring improvement. But improving and pulling down things are not necessarily one and the same.

"Annual Conference sessions are now solely devoted to business!" The Lord have mercy on Methodism! Then let us dissolve it and take up Christianity in some practical form! And please let me be relieved from the further burdens of Methodism! The inconveniences he speaks of as sometimes experienced, considerably enlarged, do undoubtedly exist; but what a remedy! Let the session be "solely devoted to business!"

I would suggest a different remedy. Most of our Annual Conferences are entirely too large. Let them be divided. Fifty or sixty preachers are enough. Then we can occupy smaller towns, and the business can be done more satisfactorily. There will be less complaint and more satisfaction about appointments. Mississippi is ripe now for four Annual Conferences. Those in Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia. They are almost all too large.

Divide as you grow is a great fundamental doctrine of Methodism far too much neglected in these late years. Remedy this matter, and the others will take care of themselves.

But I hope and pray the day may be distant when a Methodist Annual Conference shall descend to the moral level of a political meeting, a circuit court, or Legislature. It ought to be a season of special religious revival and Christian fellowship.

The remedy looks plain to me. Divide as you grow. About thirty or forty preachers is ample for an Annual Conference to begin with, and about fifty or sixty might well be considered about maximum. What is the advantage of having such large numbers as we now have? Will somebody answer?

Only what we have wrought into our character during life; can we take away with us.—Humboldt.

HIS REST.

There are the sorrowing hearts but heaven enfolds them.
And hast and rest them rest;
He takes our cares all torn with strife, and holds them
Close to His loving breast.

O care heart, pressed 'neath there yet remaineth
This rest for thee;
O weary soul, toil on, His love recreaseth
And crowneth thee.

He blessed all things wandering and erring,
And last as yet
Who e'er still comes, life's darkened pathways cheering,
"I am the Way."

I am the Truth, the Life, the Resurrection;
Though dead or sin,
Once put to shame, thy only sure protection
And enter in.

Past the gates which guard the land immortal,
The cost above,
No stern-browed warder keeps the golden portal,
Its God is love.

Earth's vessels may be shattered, broken, riven,
And like a loss;
There yet remains this rest, the rest of heaven:
Lay down thy cross.

Annual Conference of the M. E. Church at Donaldsonville, La.

This Conference convened in Donaldsonville, January 31, and adjourned February 4. Bishop Fitzgerald presided. He is a man of commanding appearance, attractive pulpit speaker, and presided over the Conference with care and great dignity. He made a fine impression on the Conference, composed mostly of negroes. The connectional officers of the church were in attendance, representing their causes. They held their anniversaries just as we do. The largest hall in the town was insufficient to hold the immense crowds that thronged to hear these speakers, while very little money was collected. No doubt, good was done. I suppose some of the most learned negro preachers in the South belong to this body. Among the number was Rev. Albert, of New Orleans, and Rev. Pere Landry, of Donaldsonville.

The Bishop exhorted our brethren in black that they must tone up, educationally; and, as a result of his talk, out of twenty-five applicants for admission on trial only five were received. This is a good move in the right direction. The ignorance of the colored preachers is appalling, for in many instances "the blind are leading the blind." These blind leaders permit things to go on in their congregations that are at once repulsive and disgusting to the true followers of our Lord Jesus Christ. The standard must be raised among these people, or preacher and people will go down together.

While all the collections were very poor, some advancement had been made during the past year. The cause of missions seems to have a very light hold on these people. This is due, as in all other cases, to ignorance. The people need light upon this great subject. The widows and orphans and superannuated preachers received one thousand dollars, as their share of the proceeds of the two Book Concerns. What a blessing such an amount would be to our Conference Mahmants!

There are about fifteen white men belonging to this Conference, some of them of considerable talent. The idea of "social equality" was carried out to a disgusting degree. From the Bishop down, with two exceptions, they were entertained by the negroes. They slept on negroes' beds, ate at their tables, walked arm-in-arm with them along the streets. This is a fact. Social equality! The first I ever saw, and I hope the last. When I saw how these white men associated with negroes, I came to the conclusion that all the talk about "organic union" is wasted. There is a "black" gulf between us. It can never be.

W. WIMBERLY.

Missionary Zeal in the Southern University.

MR. EDITOR: As I read the columns of your most excellent paper, and notice that so many of the Elijahs of the church are deploring this life and ascending to heaven, and as these Elijahs are leaving vacancies in the church of God, and as their mantles are falling from them as they sweep up to glory and to God, we feel like thanking God and taking courage for the missionary zeal and spirit that is among us, the Christian young men of the Southern University, in our Young Men's Christian Association meetings in the hall and in our boarding-rooms. We are expecting great things of the Lord. We have the church of Christ upon our heart. We love the church of God—her jasper walls, her pearly gates, her golden streets. We are constantly looking that the mantles of these Elijahs will fall upon us, and we are praying that a double portion of their spirit may be upon us, and that we may have more power, more courage and more zeal, that we may be able to fulfill the mission of these Elijahs, and that we may carry the gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth. We feel the weight and are pierced to the heart by those interrogatives which come to us through your columns from the Bishops, asking, "Where are the young men of the church?" To these we most heartily respond, "Here we are; send us." But then we listen, and, lo! we hear another voice from the church, and from our conscience, saying we need educated men. And, after considering and praying over these calls, some of us feel that we are not yet prepared to go; and that is what we are doing at the Southern University—preparing our minds and hearts for this great gospel battle. It is true that some of us are not yet ready to go, but, by the help of God, by the prayer and sympathy of the church, we wish to be ready soon. Some of us feel called to the far-West, some of us to other places. As for myself, I feel called to the State of Oregon, where I shall go as soon as I get through with my college course.

I noticed that Bishop Hargrove passed through your city a few weeks ago en route to the State of Oregon. Will the Bishop not let us hear, through the ADVOCATE, something from him concerning the prospects for Methodism in those regions? We are constrained to believe that if the Bishop could be here with us in our Young Men's Christian Association meetings, and when we gather together each night in our rooms and listen to the experience and to the prayers and songs offered up to God, we rather think that he would be constrained to believe that we expected to conquer the whole land for Christ, and also that we intended, by the help of God, to carry out our motto—"The world for Christ." Lord, help us and give us all things needful to carry this motto out to its full extent! Such is the missionary zeal in the Southern University. May the Lord bless you, Mr. Editor, and the publisher, and give you a year of prosperity!

The West.

MR. EDITOR: I see in many of our papers a call for preachers in the far West. I am astonished that so few of our young men are willing to go to these fields, now white unto the harvest. Any young man with grace and grit need not fear. I spent five years in California—a lovely land it is; kind, sensible people to preach to, and no danger about support. Any young man who can succeed well in Mississippi will do well in any part of our work in the West.

I would say to our young men all over the South: Go West; fill up the work! You can do a great work for the Lord. The people are calling for you. There is a sickly notion with some of our preachers that they dislike to break their connection with their Conferences. But this is a mistaken idea. We are connectional; our work is one. This dislike to transfers with some of our preachers is a sign of narrowness; they are not Methodist—only in part. A Conference boundary is only made for our convenience. I think I am not mistaken when I say that a preacher who is opposed to the Bishop's power to transfer is a place-seeker himself; or if he has a good place, he fears he will lose it. All this feeling is selfishness, and a tendency to congregationalism. As true Methodists, we know no such feeling; and if we think differently, we should be brought into the old Methodist line. So, my brethren of the South, go to the call of the West.

From the Work.

GALLMAN, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: As notes are in order, I will tell how good the Lord has been to me and mine. He has given us health, a comfortable home, and kind neighbors. Besides this, we have been placed on a circuit where there are many truly consecrated servants of God, and others, who are in the sad state, I fear, that Amos speaks of—"asleep in Zion"—have cast anchor, and are carelessly waiting the approaching storm. I find plenty of work to engage my every moment, and requiring the greatest strength that God will give a poor mortal. The work is of such a nature that the greatest care must be taken to avoid giving offense. Here is a brother old in the cause and does not believe in missions; another who does not believe in church extension; another does not see the good in family prayers; another who thinks it foolish to go out one night in every week to prayer meeting; another who thinks he must wait till his boy is large enough to plow before he can send him to Sunday-school, and another yet who thinks class meetings ought to be done away with. These people are not outsiders, but are the professed followers of Christ, and some are good men who need more light and grace. In the matter of literature I find that our people are equally divided. I go to a brother and ask him if he takes a church paper. The reply is often: "I don't like it." Why? There are too many advertisements in it for a religious paper, or the price is too much, or there is not enough reading matter, or something of that kind. The all-important question in my mind is, How are we to get at people who are not willing to read the literature of the church, but will fill paper files with the trash of the world? This is not only the case here, but in every church and neighborhood that I have known anything about since my earliest recollection. The spiritual outlook is good. We hope to have a general revival in all departments of church work, and get all our assessments in full.

We have sent ten new subscribers to the ADVOCATE, and hope to send twice as many more before Conference. One new Woman's Missionary Society organized, and I believe the people are generally interested in the work. May God bless you and the ADVOCATE!

M. L. BURTON.

CLINTON, LA.

MR. EDITOR: I see you ask for reports from the work. I send you this. Bro. L. S. Jones, after four years of hard work—earnest, persistent, faithful Holy Ghost preaching—was necessarily moved to other fields of labor; but he has the satisfaction of a clear conscience and a place in the hearts of many of those he left behind. His labor was not without fruit, and eternity alone can reveal the real benefit this community received at his hands. He left some enemies; and who that preaches the unvarnished truth fails to raise the devil and arouse the animosity of the enemies of truth? God bless Bro. Jones and prosper him more and more!

Now it is our lot to have in his place Bro. F. M. Featherstun, a middle-aged man, full of the Holy Ghost, and a burning desire for the conversion of souls. From what we have seen and heard we are satisfied the Bishop made a wise choice when he sent him here. Bro. Jones preached law, and we certainly needed it; and now, judging from the sermons we have been permitted to hear from Bro. Featherstun, love will be his theme. The whole town seems to be delighted, and all are loud in their praise of his sermons—both Jew, Gentile and infidel; of these there are a few. We hope, predict and expect a great shaking among the dry bones during this year. We will not forget to pray. Bro. Featherstun brought his better half, and she is a model itinerant's wife, though I need not have told you this, as you are aware all itinerants' wives are the grandest creatures on earth.

A word for the ADVOCATE. Some time since, I heard a presiding elder say every District Conference was the best he had ever attended—the last being best; so with the ADVOCATE—the last number seems always the best, as it just fits in and fills up a felt want in my soul. Some one said, "There is the ADVOCATE; why don't you read it first?" I answered, I will look over the others first—merely casually—but the ADVOCATE I read, re-read and study; con the advertisements, and then I send them to pastors who are not able to take them, sometimes with a view to getting subscribers sometimes a thousand miles away. May God bless you and the dear old ADVOCATE, and prosper you even as my soul prospers under its benign influence! It is next to my Bible to me.

MERIDIAN DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: My first round will be finished by the first Sunday in March, and but little has been done as yet. We have eleven new preachers in this district, and, while they are all at work faithfully, they have not had time to get fully under headway. Dr. Andrews is opening up, as you would expect, grandly. He is the faithful pastor, earnest, acceptable, instructive, useful preacher. I have been confined to my bed and room for one week from sickness; better now.

I want to say, Doctor, the ADVOCATE gets better. Since you have your new overcoat and hat, and new publisher, the paper does get better, all the time. God bless you, Doctor, as you bless others. I want to invite you to my District Conference. And when I know the time I will let you know; and be sure to come. It will be in Vossburg, on line of New Orleans and Northeastern railroad, about 160 miles north of New Orleans. I want to get a real, live District Conference, and want you and a Bishop.

R. D. NORSWORTHY.

(Such notes give the editor and publisher and printers and clerks and contributors and readers great encouragement.—EDITOR.)

EVERGREEN AND BAYOU BOEUFF, LA.

MR. EDITOR: I would like to say something of Evergreen and Bayou Boeuff circuit; nothing startling, extravagant, or "loomy," but something of the plain facts concerning the people, preacher and territory. The people are a good average of Louisiana folks. Some of all "sorts," with all kinds and kindreds of belief—frank, social, charitable, enterprising, and prompt to attend preaching. The preacher, with no peculiarity except tenacity, has vibrated around and through here for six years, with perceptible ruts in the soft surface, and the ineffaceable slick and smooth glaze upon the hard. Yet we have made an average of two accessions (and in most cases bright conversions) to the church every Sunday during the last two years. We have no revival or protracted meetings, as we have two appointments for each Sunday, with considerable distance (of muddy in winter, and dusty roads in summer) between them. We have no parsonage; consequently keep the spirit of the itinerant low by moving. Have moved five times within the six years, and are now within three miles of where we first landed. This does not pay rent or varnish furniture, but gives good object lessons of geography to the children; and we have six to instruct.

As we are out with a subscription list for the ADVOCATE, and, perhaps, talk glibly, nearly all think that we ought to write for the paper, and, without a due appreciation of the difference between talking and writing, have signified assent to do so; but hereafter shall offer no literary contribution of ours as a premium—i. e., without your special instruction.

We have one new Sabbath-school at Bunkie, with others soon to follow. Our good women are organizing for parsonage work, and will do something handsome on this line. With the unknown future before us, we are plying the oars with a good degree of confidence in the safety of the harbor.

S. H. WHATLEY.

WINONA, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: I want to thank you for your "Thoughts on Preaching." They have done me good, and I trust they have stimulated me to greater diligence in the Master's cause.

I wish to enter a protest to "Jean Paul's" plan of holding Annual Conferences. Our Conferences have not become such business meetings as to have no influence with the people. For several years past nearly as many people attend the business sessions of the North Mississippi Conference as attend preachings. If Bro. "Jean Paul" would have preaching every afternoon during the Conference, and appoint the livest and best preachers he can get to preach, our Annual Conferences would all be occasions of great spiritual power. It is so to some extent in the North Mississippi Conference.

Since Conference I have been sent to the Winona station to take Bro. Dye's place. He was sent to Oxford to fill Dr. Adams' place. Winona is a live, "dry" town. It will ship about 20,000 bales of cotton this season. The Georgia Pacific railway will soon be in running order, and the prospect is bright for another railroad to be run by Winona. The church here seems to be looking up. We are hopeful that the college to be established by the two Mississippi Conferences will be located here, as it is a healthy, central location, and our people propose to bid liberally for it.

Mr. Editor, come up to see us.

Sunday-School Lesson.

LESSON IX.—March 3.

JESUS THE MESSIAH.

Mark viii, 27; ix, 1.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me.—Mark viii, 34.

TIME.—A. D. 28. About two years of Christ's ministry had already passed.

PLACE.—There were two cities in Judea called Cæsarea. One was situated on the borders of the Mediterranean, and the other was the one mentioned here. It was situated in the boundaries of the tribe of Naphtali, near Mount Lebanon, and in the most northern part of Judea.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. xvi, 13; Luke ix, 18.

27. Into the towns—Retired localities in the neighborhood better adapted for private intercourse. By the way . . he asked his disciples—The tense of the Greek verb implies that it was not a single question only, but a continued and, as it were, searching inquiry. The time was come to test the faith of the disciples thoroughly. Whom do men say—What is the result of my ministry? What saith the world, that has heard my words and seen my works, in regard to my nature? This passage has been variously rendered. Some have translated it, "Whom do men say that I am? The Son of man?" Others, "Whom do men say that I am—I, who am the Son of man—that is, the Messiah?" The meaning of all is nearly the same. He wished to obtain the sentiments of the people respecting himself. The Greek emphasizes "men" by prefixing the article, so as to contrast the opinions of men, as such, with God's revelation. In Luke ix, 18, we have "the people," or better, "the multitudes," instead of men.

28. They answered—"Some say, with Antipas, the spirit of John the Baptist has entered thee, and that thou workest through it, or that thou art John himself, risen from the dead, and appearing under another name; some that thou art Elias, who, like Enoch, has never died, but was taken up bodily to heaven, and has now returned in the body, as Malachi predicted, to prepare for the Messiah; some that thou art Jeremiah, come to reveal the ark and the sacred vessels which he had in Mount Nebo, and thus inaugurate the approaching reign of the Messiah; or one of the prophets, sent from the other world by God, as a herald of the coming one." All the people viewed him thus as a remarkable phenomenon, and placed him, at least, in close connection, according to their several prevalent ideas, with the coming Messiah. They did not declare their belief in him as the Messiah himself, doubtless for this reason, that the whole ministry of Christ appeared to them to stand in contradiction to their Messianic expectations.

29. But whom say ye that I am—The question is put to them all, and not to Peter alone. It is, "Whom say ye?" not, "Whom sayest thou?" The disciples, as an entire body, have, thus far, been concerned. As this question is put to them all, of course, the answerer, Peter, is simply the spokesman or representative of them all. He is the foreman of the jury, who answers the judge and pronounces the verdict for all the rest; and he receives an investure from Christ for them all. First, the Lord will hear the echo of the people's views. He will hear now his powerful witnesses' own voice, the expression of their living, personal and independent faith. Thou art the Christ—The variations in the other gospels—St. Matthew giving, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God," and St. Luke, "The Christ of God"—are interesting in their bearing on the question of literal inspiration, but do not affect the meaning; and the fullest of the three reports may be received without hesitation as the most authentic. The confession is not made in the terms of the other answer; it is not "We say," or "I say," but "Thou art." It is the expression of an inward conviction wrought by God's spirit. The excellence of this confession is that it brings out both the human and the divine nature of the Lord: the Christ is the Messiah, the Son of David, the anointed King; the Son of the living God (see Matt. xvi, 16) is the eternal Son, begotten of the eternal Father: not "Son of God" in any inferior figurative sense, and one of the sons of God of angelic nature, but the Son of the living God, having in him the sonship and the divine nature in a sense in which they could be in none else.

30. He charged them that they should tell no man of him—Both because they were themselves not yet fully instructed, and because the people were not prepared to hear and receive the truth. The Messiahship of Jesus was perfected by his death and resurrection, and on the fact of the resurrection, the apostles, Peter pre-eminently, based their subsequent proclamation that Jesus was the Christ.

31. He began to teach them—From this time the teaching of Jesus to his disciples, and also to the world at large, assumed a new character. The ministry of sorrow now commences. His apostolic rocks are firm enough now to bear the full announcement of those woes which had heretofore been but obscurely intimated. The prominence given to the prediction shows that it came upon the minds of the disciples as something altogether new. This was the first intimation that he gave that he was to die in this cruel manner. He had taken much pains to convince them that he was the Messiah; he saw by the confession of Peter that they were convinced; and he then began to prepare their minds for the awful event which was before him. Had he declared this when he first called them, they would never have followed him. Their minds were not prepared for it. They expected a temporal, triumphant prince, as the Messiah. He first, therefore, convinced them that he was the Christ; and, then, with great prudence, began to correct their apprehensions of the proper character of the Messiah.

32. He spake that saying openly—With great plainness, confidence or emphasis, so that the disciples now might fully understand them. Peter took him—This may mean, either to interrupt him, or to take him aside, or, to take him by the hand, as a friend. This latter is probably the true meaning. Peter was strongly attached to him. He could not bear to think of his death. He expected, moreover, that he would be the triumphant Messiah. He could not hear, therefore, that his death was so near. In his ardor and confidence and strong attachment, he seized him by the hand as a friend, and said, "Be it far from thee." Began to rebuke him—The Greek signifies, literally, to adjudge; hence, to find fault with. Peter's impulse was founded on a love for Christ which could not bear the thought of his rejection and crucifixion. But it was the disciple's duty to listen to, not to instruct, the Master.

33. Looked on his disciples—They, we believe, stood behind, watching the effect of the remonstrance which Peter had uttered as their spokesman; and, therefore, the Lord, reading their thoughts, the rebuke, though addressed to him, was spoken so that they, too, might hear. Get thee behind me, Satan—Our Lord seems to call Peter, Satan. Not quite so. But he recognizes a Satan speaking in the words that Peter utters. His own human nature would say, like Peter, "Far be the terrible suffering from thee." The same Satan had once tempted him, in his own person, to fall down and worship him in order to gain the whole world; and that same Satan seems now to speak in Peter's voice. As he repelled Satan then, so he repels the same devil now that speaks Peter's words. A rebuke for all who have a sentimental 'admiration' for Jesus of Nazareth, but stumble at the cross, which belongs to "the things of God." Thou savorest not—"Thou mindest not the things of God"—that is, as represented by Christ, not regarding God's purpose in the foretold death. In accepting Christ, despite his apparent lowly origin and his really humble career, Peter showed his appreciation of spiritual things; in rejecting the idea of a suffering Messiah, he showed that he still retained the earthly idea of greatness of power, rather than the divine idea of greatness as love.

34. Called the people—We learn quite incidentally, from St. Mark, that even in these remote regions his footsteps were sometimes followed by attendant crowds, who usually walked at a little distance from him and his disciples, but were sometimes called to him to hear the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth. And alike they and his disciples were as yet infected with the false notions which had inspired the impetuous interference of Peter. To them, therefore, he addressed the words which have taught us forever that the essence of all highest duty, the meaning of all truest life—alike the most acceptable service to God, and the most ennobling example to men—is involved in the law of self-sacrifice. Whosoever will come after me—Will, here, is not a mere future, but a separate verb: whosoever wills, chooses, determines, to come. Deny himself—Our common thoughts of "self-denial," that is, the denial to ourselves of some pleasure or profit, fall far short of the meaning of the Greek. The man is to deny his whole self, all his natural motives and impulses so far as they come into conflict with the claims of Christ. The essence of that repenting enjoined by the gospel is the change of mind to which reflection and compunction led—a change of the whole mind in desire, feeling, thought, purposes, action; a change in the whole spirit and intent of life as toward God and his truth, and all that affects character; and inasmuch as the heart has yielded to carnal, selfish, worldly desires and aims, it must renounce this way of life as the first step toward the kingdom of God. Hence Christ insisted so much that if any man would become his disciple, he must begin by denying himself—must put self down in order to set up Christ as his king. Take up his cross—Observe that this is not only cross-bearing, but cross-taking that is required of the disciple; not merely submission to burdens which God's providence lays upon them, but a voluntary assuming of burdens, even the burden of death, for the sake of Christ and humanity. The point of duty for us, as for the Master, is not to seek the cross, but by the cross to seek the glory of the resurrection, which is found in no other path. The cross for the cross, never; but the cross for the Lord, always. For no man can accept the crucified One without the cross, except he take the shadow for the substance. Christianity without the cross is Christianity without Christ.

35. Whosoever will save his life shall lose it—There is a subtle distinction between the two clauses in the Greek which the English fails to represent. Whosoever willeth—that is, wishes, to save his life (the construction being the same as in verse 24), in the same clause: "Whosoever shall lose his life" in the second. It is as though it was felt that no man could wish to lose his life for the sake of losing it, though he might be ready, if called on, to surrender it. This solemn saying our Lord is found to have uttered on no less than four several occasions (a) here, which corresponds with Matthew xvi, 25, Luke ix, 24; (b) Matthew x, 39; (c) Luke xvii, 33; (d) John xii, 25. It he seek his life by denying my name, as he must needs do in this age to escape persecution, he will lose life eternal. But he who is willing, for my sake, to sacrifice his natural desire for pleasure and ease, and even to give up life itself, if required, for my name, will receive everlasting life when I come in my kingdom. Hard though this seem, it is the wisest and best thing you can do to comply heartily with it. The meaning may be expressed thus: He that is anxious to save his temporal life, or his comfort and security here, shall lose eternal life; or shall fail of heaven. He that is willing to risk, or lose, his comfort and, life here, for my sake, shall find life everlasting, or shall be saved.

36. What shall it profit—Many of the better manuscripts give, "What doth it profit?" It is not without a purpose that what may be called the argument of expediency is here brought in. Lose his own soul—Better life, in both verses. The word "lose" is not the same as in verse 35, and had, perhaps, better be rendered forfeit, as implying what the other word does not necessarily imply, the idea of a penalty. To gain the whole world means to possess it as our own—all its riches, honors, and pleasures. To lose his own soul means to be cast away, to be shut out from heaven, to be sent to hell. Two things are implied by Christ in these questions: 1. That they who are striving to gain the world, and are unwilling to give it up for the sake of religion, will lose their souls; and, 2. That if the soul is lost, nothing can be given in exchange for it, or it can never afterward be saved. There is no redemption in hell.

37. In exchange—Literally, "as a ransom price." The price which the earthly-minded man gives for the world is his soul. But after having laid that down as the price, what has he for a "ransom price" to purchase it again? If a man loses his soul, he can find no equivalent for it within the whole range of the apparent possessions of the world, by which to ransom it from its bondage unto death. Exchange . . . soul (life)—This verse is not, as it appears to be in our version, a repetition of the preceding; it enforces the argument by a consideration of the irreparable loss when the life of the soul is lost. When a man's life has been spent, what can he give as a ransom or price to get it return? is Christ's question. All other loss can be repaired; a lost life can never be regained.

38. Adulterous—Adulterous here, as in the Old Testament, means unfaithful to God. Son of man—This title has a peculiar connection with his coming visible glory. When he cometh—A further revelation of this important chapter respecting the Son of man. He is Judge of all, and, as in Matthew xiii, 41, is to appear with his angels, and in the glory of his Father—the "glory which thou hast given me." He clearly points out that the glory which they had expected to attend the present coming of the Messiah was reserved for a future time. And as clearly indicates that their cross-bearing and self-denial were, like his own, but for a time, and to eventuate in "a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." In the glory of his Father—In other words, the day is coming when our relative positions are to be reversed, when the glory will be mine, and the shame theirs who once despised me; when the question will no longer be whether they shall be ashamed of me, but whether I will be ashamed of them.

1. Verily I say unto you—This can not refer to the end of the world, and there is no need of referring it to the destruction of Jerusalem. Before they die they shall see this. "Until they have seen the kingdom of God come with power." Luke ix, 27: "Till they see the kingdom of God." The meaning evidently is, till they should see my kingdom; that is, my church, now small, feeble, and despised, greatly enlarged, established, and spreading with great rapidity and extent. All this was accomplished. All these apostles, except Judas, lived to see the wonders of the Day of Pentecost; some of them, John particularly, saw the Jewish nation scattered, the temple destroyed, the gospel established in Asia, Rome, Greece, and in a large part of the known world. Come with power—The Greek verb implies that they should see it not "coming," but as having actually come in its completeness.

Pastoral Visiting—Its Effects.

"As poor, yet making many rich."

The pastor who gives himself to the great work of preaching the gospel, and visiting, for the purpose of edifying and building up his flock in the faith and power of the Lord Jesus Christ, is the instrument in the hand of God of making many rich in faith and love toward our Lord Jesus Christ.

1. Visiting is a great help to the pastor. As he goes into the homes of those who are sick or afflicted, and reads the Holy Scriptures, and prays with them, he can not fail to see the blessedness of the religion of Christ, as it gives light and ease to the burdened ones. He sees the truths of Christianity demonstrated before his eyes; and thus his faith is strengthened and his courage becomes firm, and thereby he is prepared to preach a living Savior and an experimental religion. And, having these things to occur in his every-day experience, his preaching can not fail to be animated and full of power.

2. But the greatest blessings of pastoral visiting are reaped by the ones receiving these visits, especially the sick and afflicted. Some of them, on account of their bodily ailments, can not attend the preaching of the Word.

An incident given will better illustrate this thought. I have in my charge a sister whose afflictions have been great indeed. She has not only been deprived of many temporal comforts, but now, late in life, she is afflicted in her body with disease. From the time I first visited this sister, I have been glad that I could minister comfort to her, as a minister of Christ. Once, after having prayed with her, I asked her of the welfare of her soul; when her eyes filled with tears, and she said: "I don't know what I could do or how I could live without the blessed religion of Christ, and I am so glad you have come and prayed with me. Now sing that little hymn, 'He leadeth me.'" I sang the hymn, and as I sang,

"Sometimes 'mid scenes of deepest gloom,
Sometimes where Eden's bowers bloom,
By waters still, o'er troubled sea—
Still 'tis his hand that leadeth me."

I could see her faith almost by her bright countenance; and as she would say, "Yes, he leadeth me," I saw the operations of the Holy Spirit. I left her rejoicing in God.

Thus the minister goes from house to house, and by his messages of love and peace from God he gladdens the hearts of all; and though he is poor in worldly goods, yet, by the grace of God, he "makes many rich." May God help us, as pastors, to carry riches from Christ into the homes of our people, thus enriching them in the eternal things of God!

HENRY S. JOHNS.

WASHINGTON, Louisiana.

Division of Labor.

Let us consider some of the various pursuits by which men carry on the multiform business of the world.

1. Farmers who produce, by cultivating the ground, the various articles of food, or of materials used in clothing, such as corn, wheat, pork, beef, sugar, cotton, tobacco, hemp, fruits and vegetables.

2. Miners who dig out of the earth the different materials used in manufacturing, in fuel and in commerce, such as coal, iron, gold and silver.

3. Manufacturers who work up the raw material furnished by farmers and miners, such as millers, iron-workers, cabinet-makers, carpenters, brick layers, weavers, shoe makers, tanners, tailors, etc.

4. Common carriers such as wagoners, car drivers, railroad men, sailors, etc.

5. Merchants who buy and sell the different products of the farm, the mine and factory.

6. Men whose business it is to keep down evil-doers and to protect person and property, such as soldiers, policemen, watchmen, etc.

7. Those who instruct and amuse mankind—ministers, teachers, actors, musicians, painters, authors, printers, news dealers, etc.

8. Men who make and administer the laws—legislators, judges, lawyers, juries, sheriffs, etc.

9. Those who tend the sick—doctors, nurses, etc.

10. Those who prepare food or sell it—bakers, butchers, fishers, confectioners, cooks, servants, etc.,

11. Those who prepare clothing—washers, ironers, etc.

The statistics of population show how many people are engaged in each one of these pursuits, as well as many others not possible to be included in any general division.

The greatest number are included in the list of farmers, or tillers of the soil; the next largest class are manufacturers; the third are those engaged in trade; the fourth, transportation; the fifth, miners; the sixth, servants; the seventh, instructors and amusers; the eighth, doctors; the ninth, lawyers; the tenth, public service.

These classes include, perhaps, nine-tenths of the adult population. The other tenth may be classed as miscellaneous. Of course, many are left out of all this classification, such as children, aged persons, wealthy people who live on incomes, and many idle and worthless characters who have no visible means of support.

Most mothers and daughters are not included in any of the above classes, although they actually do much or most of the work of their respective households, and thus save the wages that would otherwise be paid out to employees.

Perhaps not more than one person in five is really a wage-worker, or earns the living upon which all depend. This shows the bounty of Providence in making the means of subsistence so easy. A little reflection on the above enumeration will show how so many people are enabled to find a living in a large city like New Orleans.

1. There is the army of men employed on the levees in receiving and handling the products of the country brought here for distribution.

2. There are the bankers, brokers, insurance agents, hotels, boarding-houses, hacks, draymen, bootblacks, newsboys, etc., that thrive in a crowded population.

3. There are the merchants, livery stables, undertakers, teamsters, blacksmiths, coopers, book sellers, druggists, news dealers, etc.

4. There are the thousands of common laborers who have no particular trade, but who by using their muscle are able to get a job almost anywhere.

5. There are the markets, the retail stores, the fruit dealers, cooks and servants.

6. There are the teachers, preachers, lawyers, doctors, dentists, actors, beggars, music grinders, and a thousand others.

Song and Life.

Song is thought touched with emotion, expressed in poetic form and movement, and set to music. The Christ of God came into this world that in him men might have life and might "have it more abundantly." It is this abundance and exuberance of life which naturally springs forth into song. It is Christianity which is tuning the life of the world into music. Hymns are the sacred songs of the church. They embody the deepest and finest "fruits of the Spirit," and reveal the most characteristic experiences of the life that is "hid with Christ in God." As some one has said, it is the lyric rather than the polemic spirit which is the fairest witness of a living Christianity. When the church goes forth in her militant greatness, overturning strongholds of darkness and death, she is garlanded with hymns and spiritual songs. Flushed with spring-time fullness of the indwelling presence, her heart wakes into praise and thanksgiving. In her conquering march she keeps step to the rhythm and cadence of her stirring chant and hymn. But while the hymn with its fervid emotion and ring of poetic utterance is fitted to express the religious impulse and the devotional feeling, it is equally fitted—and herein is its chief value—to waken and deepen, to communicate and perpetuate, this same spirit and impulse.

For this reason one may trace the stream of Christian history along the centuries in the stream of Christian song. The true hymns born, and most in use, in each period, show most clearly the characteristics of the Christian life of the time. The most vital spirit of a period has often been crystallized in a single hymn. And on the other hand, some new hymn, as it were, a fresh Marseillaise of the church, may have the power to inspire millions of believers, young and old, with new and resistless spiritual impulses, experiences and moral force. In our own city, Chicago, less than twenty years ago, there was a young man, endowed by nature with peculiar poetic and musical sensibilities, touched into sacred power by a peculiar religious experience, Mr. P. P. Bliss, to whom it was given of God more than to any other one person, just then, to strike the initial keynote and set in motion a new wave of "gospel song," which has become a distinctly new and added power for Christian persuasion in every part of the Christian world. In earlier times, when the life and culture and enterprise of the church were comparatively simple, comparatively few hymns seemed to answer the purpose. Not so now. Life is broader and more many-sided. There was a time when John Wesley fondly believed that Methodism would never need any other or hardly any other, hymns and sacred songs, than such as he and his brother Charles were producing. That time is long past.

There are some hymns, at once so personal and so universal, born out of the deepest personal experience, yet born from above, which become the possession for all time of Christians everywhere. No one man has ever produced more than a very few such. But in this unison of the noblest hymns of the age is manifested the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace for the universal church. If we would discover the real oneness of the church of Christ, we need not hunt for it in some notion of a "historic episcopate," or of a tactual succession of bishop's ordaining fingers, or other peculiarities of an "institutional" church order; we find it closer at hand, in the universality of the use of certain psalms and hymns and spiritual songs, from Miriam to Asaph, from David to Jesus and his disciples in that upper room, from Paul to Ambrose, from Luther to Gerhardt, from Watts and Wesley and Toplady, to Newman and Faber and Bonar, to Ray Palmer, and other select men and women who each have contributed at least some unique utterance in song to the living speech of the church, and whose "unending song" is doing somewhat, and more and more, to put a heart of holy gladness, of divine cheer, and the deathless hope into this old, sin-stricken, but redeemed world of ours.—Advance.

The Stages of Progress in the Conquest of the World.

Great moral changes require to be measured in long stretches of time. When Christ left the earth, we know of "five hundred brethren" as his followers. That these were all, is not affirmed; but we know of no more. Though Pentecost and the subsequent days brought to light hundreds and, perhaps, thousands of such as had secretly or openly believed in him, but had awaited this occasion to "add them to the Lord."

When Christ had gone, the spread of his gospel began. In thirty years it had overrun the Roman Empire, which was the then known world. But the empire was not yet converted. It did not become nominally Christian yet for three centuries, or till 327. Did it stop or stay its progress then? By no means. It never stopped. It met the Mohammedan power, and was trodden under foot in most of that empire in the seventh century; but it had Europe still to conquer, and in some shape or other it kept at this work till the year 1500. It conquered Europe much as Israel conquered the promised land. It possessed the heart, or main part of the country, and kept possession. But there were districts of mountain and fastness to be fought for and possessed. Caleb must do some battle for "that mountain," with its Hebron. The rough regions of the north gave the northern tribes a chance to air their valor. Nor was Jerusalem even the possession of the nation till David's time, four or five centuries after the crossing of the Jordan. Nor was the full possession, from the Tigris and Euphrates to the Mediterranean, obtained till the same period.

Thus in like manner was Europe given to the Christian faith—a part at a time. And the like spiritual condition characterized alike the older and the later Israel. Both exhibited their phases of corruption. Israel lapsed into idolatries, and the papacy grew in the west.

But with brief exceptions, there was with the Christian faith spread and advance. An estimate which has currency places the number of Christians in the world at the end of one hundred years from the birth of Christ at one-half a million. In 325 the number had grown to ten millions. The advance continues at the rate of four to ten millions each century, till the twelfth, when it has reached eighty millions. But during the next century the number recedes five millions, standing at seventy-five millions; but for this century only. It again advances, gaining what it has lost the next, or fourteenth, century, and in the fifteenth century it reaches 100,000,000, which it doubles during the eighteenth.

But from the year 1500 to the close of 1800 the church takes on a new phase of progress. It is the era now of reform. Before 1500 there had been reformers. In fact, there never was a period of any length when there had not been those who called for a purer faith and practice than prevailed in the church; but the custom of the papacy had prevailed, of putting such out of the way. But with Luther and his fellows, including Wesley and the Puritans preceding him, there was a succession of reformers who defied the papacy. Here, then, are two periods of progress; first, that of growth and conquest of territory; and, second, that of purification—the first including fourteen centuries, and the second three centuries.

But with the year 1800, as a starting-point of convenience, though not of strict accuracy, we enter on a third period of advancement, no less distinct than these. It is again a period of spread, and it is not now the Roman Empire, though called the whole world at the first; but it is now the actual world, surrounding and including the entire globe, with every nation and tribe that dwells upon it. The whole church of every speech and nation is now engaged in this business of spreading the gospel of God on this new and enlarged sphere of action, seeking to realize the Savior's final command, to disciple all nations.

Of course, the work will not be completed as it goes. It never was. Its first aim is to overrun the territory, doing its first work as well as it can. The converts may be few in a place, compared with the population. Christ's apostles did not tarry in Judea, Galilee or Samaria, to convert all the people, before going abroad to the uttermost parts. They kindled the fire and left it to burn while they went elsewhere for the like purpose.

Is this third period of progress the last? May there not be needed another to do a work corresponding to that inaugurated by Luther and Calvin, a work of purification and reform? Are there not at work already the tendencies to corruption, and is it sure that these and others will not increase as time goes on, even while the gospel is making its way over the earth? It was so in the Middle Ages, and what has happened once may happen again. Of course, the developments may differ widely, for the old ignorance of the centuries before the Reformation has passed away. But Satan is not dead, nor has his malignant skill abated, so far as we know. But while we look these obstacles full in the face, it is the duty of the church, confident in its great Leader, to keep fighting on till he gives it the victory.—Evangelist.

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

From a Prominent Minister.

I am fifty-five years of age.

Half of my life I have been a sufferer from a disordered liver, and the last three years a victim of that dread disease, consumption; was reduced to eighty-seven pounds, a mere skeleton, helpless, pronounced beyond recovery by my physicians, and given up to die by friends. In order to gratify my loving wife, I began taking Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, which is a cure for consumption, and to-day I am healthy, and able to indulge myself in preaching the gospel from the sacred desk. RUFUS FIGH,

Cor. Pine and Crockett Sts.

SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS, July 12, 1888.

Dr. R. M. Davis, County Line, Miss., reports having cured a cancer of long standing that years of the most skillful medical practice had failed to benefit at all. Besides, we have numerous assurances of cures effected in Asthma, Bilious Colic, Catarrh, Diarrhœa, Diphtheria, and Malarial Fever.

Rev. W. A. Mason, pastor of the Baptist Church, Crystal Springs, Miss., writes under date of July 2nd:

At your request, I will say that for about eight years I have been suffering with a sore on the back of my neck which was caused by the rubbing of a mole by my shirt collar. It gradually spread till larger than a quarter-dollar. About six weeks ago, I commenced the use of Microbe Killer. From the very beginning I felt an improvement, and it has gone on steadily till now; though I have been very irregular in taking the remedy. I am satisfied that directions closely followed would effect a speedy permanent cure.

W. A. MASON.

I gladly testify that, after suffering with a severe case of malarial fever, I tried Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer, and am now perfectly well. I strongly recommend it to suffering humanity.

To Whom It May Concern:

This is to certify that after taking one jug of Microbe Killer I was permanently cured of a severe attack of bronchitis and pulmonary inflammation, said illness having resisted all methods of medical treatment.

I cheerfully recommend Wm. Radams' Microbe Killer as being more than is claimed for it.

Bishop H. N. McTyeire.

After three months of painful suspense on the part of the church and intense suffering on the part of this eminent servant of God, he entered upon his eternal reward, Friday, February 15, at nine A. M. The whole Methodist Church in our land, and in all lands, stands uncovered in genuine sorrow, and in deepest grief at the loss of one of Israel's princes. Christians of all denominations, recognizing the worth of the man and value of his service for Christ and humanity, sympathize with us in our bereavement, and mingle their tears with ours. Bishop McTyeire's last words reveal to the church the outcome of a life consecrated to God's cause. In the supremest moment of life—that moment when the whole past concentrates itself into the last utterance—the dying Bishop's words were: "Peace, peace." It was a beautiful fulfillment, for the encouragement of his family and friends and the church, of the Psalmist's words: "Mark the perfect man and behold the upright: for the end of that man is peace."

According to our judgment, Bishop McTyeire had one of the best proportioned characters we have known. In his mental and moral and spiritual make-up there was a symmetry which was as rare as it was striking, and as grand as it was beautiful. His mental endowments were of the first order, and were used with judicious care. His acquirements had a large range over the fields of human wisdom. His conception of truth was vigorous and clear. His judgment was correct and unclouded. His opinions, expressed in a terse style, were always of great value. His writings have a charm about them which few writings have.

As a preacher, Bishop McTyeire stood on a very high plane. His preaching showed that he held his subject with a vigorous grasp, and his utterances were characterized with a peculiar force. By some good judges he was considered one of the best preachers in all Methodism.

As a writer, Bishop McTyeire has acquired a well-deserved fame. His career as an editor not only brought him to the front as one of the ablest thinkers of the day, but it established his title as one of the ablest editors of the weekly church journal which this country has yet produced. He published several valuable works. His work on Methodism is one of the best that has yet been written on that subject.

As a general superintendent, Bishop McTyeire, for nearly twenty-three years, has been going out and coming in before the church with a popularity that has been constantly increasing in all her borders. His administration of church affairs has been wise and kind and judicious. Ranking among the first in his knowledge of church law and customs and traditions, for years he has been looked upon as good authority upon those matters. His "Manual of Discipline" is everywhere recognized as an authoritative exponent of the discipline of our church. As a parliamentarian, he had few superiors in all the land.

As the president of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, Bishop McTyeire shaped the policy and guided the course of that great institution to its present position of success and power.

Thus on all these lines of church life and work Bishop McTyeire impressed his own individuality, and gave an impetus to the progress of the church along these lines which will tell of him for years to come. The older readers of this paper remember him as its gifted first editor, and they mingle their tears in sympathy together as children who weep over the bier of a father gone before.

Bishop McTyeire was born in Barnwell county, S. C., July 28, 1824. Entered the ministry in the Virginia Conference in 1845. He was married to Miss Amelia Townsend, of Mobile, in 1847. Elected editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE in 1851. Elected editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate in 1858. Elected Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at New Orleans, in May, 1866. Died at his home in Nashville, Tenn., February 15, 1889.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE BOARD OF MISSIONS.

A meeting of the Mission Board, on call of the president, was held in the Mission Rooms, February 16, 1889. The president stated that the Board had been called together to render a suitable tribute to the memory and worth of our senior Bishop, H. N. McTyeire, an honored member of this Board, who, on the morning of the fifteenth, had been summoned from labor below to rest above.

A committee, consisting of Bishop Granbery, Dr. Fitzgerald and Dr. Cunnyngham, was appointed to prepare resolutions in memory of our venerated Bishop, and in due time reported the following paper:

Resolved, That the members of this Board are most profoundly impressed with the magnitude of the loss sustained by the church in the death of Bishop H. N. McTyeire, who has been so long officially connected with the administration of its missionary work, and whose pre-eminent ability has not been more conspicuous than his singleness of purpose and ardent zeal for the cause of missions.

Resolved, That while we shall miss his wise counsel, and feel the lack of the administrative genius with which he was so richly endowed, we are consoled with the reflection that the church will not lose the enduring results of his great life and abundant labors in all the spheres of service in which his energies were employed during a career of extraordinary energy and usefulness; nor will his surviving co-laborers lose the inspiration of his example and the wisdom of his teaching.

Resolved, That we would assure the family of our departed Bishop of our sincere sympathy for them in this deep affliction—a sympathy intensified by our own sense of bereavement growing out of the intimacy of personal as well as official association.

J. C. GRANBERY,
O. P. FITZGERALD,
W. G. E. CUNNYNGHAM.

The resolutions were adopted by a rising vote, and the secretary was instructed to furnish a copy to the bereaved family and to our church papers.

C. G. JOHN, Secretary.

RESOLUTIONS OF THE NEW ORLEANS PREACHERS' MEETING.

At a meeting of the preachers of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, of the city of New Orleans, held at Carondelet Street Church on Monday, February 18, 1889, the Rev. Charles F. Evans, P. E., in the chair, the following committee were appointed to report suitable resolutions in reference to the death of Bishop H. N. McTyeire, namely: J. B. Walker, B. Carradine and F. M. Grace. The committee, after retirement in the preacher's study, reported the following:

Whereas, Intelligence has been received of the death of Bishop H. N. McTyeire, which occurred at Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn., on Friday, February 15, at nine A. M.: And, whereas, this city was the scene of the earlier labors of his ministry, during which period he was pastor of Lafayette and St. Andrew Chapels, and afterward of Felicity, Moreau, and also of the colored congregations at Wesley, Soule and Wesley Chapels; And, whereas, He was the first editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, which has been one of the most influential periodicals of our church; And, whereas, He was elected and ordained Bishop at the General Conference, held in this city, in 1866; And, whereas, He was held in very high estimation by many of the Methodist people of this city and of the State of Louisiana, among whom he spent seven or eight years of ministerial labor; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we mourn the death of our beloved senior Bishop as a great loss to the church in America on account of his great abilities, successful administration of church affairs, literary labors, his extensive travels and instructive preaching to innumerable congregations, and his general piety and usefulness; and that we tender our sincere condolence to the members of his family who are so heavily bereaved; and that we unite in a memorial service, to be conducted by Bishop J. C. Keener, at Felicity Street Church, on Sunday afternoon, March 3, 1889, at three o'clock.

The Foreigners.

One of the problems confronting our statesmen, and which is every year growing larger and apparently more difficult of solution, is the problem of foreign immigration. It is true that we are not yet in danger of over-population and crowding upon one another's heels, for we have broad domains that it will take generations to fill up. It is the character of the population that is flocking to us in such hordes that constitutes the seriousness of the problem. There is abundance of room and the heartiest welcome for the honest and industrious and virtuous; but that class seems to be in the minority among the immigrants who seek homes among us. The ignorant and the lawless, the superstitious and the infidel, seem to be in the majority. This class of people we do not want, because wherever they go they create trouble and endless strifes. The Esaus of modern civilization we can well afford to do without. They are a perpetual menace to our laws and customs. Confounding liberty with licentiousness, and freedom with lawlessness, they are the enemies of all those sacred rights and principles for which Americans have suffered and toiled for more than a hundred years. They would overthrow our liberties and all that we hold dear in social life and in religion in one week had they the power. And the question of their power is only a question of time, if something is not done by our statesmen.

That our readers may see how fast these people are coming among us, we quote from an exchange:

The immigration for 1888 amounted to 518,518, against 510,058 for 1887, and 386,631 for 1886. During the past eight and a half years, the immigration has reached the large number of 4,535,000 souls. In the previous twenty years it amounted to 5,093,000, or an average inflow of about 250,000. In the decades preceding 1880 the large influx of foreigners, as it was then considered, although averaging only a quarter of a million a year, was regarded with anxiety by many patriotic and Christian citizens. If this tide, consisting largely of the ignorant, superstitious and infidel, could be reduced to the average of 1870 to 1880, or to even less, it would be greatly to the advantage of the country and of a large proportion of the native population of the United States. The population of the country is now about 64,000,000. The natural increase is about 1,000,000 souls a year, and is constantly rising increase. The States have no need of the additions now received from Europe.

If these figures are correct, we see at a glance that where two children are born here one foreigner comes here. It seems that such a statement should command the earnest attention of every true American.

We are glad to note that the subject is getting the attention of our legislators at Washington. Congressman Oates, of Alabama, from the Committee on Judiciary, reported, February 13, favorably to the House a bill to amend our naturalization laws. The report accompanying the bill treats the present laws in a critical spirit, and calls attention to abuses. Among other things, it says:

An alien may be a notorious thief, murderer, outlaw, an anarchist, polygynist, a leper or hardened criminal, and yet our laws allow him, by making an affidavit of intention before a clerk of a court, all the benefit of citizenship within the United States.

He is allowed by the land laws of the United States to buy and own any quantity of real estate or other property or to take a homestead on the public domain and thus receive a benefaction equal to the young man of American birth, and, at least, one half of the States of the Union allows such aliens to own and inherit real estate and to vote at all elections, the same as natives and naturalized citizens.

In many other States an alien who has legally declared his intention to become a citizen, is eligible to any office within the State. He may, by State law, be eligible to a seat in Congress when the Constitution of the United States denies to him such right until he has been a citizen for, at least, seven years. So deficient is the present law and so careless is the practice of the judges with but few exceptions, that it has become a matter of public notoriety that they perform their duty in such a perfunctory manner, that any alien, however bad his character or beastly ignorant he may be, can become a citizen of the United States.

There is nothing in the law to deny citizenship even to idiots, insane persons, paupers, criminals or others who have come into the United States in flagrant violation of our immigration laws.

The following is a synopsis of the bill reported:

A limitation of the classes of foreigners who shall be eligible to citizenship in the United States, including Indians adopting civilized life; a prescription of the form of application, a requirement that the district attorney shall defend the government against improper applications, and that applications shall be corroborated upon the point of residence, a restriction of jurisdiction to high State courts and Federal courts, the preservation of the rights of aliens who have already declared their intention, an allowance of the right of bona fide applicants to make homestead entries and to receive patents after naturalization, and a requirement of would-be citizens that they shall have resided five years in the United States and be able to read the Constitution in English.

We do not know if this is the best that can be done, but we are heartily in favor of that last clause. If we can't stop these hordes of dangerous people from coming, we can surely hedge up their propensity to make mischief, and circumscribe their power to govern our municipal interests by their ballots. The weak point in our suffrage system is in allowing men to vote who can't read the language of the Republic.

Shall I Read That Novel?

What novel? Any one of the thousands that flood the book markets of our day. With very many, especially of the young, novel-reading amounts to a passion. Many popular novels are like the sweetmeats of the confectioner, or the intoxicants of the dram-seller. Children are not more eager to devour the former, nor deluded men to drink the latter, than the average American is to indulge in the excessive reading of novels. But to live on sweets and stimulants is not more unhealthy for the body than is habitual novel-reading for the mind. Regarded as an intellectual recreation, the reading of light literature might not be harmful if properly restrained; but that sort of play which prevents or destroys all taste for useful labor had better never be begun at all. Novel-reading, in its least objectionable forms, is a kind of mental play which seems to have a tendency to produce an ever increasing desire to engage in it. This desire, with many, seems to become an enfeebling and corrupting disease. Candies bedecked with poisonous stripes, and drinks bedrugged with deadly powders, are scarcely more dangerous to the health of the young than are the sentimental, overdrawn and lust-exciting brain spinnings of the average novelist. No, I can not afford to waste my time and risk my mental health in reading trash, or the wild imaginings of venal brains.

But are there not good novels? Yes, doubtless; but which and for whom are the difficult questions. So widespread is the taste for fiction that novelists now are entering every field of literature and of thought. Even subtle schemes of skepticism are interwoven with fascinating stories of fiction, so that while one class of novels corrupts the morals of the young, another aims to undermine the faith of mankind in the God of the Bible. Witness this from a popular novel: "What did the apostle mean by a death to sin and self? What were the precise ideas attached to the words, 'risen with Christ'? Are this death and this resurrection necessarily dependent upon certain alleged historical events? Which is the stable and lasting witness of the Father: the spiritual history of the individual and of the world, or the envelope of miracle to which hitherto mankind has attributed so much importance?" "Alleged historical event," indeed! The author intimates that it is doubtful whether Christ died or not, and that if he did, his death was a matter of minor importance to us. "The spiritual history of the individual and of the world," says this author, is the "veritable revelation" of God as set against the miracles of the Bible.' I read no further. I will not read an author whose very manner of quoting the Bible throws discredit upon its fundamental truths. As a matter of religion, I have no concern with the "spiritual history of the individual or of the world" apart from the historic fact of the death of Christ. I will hear no one who proposes to base a religion on any other fact or truth. I have not time to waste hearing or reading an argument against the revelation of the Bible. Why not? Because I know beforehand that the author can not know anything worth my attention on the subject of religion, except what is taught in the Bible. Do you ask how I know this? I answer, Just as I know that no human being can think of the absolute beginning or ending of time or of space. I will hear no man proposing to teach a religion not found in the Bible till he brings me credentials superior to those presented by the authors of the Scriptures. I know that no man can know the things I wish to know about God and eternity unless he be directly inspired or taught of God. When I desire a man-made religion, I prefer to make my own. I wish to worship God and not a man. I need a religion that comes from God. If a man would bring it to me, he must bring his credentials; and they must be superior to those of Moses and Paul if he would supplant them in my faith. Hence the arguments and speculations of skeptics and infidels give me no trouble. They need to do so, but they do not now, because I have come to know that they can not know anything about the proper subjects and objects of religious faith. If, the natural sense of the words do not know the Bible to be true, I know that no human being knows it not to be true. Then man's words shall hinder my faith.

Though some impatient may contents leap from the deck the old ship of Zion (her name Faith, her anchor, Hope, and moves in the ocean of Charity and, while swimming with noble splash among the waves, cry out to those on board: "Your vessel has sprung a leak, her timbers are parting, and she never reach the shore;" although all may look and listen and wonder, and a few may jump overboard in madness to follow these preposterous adventurers, I'll stay with the ship's crew that are striving, every man at the oars, to work their way to the heavenly port. I'll never give up this ship till a better, or a safer is in reach.

Notes.

A society has been formed in New York for the purpose of "attracting the attention of the American the necessity of such educational measures as are calculated to promote integrity and intelligence requisite the proper exercise of the right of suffrage." Surely something of this sort is needed down this way, too.

There is to be a Scotch-Irish congress at Columbia, Tenn., on the eighth of next May. All of that blood have an invitation to attend. Dr. John Hall, of New York; Senator Z. Vance, of North Carolina, and other distinguished men will take part in the congress. It is expected to be a meeting of great social and historical importance.

Some Christians seem to suppose that their only duty is to save their own souls and get to heaven as soon as possible. They care not for the souls or bodies of other people. It will be a wonder to find a man or woman in heaven who did not assist some one else to get there. Laziness is not a premium with Him who will distribute the rewards at the last day.

Dr. John E. Edwards, in an article in the St. Louis Advocate, on "Demands on the Pulpit," has this significant paragraph:

Now, accepting all that is assumed in relation to the growth and prevailing power and influence of worldliness in our church, what is the demand that is pre-eminent? I answer for myself that fidelity to ordination vows, in independent and fearless proclamation of the gospel in its simplicity and power, including the enforcement of its moral duties and obligations, combined with a gentle, but firm and decided enforcement of the discipline of our church, are among the imperative demands of the hour—if not the paramount demand.

One of our exchanges said, a few weeks ago, that "the greatest achievement on earth is to save men, a work which church members are not now doing in any adequate measure. That is to say, church members are not working for greatness in that line. There are many of them that are working tremendously every day, putting in every moment of time and rushing along with railway speed, but not to achieve the greatness that comes from soul-saving. They save to heap up money that makes to itself wings to fly away; they toil to acquire a reputation that one breath of slander will blacken forever; but not for saving souls, and thus rearing a monumental column whose peak will touch the skies and outlast the heavens, they don't do that. In the end, they will find too late, that they have built upon "wood, hay, stubble." Reader, are you engaged in soul-saving?

Bishop Vincent, in an address to theological students in Boston University recently, gave some points which we reproduce for the meditation of our young ministers:

The itinerancy is the only solution of ministry in this country. I could point to hundreds of Methodist Churches that have never had the break of an hour in their ministry for fifty years.

Get that most valuable experience that is gotten in the nethermost depths among the humblest people, by rubbing your heart up against tearful, toiling, struggling humanity. It will put new vitality into the valuable work of the schools.

When you bring so many old members to the higher life, it is just as much as bringing so many probationers to the lower life. Work must be counted, not by numbers alone, but by expansion of souls.

Oh, how much we all need good square, hard solid common sense in our ministry—the common sense that will tell a man when to be silent, when to speak, how to do the right thing in the right place at the right time!

Personal and Otherwise.

In a Quarterly Conference in Mississippi, when one said, "The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE grows better and better" the sentiment was endorsed by the others present. That's encouragement. Our work is appreciated. "We thank God and take courage."

We are compelled again to call attention to the fact that communications without name can not be published.

We have received the Louisiana Immigration Bulletin, issued by T. W. Cole, Commissioner of Immigration Louisiana, a document demonstrating in various ways, and by various writers and speakers, the superior advantages our Pelican State offers to the industrious and virtuous immigrant.

Mr. Homer Eaton, of Burlington, Vt., has been selected to fill the place of agent of the Methodist Book Concern New York, made vacant by the death of J. M. Phillips.

The joint resolution of the Pennsylvania Legislature to submit the prohibitory amendment to the vote of the people has been signed by the executive.

Robert Ingersoll was proposed for membership in the Players' Club of New York, founded by Edwin Booth. He was black-balled by the actors on account of his irreligious principles.

Emperor William of Germany is giving his subjects a good example in economy in the household. His breakfasts are not to cost over sixty cents a head, and his dinners not more than $1 25 a head.

Rev. Ebenezer Brown died recently in Baltimore, aged ninety-four years. He is said to have been the first missionary sent out by the Methodist Church, Bishop George sending him as missionary to the French inhabitants of the South, with headquarters at New Orleans. So says Zion's Herald.

The new governor of Kansas said in his message: "The saloon as a factor in politics, as a moral iniquity, has been outlawed and made a fugitive and a vagabond on the face of the earth, or that part of it within the territorial limits of Kansas." Good for Gov. Humphrey!

The Nebraska Legislature has passed a resolution providing that at the next general election the people of the State should vote upon the question whether prohibition or high license shall be incorporated in the Constitution.

Rev. Boyd Vincent, who was recently consecrated Assistant Bishop of Southern Ohio, is a cousin of Bishop John H. Vincent, of the Methodist Episcopal Church.

The British Parliament refused to pass the Sunday Closing Bill, but passed a "local option" act instead, by a vote of 186 to 128. The Britons are at last waking up to the evils of the saloon.

A writer in the Western Christian Advocate gives a list of names of forty Methodist ministers who have belonged to a Conference for from fifty-five to sixty-six years, and says there are three or four hundred who have held such a relation over fifty years.

One of our preachers writes us thus: "The name of our county is Clark, the name of the circuit is Clark, and the name of the preacher is Clark." Must be a kind of family affair!

Dr. Alexander McLean, one of the general secretaries of the American Bible Society, will address a union meeting of the Evangelical Churches in the First Presbyterian Church, in this city, Sunday, February 21, at 7:30 P. M. All are invited. There will be no collection.

That princely layman, R. W. Millsaps, of Jackson, Miss. has donated $50,000 to the new Mississippi Methodist College, on condition that the Church in Mississippi raise another $50,000. That is a fine start. Now, Mississippi Methodists demonstrate their gratitude by subscribing liberally to the new enterprise.

We are sorry to see that the election in Hinds county, Miss., on the local option question went against the prohibitionists by thirty-five majority. This is a reversal of the verdict of two years ago, which we are sorry to chronicle.

The announcement is made in the Texas Advocate that Bishop Key has decided to take up his residence at Fort Worth, Texas.

Dr. C. G. Andrews, secretary, has our thanks for a copy of the Minutes of the Mississippi Conference.

We are pained to chronicle the death of George Gunby, of Union Parish, La. He was the patriarch of Methodism in North Louisiana, being in his eighty-ninth year. We trust some friend will send us an obituary of this staunch Methodist.

Dr. W. C. Black will preach the dedicatory sermon in the new church at McNair, Miss., March 10, eleven A. M.

The New Mississippi College.

MR. EDITOR: The joint commission appointed by the Mississippi and North Mississippi Conferences to take steps towards the establishment of a college in Mississippi held a meeting yesterday in this city. Of the twelve members of the commission, ten were present, viz.: T. L. Mellen, A. F. Watkins, W. C. Black, R. W. Millsaps, W. L. Nugent and L. M. Sexton, of the Mississippi Conference, and J. J. Wheat, S. M. Thames, T. J. Newell and D. L. Sweatman, of the North Mississippi Conference.

I have not taken my pen in hand with a view of telling you all that was done, or sketching our plans for the future. All this will be given you in due time and in official form. I pen this brief note simply to gladden your heart and that of the church with the tidings that we have made a most auspicious beginning. One of our princely laymen, R. W. Millsaps, of this city, starts our endowment fund with a donation of $50,000, on condition that we raise an additional $50,000. Will the required condition be met? Of course it will. We have struck the word "fail" from our vocabulary. More anon.

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. J. D. Clymes writes from Meridian, Miss., February 12: "I see, in the Minutes of Mississippi Conference, an omission of $13 65 self-denial money, which was paid to the receiver of that fund. For the information of the people of West Pearl circuit, will you publish this?"

—"Itinerant" writes from Coushatta, La.: "A storm without signals! At the parsonage everything was quiet and serene when, without the slightest warning, there appeared large drops, the invariable precursor of a storm; and, in a short time, it was upon us in full force. How it did storm! And when it cleared up it took the whole family nearly half a day to clear the dining room table, chairs and floor, so that the usual routine could be resumed. And now the sun shines brighter after the storm."

—Rev. J. D. Newsom writes from Duncan, Miss., February 13: "I am at Duncan with an appointment adjacent. Here in the Mississippi Valley the work begins slow in the winter season. The mud is almost intolerable for any mode of transportation, except on the railroad. I have made every appointment since Conference, and only failed one Sunday to have some show of a congregation. I am doing something for the ADVOCATE."

—Rev. H. S. Johns writes from Washington, La., February 11: "My work comes on nicely; good congregations, considering the weather and mud. Expect to begin a meeting at this place next Sunday. Bro. Blocker, of Rayne, is to help me. Remember me in your prayers, during that time especially. Expect to build a church in Waxia this year. Am making a thorough canvass for the ADVOCATE."

—Rev. J. G. Sibley writes from Fryar, Miss., February 12, 1889: "We are well pleased with our new charge—Providence, and the good ladies often remind us of the Queen of Sheba when she went up to see Solomon. The signs of the times are full of hope and cheer. There is another prosperous year before us. God has done for us all we asked, and more too. God bless you and the dear old ADVOCATE! I am making a vigorous effort to get it into the homes of all my people."

—Rev C. R. Godfrey, in a letter from West Melville, La., to the publisher, says: "At our prayer meeting here, on last Saturday evening, we had more than 100 present; preached Sunday morning and evening; five adults added to the church. We think we are on the upward grade in all the interests of the church. In a talk to my Sunday school here, a few Sabbaths since, I told them about having attended your Sunday-school during Conference, and what a man you are, etc., and that your Sunday-school is the best that I know anything about in the Conference, except West Melville Sunday-school. I would like for you to come up to see us some time, and I will let you talk and pray to and for us as much as you please."

In Maine there is a business like preacher who distributes to his congregation a printed outline of his morning sermon, which not only helps them to follow him as he preaches, but enables them to carry away the sermon in a concrete form.

BOOKS.

THE DESMOND HUNDRED. By Jane G. Austin. Tickner Paper Series. Tickner and Company, Boston; George F. Wharton, 5 Carondelet St., New Orleans. Price, fifty cents.

This is a story of great interest. Its chief characters being ritualistic priests. It lacks nothing of romance, warmth or poetry. The scenes are laid in New England and the Bahamas. When it first appeared the Churchman pronounced it "the strongest American novel that has been produced for many a year."

A REPLY TO THE "PROBLEM OF Methodism." (By J. M. Boland, D. D.) By Leo Rosser, D. D.

This pamphlet of 126 pages is devoted exclusively to the refutation of Dr. Boland's "Problem." It is a candid and energetic examination of the arguments of the "Problem." The main arguments of the "Problem" are successfully refuted; some points seem a little obscure. On the whole, the "Reply" is a success, and should be read by all who have read the "Problem."

—The Power of the Printed Bible. By E. Giluran, D. D. American Bible Society, New York. A paper read at the General Conference of Missions in London, June, 1888.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the furniture advertisement of J. G. Grant, of New Orleans, which will be found in this issue of the Gazette. Mr. Grant has been very successful in his business, having established a large trade all through the Southern States, and we always prefer to deal with a successful man, because there must be some inducement in the goods he sells or something in his way of doing business to account for this success. In this instance we attribute it to the fact that Mr. Grant buys direct from the factories in large quantities for cash and can afford to sell cheap; that all goods are sold strictly on their merits and no misrepresentations of any kind allowed, and that he guarantees everything he sells, and, if not found exactly as represented, the parties buying from him can have their money refunded. We would strongly advise our readers who are going to New Orleans for the Mardi Gras celebrations to call at 50 and 52 Baronne St. when in the city, and those who do not intend going can write and get a handsome illustrated catalogue, which will enable them to make suitable selections. —Magnolia Gazette.

Literary Notes.

The "Story of Louisiana," the third in the notable series of the "Story of the States," is from the graceful pen of Maurice Thompson, one of the most gifted of our younger authors. His record of the varying fortunes of the Pelican State is full of romantic interest. Readers of Cable will find it fascinating and instructive.

One of the most delightful books of the New Year is Horace Lunt's "Across Lots," which has much of the quaint charm and out-door feeling of John Burroughs'. It will recall to many a tired business man happy hours spent in the woods when he was a country lad.

The first volume of Thomas Stevens' narrative of his journey "Around the World on a Bicycle" has gone into its second edition.

For a book of sermons to run through five editions is sufficiently unusual to attract especial attention to the late Dr. Roswell Hitchcock's volume, "Eternal Atonement."

Dr. Carl Lumholtz, of the University of Christiania, Norway, is now in this country, and has just delivered a lecture in New York City, giving some account, with the aid of stereopticon views, of a long sojourn which he made among the savage native tribes of Northeastern Australia. The narrative, in full, of his strange and thrilling experiences, will be published by the Scribners under the title of "Among Cannibals." The book will have maps and a hundred illustrations.

Dr. Field's "Gibraltar" is proving one of the most popular of that author's notable series of books of travel.

Military men will be interested in the announcement of a new edition of Col. Blunt's army manual under the new title, "Firing Regulations for Small Arms." It will be brought out by the Scribners.

Those who are planning for a trip to Bermuda to escape the bad weather of the next two months, will find that Julia C. R. Dorr's "Bermuda: an Idyl of the Summer Islands," is a charming piece of literature as well as an invaluable guide book. Its popularity is attested by the fact that it is now in its fourth edition.

A volume of very rare interest will be the "Essays, Religious, Social, Political," by David Atwood Wasson, soon to be issued from the press of Lee and Shepard, Boston. The book will include an autobiographic sketch, written in vigorous and interesting language, and a biography of Mr. Wasson, by his friend and contemporary, O. B. Frothingham. Mr. Wasson was one of the most profound men of his day, and his essays and poems will find a permanent place in literature.

Publisher's Department.

Three Reasonable Requests.

1. Let every subscriber carefully read this issue of the ADVOCATE, and then show the paper to some neighbor who does not take it, and ask him to subscribe.

2. Let every minister arrange for a complete canvass of his circuit, so that every family of every Methodist congregation may have the paper offered to them. Where the minister can not do this personally, let him appoint some suitable person to do it.

3. Let the benefit and duty of subscribing for our church paper be mentioned in every congregation, and all reasonable efforts put forth to obtain new subscribers, and secure the renewal of old ones.

"Will you have a piece of this mince pie, Tommy?" said Tommy's aunt, with whom he was taking his dinner. "Please, ma'am," replied the little fellow, holding his plate, "but you might put two pieces on now; mamma has taught me never to pass my plate back for the second piece."

Effective Advertising.

"I spend $5,000 a week in advertising, and pay a skilful man—a former newspaper editor, and a good one—$1,000 a month to do it for me. I make money by it. Advertising is the leverage with which this store has been raised up. I do not see how any large, and successful retail business can be done without liberal advertising. Continuous advertising, like continuous work, is the most effective."—John Wanamaker.

"You can't go home when it's raining like this. You'd better stay and have dinner with us." "Oh, it's not quite so bad as that."

Next to your subscription the greatest favor you can extend the ADVOCATE, in a business point, is to mention the paper in writing to advertisers.

CHANGES.—We have quite a number of orders to change the address of subscribers; some without signatures, and others who do not give the former address. Under these circumstances, change can not be made.

THE MARVELOUS CANDLE CACTUS.

Words can not describe the charming beauty of this grand plant. It grows 2 to 4 ft. high, branching like a tree, and producing hundreds of golden yellow, sweet-scented flowers, large and double, like enormous roses, making a show which no plant can equal. The stems are covered with a net work of shining spines which reflect a luminous ray of light that can be seen for a long distance, hence its name—Candle. This plant has been known and eagerly sought in the wilds of Mexico for years, and seed is now offered for the first time. It germinates quick and grows rapidly, soon making fine, large blooming plants. Seed, per packet 20 cts. together with a new Everlasting Flower Free, and our Grand Catalogue. In ordering, ask for Catalogue if you do not already possess it. Order at once, before the supply is exhausted. You may never have another opportunity of getting this most rare and prized plant.

THE RAINBOW PLANT This is one of the most conspicuous of all plants. It grows 2 or 3 feet high, in beautiful pyramidal spirals of thick foliage, which is of the most beautiful and intense colors: Scarlet, Rose, Pink, Amaranth, Yellow, Green, Orange, etc. Radiant like a Rainbow. It is one of the very easiest plants to grow, either in the garden or pots. Per pkt. 50 cents.

SWEET NIGHTINGALE The grandest of evening flowers, opening about sunset and lasting till noon next day. Flowers, pure white and enormous size, 8 inches long and 4 wide, its fragrance powerful and delicate. Per pkt. 20c.

PANSY, THUNDER CLOUD A new sort with enormous coal-black flowers, which are bordered with a red and white ring; magnificent. Per package, 15 cents.

SPECIAL OFFER! For 60 cents we will mail one packet seed each of above five grand new flowers, together with our catalogue and another elegant novelty free.

THE HOST AND THE GUESTS.
(A Puzzle.)

BY CAIN BRITTLE.

A	B	C	D	E	F	G	H	I

In room marked A two men he placed;
The third he lodged in B;
The fourth to C was then assigned,
The fifth retired to D;

In E the sixth he tucked away;
In F the seventh man;
The eighth and ninth in G and H,
And then to A he ran.

Whereln the host, as I have said,
Had laid two travelers by;
Then taking one—the tenth and last—
He lodged him safe in I.

Nine single rooms—a room for each—
Were made to serve for ten;
And this it is that puzzles me
And many wiser men.

One Million Dolls.

Imagine for one moment one million dolls! Placed side by side, they would almost extend around Boston Common. And yet this number, it is said, has been ordered, and what is still more alarming, these charming little tots are all to be fitted internally with phonographs invented by Edison. Touch a spring and they begin, some to sing, some to pray, and some to scold. They can be made to talk in any language and sing secular music or anthems. It is true they will keep on singing the same tune and repeating the same soliloquy, which may become tedious in time. To obviate this there can be an interchange of dolls. The pet which sings "Home, Sweet Home," on Commonwealth Avenue, can be sent on a visit to Beacon street, and the doll exchanged will recite "How doth the little busy bee."

It is said that one million of these dolls are to be manufactured by a company which has a stock valuation of two millions of dollars. One million of dolls at $5 each will be $5,000,000, and this is the number that the market of the Northern States will absorb. The amount to be derived from the rest of the world can be imagined. The Phonographic Doll Company will be listed in Boston and New York, and daily quotations of the stock will be given. The possibilities of this company are beyond Calumet and Hecla, Tamarack, Pullman Palace Car Company, or even the Chemical Bank of New York. At least monthly dividends will be declared, and the doll mania will never die out; because, if you tire of hearing "The boy stood on the burning deck," you can exchange it at the headquarters of the company, paying a slight compensation, for one which will ask you, "Why should the spirit of mortal be proud?" Childless couples can have a family of these dolls, and even old bachelors may be able to realize with Tupper that "a babe in the house is a wellspring of pleasure."—Boston Journal.

Little Three-Year-Old's Story With a "Moral."

A little girl, aged three, informed her mother that she knew a beautiful story about a giant. "Would you like to hear it, mamma?" asked she.

"Well, then," she continued, "once there was a great big ugly giant, and he was very fond of eating little girls. One day, as he was walking along through the woods, he met two little girls—one very good little girl, and one very naughty one.

"First he took a bite out of the good little girl, and he made up a horrid face, and said she tasted awful nasty; then he took a taste of the bad little girl, and he smacked his lips and said she tasted dreadful nice, 'cause you see, mamma, she had eaten nuts and raisins and candy when her mother told her not to, and that made her taste sweet. Then the old giant said, 'I'll never again eat a good little girl. I'll always eat the bad ones.'"—Wide-Awake.

Giving Up a Career.

"I'm goin' to be a soldier, ma, when I grow up," said Bobby, as he crawled into bed, "and fight an wars and battles."

"All right, Bobby; now go to sleep."

In the morning she shook him for the fourth time, and said:

"Bobby, you must get up; the idea of a soldier lying in bed at this hour!"

"Well, ma," said Bobby, "I've changed my mind about being a soldier."—New York Sun.

MR. EDITOR: Nearly two years have glided by on the swift wings of time since last I wrote. As my visits are "few and far between," I trust this will escape the waste-basket and come to the eyes of our gentle readers. As I take great delight in reading the children's column, I concluded to write again. My mind will ever revert to the many happy hours I have experienced while perusing its contents. Your reliable paper is a frequent visitor to our home, and am glad to say we would not do without it. I attend school regularly. My studies are geography, grammar, mathematics, history, spelling, writing, reading and music. I think so much of my tutors. My age is eleven. I enjoy going to Sunday-school every Sunday very much. I study my lesson on Saturday afternoon. Our pastor is Bro. B. F. Jones. This is his third year with us. I think so much of him. I am writing this letter, as it is my desire to take him by surprise. We have had our quarterly meeting. Our new presiding elder is Rev. Mr. McDonald. I have heard him preach once. This is, indeed, one of the loveliest evenings I have ever seen. "One of those days to mortals given to win our souls from earth to heaven." I will ask a few questions before closing: How many times is "Jane," "cypress" and "winter" mentioned in the Holy Scriptures? I fear I have taken more space than belongs to me; so I will close by saying, Jesus is my guide and the light that I am trying to follow.

Your little friend,

MAGGIE F. MORRIS.

WOODVILLE, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: It has been a year since I wrote to your valuable paper, so I have concluded to write again. I am living in Washington now, but my home is at Plaisance, where my papa lives, who often writes for your paper. I am going to school to Mr. Hardesty. He has twelve pupils. I am twelve years old, and am studying arithmetic, reading, fifth reader, grammar and geography. I have no pets, but I have some little ships that I sail, when I can spare the time from my books. They have regular sails and rudders. It would make the little cousins laugh to see the ships "plough the raging Atlantic Ocean," as I call the pool in the back yard.

Yours truly,

ABRAHAM FOSTER.

WASHINGTON, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little boy fifteen years of age. My papa takes the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, and I like it very well. I like to read the little cousins' letters. I go to school and I study arithmetic, reading and spelling. Bro. R. Harry is our pastor. I will close, for fear of the waste-basket, asking where in the Bible is the word "one" spoken thirty-two times in the same chapter? Please correct all mistakes. I will close with good wishes to your ADVOCATE.

RAMOW SPELL.

LAFAYETTE, Louisiana.

MR. EDITOR: As I have not written to the ADVOCATE for some time, I will write again. Bro. Howard is our preacher this year. We have not seen him yet. Bro. J. W. Ellison was our preacher last year. We all liked him so much. Will some of the little cousins tell me where "wash-pot" is found in the Bible? With many good wishes to the ADVOCATE and editor, I am,

Your little friend,

MR. EDITOR: I never have seen a letter from this place, and I thought I would write to you. I am a little girl, and take great interest in reading the children's letters. I will now answer Lucius D. Metchee's question. "Foxes" are mentioned eight times in the Bible. Who will answer this question: How often is "modest" mentioned in the Bible, and where? I hope to remain,

Your friend,

Household.

The Home Library.

We form judgments of men from little things about their houses, of which the owner, perhaps, never thinks. Flowers about a rich man's house may signify only that he has a good gardener, or that he has refined neighbors, and does what he sees them do. But men are not accustomed to buy books unless they want them. If, on visiting the dwelling of a man of slender means, we find that he contents himself with cheap carpets and very plain furniture, in order that he may buy books, he rises at once in our esteem. Books are not made for furniture; but there is nothing else that so beautifully furnishes a house. To spend several days in a friend's house, and hunger for something to read, while you are treading on costly carpets, and sitting on luxurious chairs, and sleeping upon down, is as if one were bribing your body for the sake of cheating your mind.

Books are the windows through which the soul looks out. A house without books is like a room without windows. No man has a right to bring up his children without surrounding them with books, if he has the means to buy them. It is a wrong to his family. Children learn to read by being in the presence of books. The love of knowledge comes with reading, and grows upon it; and the love of knowledge in a young mind is almost a warrant against the inferior excitement of passion and vices.

Let us pity those poor rich men who live barrenly in great bookless houses. Let us congratulate the poor that in our day books are so cheap that a man may every year add a hundred volumes to his library for the low price of what his tobacco and his beer would cost him. Among the earliest ambitions to be excited in clerks, workmen, journeymen, and, indeed, among all that are struggling up in life from nothing to something, is that of owning, and constantly adding to, a library of good books. A little library, growing larger every year, is an honorable part of a young man's history. It is a man's duty to buy books. A library is not a luxury, but one of the necessaries of life.—Western Christian Advocate.

"SIT" AND "SET."—Many of the agricultural journals are sorely troubled to know whether a hen sits or sets. If some editor of dignity would set a hen on the nest, and the little editors would let her sit, it would be well for the world. Now a man, or woman either, can set a hen, although they can not sit her; neither can they set on her, although the old hen might sit on them by the hour if they would allow. A man can not set on the washbench; but he could set the basin on it, and neither the basin nor the grammarians would object. He could sit on a dog's tail if the dog were willing, or he might set his foot on it. But if he should set on the aforesaid tail, or sit his foot there, the grammarians as well as the dog would howl. And yet, strange as it may seem, the man might set the tail aside and then sit down, and neither be assailed by the dog nor the grammarians.—Christian World.

An eminent physician states that he has frequently traced the cause of indigestion, especially when several members of a family seem to be affected, to a dyspeptic cook. She is constantly handling the food, kneading the bread, trimming the meat and washing the vegetables. Her bodily magnetism is thus imparted to the various eatables, and transmitted through them into different stomachs. If it be unhealthy to be rubbed by an irritable, dyspeptic person, or to sleep with such an one, how much more should we avoid eating the food prepared by one who has uncleanly habits, or is in any way diseased! While the real danger of contamination from this source may be very slight, it will do no harm for mistresses to have an eye to the health, as well as the capacity, of a servant who is to have charge of the family cooking.—Exchange.

The most potent remedies for the cure of disease have been discovered by accident. The first dose of Dr. Shallenberger's Antidote for Malaria was given, as an experiment, to an old lady almost dying from the effects of Malaria, on whom Quinine acted as a poison. One dose cured her; and a single dose has cured thousands since. It is the only known Antidote for the poison of Malaria. Sold by Druggists.

Prince and Peasant, the Millionaire and Day Laborer, by their common use, this remedy, attest the world-wide reputation of Ayer's Pills. Leading physicians recommend these pills for Stomach and Liver Troubles, Costiveness, Biliousness, and Sick Headache; also, for Rheumatism, Jaundice, and Neuralgia. HAYDEN—MARY LOUISA HAYDEN was born and raised in Louisiana; was married to Bro. Elisha Hayden; joined the Baptist Church in 1872; moved to Wilkinson county, Miss.; joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, 1881; was converted on June 3, 1885, while at family prayer, being conducted by the writer, and died December 8, 1888, aged thirty-nine years.

She died in the faith, and as the veil was being lowered she could see over in the world beyond. Her exclamation was, "Heaven is my home;" and her advice to those around her was to meet her in heaven. Her life has been one of hardships and heart-aches, sorrows and disappointments, in this world, but they are ended and she is now bathing her soul in the sunlight of God's love. She leaves a husband and five children to mourn for her. Husband and children, mourn not; but only be faithful. Mamma is better off; she is now resting in the arms of Jesus. You will see her in the sweet by-and-by. Bro. Hayden and the children have the sympathy and prayers of the writer. M. L. WHITE.

GRIFFIN—Mrs. LAURA and Mr. G. G. GRIFFIN died near Cary, Miss., October 5, and November 3, 1888. Mrs. Griffin was born October 25, 1824, and Mr. Griffin, November 3, 1811. They were married January 25, 1840, lived together nearly fifty years, and departed this life in less than a month of each other.

Mrs. Griffin had for many years been a quiet, sincere, happy Christian, living in the fond expectation of a brighter and better life in the sweet by-and-by. Although death came unexpectedly, and she was not permitted to speak, yet her life doth speak with great force.

Mr. Griffin had in earlier life been an earnest worker in the church, but forsook God and gave many days to sin. The death of his good wife caused him to reflect, and we hope to repentance. A few days before his death he called his daughter to his bed-side and told her he was happy and ready to depart and join his loved companion on the shining shore.

W. D. DOMINICK.

JONES—ANTOINETTE JOHNSON was born in Coosa county, Ala., in 1832; married to S. V. Jones, December 18, 1879; died near Nittayuma, Miss., December 29, 1888.

"Nette" as she was familiarly called, came to this place when but five years old; joined the church at Shiloh, Yazoo county, when in her seventeenth year; thenceforth living a devout, earnest, consistent Christian life. Nette was an affectionate, dutiful wife; a devoted mother, warm in her friendships. Mrs. Jones loved her church, found pleasure in its services, and lived so that death found her ready and waiting for an immortal crown.

Her illness was brief; but before departing she called her husband and friends about her, bade them "adieu," and requested them all to meet her in heaven; for, said she, "I am going to be with my precious little children in the beautiful world of bliss."

W. D. DOMINICK.

BRADFORD—MARTIN VAN BUREN BRADFORD, of Catahoula parish, La., departed this life at his residence, on January 16, 1889.

Bro. Bradford joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, about two years ago, since which time he has lived an exemplary Christian life. He was devoted to all the interests of the church and to every interest of his country and his fellow-man. His life was in every respect above reproach, and he was the recognized leading figure in his community. "The mantle has fallen from him;" but who can take it up? His death was sudden and unexpected, caused by congestion, but his Master found him watching.

GEO. T. ASHLEY.

WRENN—Died, near Minden, La., December 7, 1888, MATTIE VIVIEN, infant daughter of A. G. and Millie Wrenn, aged three months and four days. Again these devoted parents are sorely bereaved. Less than two years ago they lost their first-born, and now another. Oh, how hard to give up these little ones; but Jesus has said, "of such is the kingdom of Heaven."

H. C. WHITE.

MADAGASCAR.—The London Missionary Society continues to push its work here with increasing success notwithstanding the political changes and the aggressive attitude of the Church of Rome. With its 30 English missionaries, it reports the astounding number of 818 native ordained ministers, and 1,395 native preachers, 61,000 church members and 230,000 adherents. But as yet scarcely one-half of the population has been reached by the gospel.

Measuring to Emergency.

It is not well to believe all you hear. This is even a worse fault than faith in nothing. Among other dismal precedents we have long accepted is the belief that catarrh is incurable. But precedent is seldom cheerful and often inexact. It comes to us from a time when means were unsuited to the ends in view.

We alter this proportion in these days. For success implies the ability to measure to emergency, no matter how desperate. In this way Compound Oxygen is valuable. At least, such is the inference from the following:

ALMA, Neb., Feb. 13, 1888.

"I do unhesitatingly say that Compound Oxygen will cure catarrh."

HON. H. C. GRIFFITH.

ATLANTA, Georgia.

"I still recommend your remedy to my friends who are afflicted, and why should I not? It saved my wife's life and cured my boy of catarrh."

MR. WALTER T. FOWLES.

COLUMBIA CITY, Ind., March 19, 1888.

"It is about three years now since I had used the treatment to such good purpose for catarrh, and I find it has not lost its virtues in the least."

HENRY MCLALLEN.

We publish a brochure of 200 pages regarding the effect of Compound Oxygen on invalids suffering from consumption, asthma, bronchitis, dyspepsia, catarrh, hay fever, headache, debility, rheumatism, neuralgia; all chronic and nervous disorders. It will be sent, free of charge, to anyone addressing Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa., or 331 Montgomery St., San Francisco, Cal.

Night Photography.

The Picayune thus describes the process of taking photographs at night, as practiced by Theodore Lilienthal, of this city:

At 7:30 o'clock last evening several gentlemen friends and representatives of the press gathered at the parlors of Messrs. Lilienthal & Burell, artist photographers, No. 137 Canal street, to witness the operation of taking photographs at night.

When the difficulties of obtaining good negatives in cloudy weather, owing to the absence of light, is taken into consideration, the process of taking portraits by night was not only interesting, but truly astonishing to the uninitiated. Frequent experiments have from time to time been made by the use of the flash light and instantaneous process, but the results were not exactly satisfactory. Mr. Theodore Lilienthal, however, continued making experiments, not only with the light, but also with the process of developing the negatives obtained by its means, and the experiments last night demonstrated their complete success.

After conducting the party through the establishment, which occupies the four upper floors of the building, explaining the methods of taking negatives, developing the same and printing copies therefrom, the visitors were invited into the parlor on the third floor, where they seated themselves and entered into conversation. Meantime the artist, Mr. Lilienthal, commenced his preparations for taking a picture. While the conversation was at its height, there was a sudden and brilliant flash of light, as though a vivid flash of lightning had illuminated the room, making the gas jets appear yellow and dim in comparison.

Mr. Lilienthal announced that he had taken the pictures of the party by this flash of light, but it was so astonishing that few of those present could believe it. He requested that the party remain seated, and he would take another picture, which he did, and then invited all into the dark room to witness the process of development.

The room was closed, and a red glass shade drawn down over the single gas jet in the dark room, and the white glass plates, upon which not a discoloration could be seen, were subjected to the chemical bath. Slowly the forms of the seven parties who were in the group began to assume shape, and finally, held up to the light, the negative was seen to be complete and the picture satisfactory to the operator. Several other pictures were taken, which Mr. Lilienthal declared would show perfectly on the prints which would be taken from the negatives.

Material of Books.

If we of this stirring generation were suddenly jolted backward to the time when the art of writing consisted in painting with different kinds of ink, or when events were recorded by planting trees or throwing stones into a pile, we should begin to appreciate our current privileges. Visitors at the British Museum are often entertained by the examination of specimens of the earliest modes of writing on bricks, tables of stone, ivory, the bark of trees and the leaves of trees. In the Sloanian library is a nabob's letter on a piece of bark, about two yards long and richly ornamented with gold. There are also several copies of the Bible written on palm leaves. The ancients appear to have written on any leaves they could find adapted to the purpose. Hence the name leaf, or a book, referring to a tree, was derived. The Babylonians made their contracts of business on tiles or broken pots. The treaties between the Romans, Spartans and the Jews were written on brass. The speech of Claudius, engraved on a plate of bronze, is preserved in the town hall of Lyons, in France. There are wooden manuscripts which must have existed prior to 1423. In the shepherd state people wrote with horns and awls; then they invented an iron hodkin. After that the stylus came into use, made sharp at one end to write with, and blunt and broad at the other for effacing and correcting. But the Romans found these sharp instruments dangerous, as vicious persons used them for daggers. A schoolmaster was killed on one occasion with them in the hands of his own scholars.—Exchange.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS

J. G. GRANT

50 and 52 Baronne Street,

OFFERS THE FOLLOWING SUGGESTIONS:

THERE are two ways to make money. One is to earn it; the other is to save it. There are two ways of saving money. When you save a dollar by putting it in the bank you do well, but when you save a dollar by shrewd purchasing you do better. The first is saving; the second is in reality earning. So there are two ways of earning money--by labor and by wise purchasing.

LET ME SAY A WORD ABOUT PURCHASING:

The FIRST THING to learn in order to become a successful purchaser is that price means nothing until you have seen the goods. The fact that Bedroom Suits, for instance, cost $100 in one store and $65 in another tells you nothing. The $100 suit may be worth $125, while the $65 suit may not be worth carrying away. It is only when you have compared the goods as well as the prices that you are in a position to judge of what is cheap and what is not. Goods may be too cheap sometimes. Prices don't always tell the whole story. Either know the goods or know the dealer. If he has a reputation for liberality and straightforward dealing, people soon find it out. When you learn that he is carrying a larger and better stock, and that his trade is increasing rapidly, both in the city and the adjoining states, why it means something. It means that his business methods have been approved, that people have discovered his liberal ways and taken advantage of them, and it points you the direction for your next purchase.

The SECOND PRECEPT in successful purchasing is that the best is always cheapest in the end. Many people who have never visited my warerooms have the idea that only cheap goods are sold because I do not put on much outside style and occupy a showy and very high priced store, but one visit will prove that this is a great mistake. Remember that there is a big difference between CHEAP GOODS and GOODS CHEAP. Go elsewhere for cheap goods, but come here for goods cheap. The man who sells cheap goods sells his customers at the same time. I am not in that line of business. The public are beginning to understand the difference, and my trade proves it very clearly. A word to the wise is sufficient. Call and see how cheap fashionable furniture of the best quality can be sold.

DOMESTIC.

A joint meeting of Union and Confederate veterans was held in Washington, on the fourteenth instant. The object was to devise a plan for preserving the battlefield of Chickamauga, on which those present were engaged, and marking the positions of all the forces that participated in the fight.

The last of the State receptions of President Cleveland to the officials drew an unusually large crowd to the White House, on the fourteenth. The reception was to the army and navy.

It is said at the State Department that there is not the slightest wish or desire on the part of the President or Secretary Bayard to embarrass the incoming administration with respect to its Samoan policy. It is not at all likely that the present administration will arrogate to itself the selection of the American representative at the proposed conference at Berlin, or that it will take any action whatever that might tend to commit the next administration.

The war against Catholic schools in Massachusetts has been again declared by the revival of the attack on the French-Canadian Catholic School at Haverhill. The decision of Judge Carter, declaring the law that gives local school committees power to regulate private schools inoperative, has aroused a storm of protest from the Protestant community.

Bishop Holland N. McTyeire, the senior Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and president of the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University, died at his residence on the university campus at nine o'clock, on February 15, after an illness of three months.

Gen. Gilman Marston has been tendered and accepted the appointment of United States Senator by the governor of New Hampshire, from March 4 until the Legislature in June provides for the next six years' term. He succeeds Senator Chandler.

There is great excitement in Northern Georgia, about sixty miles southeast of Chattanooga, over the discovery of a vein of quartz four feet wide, 500 feet deep and three miles long, which is very rich in silver. The quartz has been thoroughly tested, and yields $30 in pure silver to the ton.

An organization known as "Personal Rights League" has been formed in Chicago. Its object is to resist the prohibition movement as a menace to the rights guaranteed by the Federal government. The organization has issued an address to the citizens of the United States, warning them of the dangers which threaten them in the prohibition movement, and calling on all who are opposed to prohibition principles to join in the work of fighting them by forming local assemblies under the plan of the parent organization in Chicago.

President Cleveland announces that to enable him to dispose of pending business requiring his personal attention before the close of his term of office, it will be an absolute necessity that he have this week for such work free from interruptions, and he must, therefore, be excused to all callers.

A fourteen-story building in Chicago, one of the tallest office buildings in America, in process of erection, collapsed on February 18. A number of workmen rushed out in time to escape being crushed.

The French ministry was defeated on the revision question, on the fourteenth, and the resignation of the Cabinet has been tendered to President Carnot.

Further advices from Shanghai by the China steamer state that the famine in Anhui and Kiang-Su is worse than at first reported. In one province 300 families are starving, and altogether several millions are suffering from a famine caused by drouth two years in succession.

In the German Reichstag, on February 15, a white book in reference to the Samoan matter was introduced. It comprises forty-four documents, extending from December 8, 1886, to February 5, 1889.

A white marble figure of the late Emperor William, similar to the figures of his parents, has been placed in the Charlottenburg mausoleum.

It is said Bismarck's influence over Emperor William is waning, and Count Waldersee continues to grow in imperial favor. An open collision between Bismarck and Waldersee is anticipated over the artillery credits during the debate in the Reichstag early in March. The report of Waldersee, now before the Bundesrath, demands a large extra credit. Bismarck opposes the demand, and Schellendorf sides with the Chancellor, denying that there is any necessity for the amount Waldersee recommends. The Emperor is undecided, but he shows a tendency in favor of Waldersee.

Advices from Vienna state that Herr Von Tisza's position causes grave anxiety. Popular feeling in Hungary threatens to overthrow the ministry, leaving a way for the return of Count Andrassy, with a foreign policy not in accord with that of Count Kalnoky.

The Czar, Czarina and Czarwitch will attend a reception to be given by Sir R. D. Morier, British ambassador at St. Petersburg, this week. In view of the quarrel between Sir Robert and Prince Bismarck, much comment has been caused by this announcement, as the attendance of the members of the imperial family at the reception will be a mark of unusual patronage.

Count Herbert Bismarck daily receives long cipher dispatches from the German embassy at Paris and goes personally to present them to the Emperor. If the foreign officials faithfully reflect their chief's opinion, the gloomiest view is taken as to the results of the French crisis. Gen. Boulanger is considered to be master of the situation.

Success results from merit. Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer is placed before the public solely on its merits. Its success is indisputable.

Commercial Notes.

The potato crop of this country is estimated at 210,000,000 bushels, the largest ever harvested; hence the small shipments from abroad.

The employees of the various canning houses in the State of Maryland receive $10,500,000 annually in wages, in all 35,000 persons are employed in this industry, including boatmen and dredgers.

American manufacturers are supplanting the English in exports to Australia of stoves, locks, cutlery, steel wares, axes, plated ware, tools, ranges, lamps, and agricultural implements.—New York Star.

Persia is one of the foreign lands that is attracting the attention of American railway builders. The Legislature of Maine has been asked to charter "The Persia Railway Company," and it is said that citizens of that State have contracted with the Shah to build a road extending from Teheran to the Persian Gulf, 500 miles or more.—Railway Age.

A Catholic colonization society, with a capital stock of $100,000, divided into 1,000 shares, has been formed at Pittsburg, Pa. The objects of the society are to establish Catholic colonies in the South, engage in manufacturing, mining, lumbering, stock-raising, and so forth. Large tracts of suitable land will be secured in Northern Georgia and Alabama.—Boston Pilot.

O, TIRED HEART.

BY HANNAH CODDINGTON.

O, tired heart,
God knows!
Not you nor I
Who reach our hands for gifts
That wise love must deny.

his hands the tangled thread we place poor blind weaving with a shamed face, t of ours he sacredly will keep.

Bishop H. N. McTyeire.

e give this week some addi- l facts in the life and work ur deceased Bishop, which now will be interesting to readers. Dr. A. G. Hay- furnishes us with the fol- g memorial, read by him at on meeting of the Methodist ches in the city of Atlanta, ay, February 17:

out 9 o'clock Friday morn- February 15, after months ckness and suffering, Hol- Nimmons McTyeire, senior op of the Methodist Episco- Church, South, "fell on ." Conscious till within a minutes of his going away, ast words, uttered shortly 8 o'clock, were, "Peace, ." When Bishop Joshua was in the act of going out e body, Bishop McTyeire, ing by his bedside, asked od old man this question: hop, are you praying now?" now, sir," was the signifi- answer. There was no need; ork was done; his praying l. Commenting on these s in the funeral discourse, eire compared his sainted 's manner in reaching his ed haven to a great steamer, ecan now crossed, coming y to its place at the wharf, gines stopped, making the ovement by the momentum e voyage. When one has a long time ready, there is ng to do when the time s but to step on shore.

ey buried our Bishop's body t was all they could bury— morning on the beautiful us of the great university d founded. There rest the s of two of the Bishops of eroic age—William M. Mc- ree and Joshua Soule. We no man so worthy to find l there as he whom we to-night.

vidence prepared Bishop eire to do the work of a man. As the late Doctor k Pierce expressed it, in ing of his own ancestry, he e of good human stock." as born in Barnwell dis- S. C., July 28, 1824. To st he cherished his boyhood or the old farm, and held a property there because he the place. We owe much fact that he grew up in the ry in a simple, natural way. a life favored and fostered clear and sturdy common that gave him power to do reat duties that coming laid on his conscience. His ts were plain, steady-going ians; such a son could not have been bred in a fashionable or worldly home. When a lad, attending a Methodist school at Cokesbury, S. C., he joined the church of his people in 1837. Further preparation for college was made at Collinsworth Institute, a Methodist school at Talbotton, Ga., under that molder of men, Dr. James R. Thomas. He graduated at Randolph-Macon College, Virginia, then the foremost school of his church. His parents might have sent him to a fashionable school of the world's people. Had they made this mistake we would not have had our Bishop.

He began to "exercise his gifts" while yet a college student, making, with others like minded, excursions into the regions round about Boydton, the seat of the college. He joined the Virginia Conference in 1845, some months after the convention that met in Louisville, Ky., organized the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. He was a looker-on in Petersburg, Va., May, 1846, when the first General Conference met. That same year, while a probationer in the Conference, he was transferred to the Alabama Conference, and stationed in Mobile. In that city, November 9, 1847, he married the good woman who survives him, Miss Amelia Townsend, a cousin of the lady who became the second wife of the late Cornelius Vanderbilt. The unhasting and unfailing Providence was arranging for the great university that is an honor to our times. The young preacher served his church in Demopolis, Ala., and Columbus, Miss. When he was about thirty years old, he was stationed in New Orleans, where he built Felicity Street Church and founded the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE. He had not long been an editor till the church knew that a man of uncommon quality had risen up—a man not afraid, having opinions and a gift in expressing them that left no mind doubtful as to his meaning. It would be hard to find an obscure sentence in any writing or speech of his during his last thirty years.

He was a member of the General Conference that met in Nashville, Tenn., May, 1858—a Conference that brought together the best and noblest of our church that the old South produced, its consummate quality and flower. We see him, well drawn, in the Smithson engraving; tall, strong, rather rugged, not yet portly, self-poised, calm, but alert. At this Conference he was elected editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, the official organ of the church. He did noble work as editor of this paper till February, 1862, when he left the city upon the retreat of the Confederate army. He did not return till 1867, a year after he was made a Bishop. While within the Confederate lines he did what service he could, most of the time till the General Conference of 1866 being pastor in Montgomery, Ala.

He was not elected to the General Conference that was appointed for May, 1862, but that the war hindered from assembling. At Nashville, in 1858, he had done an unpopular thing—many unpopular things he had sense and grace to do while in the service of his church. He secured the passage of a law that exempted New Orleans from the old two years' limit in the appointment of pastors. His course in this matter was characteristic; a fact meant to him more than a tradition. He respected precedents; but he was also a maker of precedents. He thought that when men had been in New Orleans long enough to be reasonably safe from yellow fever, it was bad economy to send them away, only because two years had passed, making a levy for new men likely to die the first summer.

This action illustrates his characteristic way of thinking and planning for the church. He held to nothing simply because it was old; rejected nothing simply because it was new. The Conference that met in New Orleans, May, 1866, was the most radical—one may say revolutionary—in the history of our church. Many and great changes were introduced, notably lay representation. For these changes, particularly the radical changes involved in lay representation, McTyeire was more responsible than any score of leaders besides. He did all these things well; history has vindicated his clear prevision. With less than 500,000 members in 1866, he lived to see 1,200,000 in 1889.

McKendree gave Episcopal Methodism the elements of its constitution; McTyeire, more than any other, expounded and gave it living energy and harmonious expression. He had genius for ecclesiastical affairs; he was confessedly our chief jurist: his expositions of law are of first value; from his judgment on church law few cared to appeal. More than all our leaders and chief pastors, he unified and harmonized the discipline of the church. The appearance of his "Manual of the Discipline" made the law plain and easy of application. He might have been, had he been born too soon, for the work he did—had he lived in other countries and other times—among the greatest of the Popes. But, brought up as he was, and living as he did, he was no mere ecclesiastic. He was in his church its first statesman as well as chief pastor.

He was at college more famous for debate in the societies than for the niceties of scholarship—making in his first attempts, as he has told his friends, most inglorious failures. He was a learner always—getting out of books and papers and, perhaps, most of all, out of men of sense, the solid things he cared for. He had an admirable gift of getting out of a book or a man that which he wanted, not wasting time or burdening his memory with what served him no useful purpose. He was the best reader of newspapers, secular and church, I have known—falling with a sort of instinct upon what was worth reading, and laying it by in his retentive memory for use. He understood full well that his work lay among men in the busy world, and he kept up with what was going on. When, in writing or speaking, he wanted a fact, a thought, or truth, it came into place at his bidding. What was fine spun in metaphysics he did not care for. Perhaps he lacked faculty for its airy dreams and fine hair-splittings. The great truths of revelations and the great facts of life attracted him, and, as a public teacher, he made plain the meaning of the Word of God and the works of God. Few men I have heard could make so much out of the Old Testament history. He did not read into these old records, meanings foreign to them; the men lived before us again; we saw them, heard them, and knew them.

He did not attempt what is called oratory. He dealt in robust thoughts, presented in such style that attentive hearers remembered what he said. A restrained humor that never was irreverent underlay his thinking and flashed through his words. He that has humor is capable of pathos, and now and then, when the mood, not rare, but infrequent, was on him, there was a tender touch that brought a gush of tears. His picture of the death of the ascetic itinerant, Richmond Nolly, dying on his fast day in a Louisiana swamp, is one of the most exquisite etchings in religious biography. Once in Missouri, near the close of a sermon, he gave us a picture of a young mother, who had buried her baby, waking from a motherly dream and feeling in the dark by the bedside where the cradle had stood in which she had rocked her darling. Tears streamed from his eyes, and his voice, generally rough and monotonous, was sweet and musical while he recalled a pathetic experience in his own household. It was the death of that baby that inspired an editorial while he was in Nashville before the war, on "The Ministry of Infant Children," a production matchless of its kind, and that has been a comfort to thousands of hearts bereaved of little babes.

There was contradiction to a degree between his manner and his real nature. It did not grow out of affectation, of which he was incapable, but of a life-long habit of self-restraint. His marvelous self-poise was not a birth-gift; he learned it with a great price, as the chief captain, Lysias, obtained his Roman citizenship. He had most uncommon control of himself, and expended no little will-force in securing the result. Upon the great driving wheels of his mind he often threw the full pressure of strong and heavy brakes. Men seeing him in public life—particularly as he bare himself in the chair guiding a deliberative body—saw that he was a masterful man. They felt his strong hand; they saw that he could be stern, and most people thought him cold of heart. Not so; about his official life sometimes drifted the ice floes, but I know that his heart was warm as a summer sea. The last time I saw him he was walking about under the trees near his home, on the Vanderbilt campus, with a grandchild in each arm, talking, laughing and cooing with them. As he grew older it come to pass with him, as with all good men of his make-up, he grew softer, more tolerant, more tender. Age and sorrow and grace wrought in him the beauty of holiness. As the roots of his life went deeper down into experience, the fruit was fuller, richer, more mellow and good. No honest man of sense could lack in respect for such a man. He challenged confidence, and in those—it was not a large or miscellaneous company—who knew him truly and were close to him, he awakened a love stronger than is common between men.

He was a great chairman: deliberative bodies were never confused by his blunders, nor did they ever get the upper hand of him. He could not be hurried, but he made rapid progress with business, because he finished what was in hand, and had nothing to undo and do over again. He was, as a Bishop, careful to learn what he could of men, and given to do, at last, what he thought was the best thing. Conferences thought better of him at his second visit than his first, and after that, with few exceptions, were always glad to have him. He was a Methodist, warp and filling, but there was too much of him every way for the narrow notions of ecclesiastical bigotry or partisan intolerance. It was no surprise to me that a townsman of his, Senator Burns, a stalwart Catholic, paid a hearty tribute to his friend and neighbor when the news came to the Tennessee Legislature that he had gone from among them to come back no more.

He was a debater to be respected by the strongest and to be feared by him who had a weak or bad cause. Whether in a committee or Mission Board—and in this sort of work I have met with but one man equal to him—or in General Conference, he had singular mastery of himself, and, therefore, of others. He economized arguments, generally speaking towards the close of a debate, and using arguments to fit the case. His speech was brief, laconic; he excelled in stating a case. Had he been a lawyer, he would have been matchless before the Supreme Court. It was a rifle-cannon that he used—a six-pounder only, if that weight of metal was enough, but a twenty-inch that could pierce through the thickest steel when great guns were needed. And he could use one as easily as the other.

Such a man could not escape antagonism; no strong man can who stands by his conscience. He could stand more hammering than most men, not because he did not feel, but because he could endure. A few small men made it a business to fire into him poisoned arrows, and generally from ambush. He did not seem to notice, but he did; what hemorrhage he suffered was internal. He was, through and through, a game man, who did not cry out when he was hurt, or make an exhibition of his wounds. These antagonisms were a great blessing to him; they made him very careful not to deserve reproach, and very prudent in avoiding mistakes. And this may be added here: he was as little apt to make the same mistake twice as any man of our times. Once, some years ago, in talking to me at his house, he made a comment rich in unique humor—half Irish and half Scotch—upon the fatal blunder of Solomon in failing to learn what his enemy, "Jeroboam, the son of Nebat," might have taught him.

A thousand of his brethren will say: "We shall not see his like again." He was unique in his manifestation. He would have been a marked character in any time or line of life. Beginning now he could not repeat his career; he would be great in different ways. He brought into his own personal growth much that was characteristic of his times and people. He was a Southern man; the best of the old South was in him, and he had sense enough to know that the new South had come. He grew into a great tree, and now that his old place knows him no more, there is a vacant space as when a giant of the Yosemite falls to the earth.

He had the book-making instinct, and we hoped that he would live to write a commentary on the New Testament, not for commentators, but for the people. With his strong sense, spiritual insight and Saxon style, terse and clear as Abraham Lincoln's, he would have given us an exposition that the people wait for some natural and strong and good man to give them.

It is not without a touch of pathos that just before the final breakdown of African slavery he wrote a book on the "Duties of Christian Masters," that was the best deliverance ever made on this subject. His most important book is his "History of Methodism." It deserves the tributes paid to it, and will take its place among the standards and classics of the church.

But his noblest work is the Vanderbilt University. It is essentially his; without him it would not have been. Now that he is gone from among men the small jealousies, that could not all be kept down, will finally die. This man will not grow smaller as we move away from him, but larger. As when going out to sea and looking back at the receding shore, long after mere pretty shrubbery is lost to view, and small trees become a mere mass of color indistinguishable, a great palm, lifting itself on high, seems really taller than when we stood at its foot, so a man like Holland Nimmons McTyeire will be best seen and best known when we are farther from him than the contact of daily life allows.

I have not eulogized him. I have written briefly of him as I knew him, saw him, loved him for more than twenty years.

He was not given to much talk concerning his religious experience. But he walked with God; he served his own generation according to the will of God; he lived a long time, if we measure life by deeds; he wrought well in every field; his works do follow him. No wonder to those who knew him that, as he was departing, he whispered "goodbyes" to those who watched him go—"Peace, peace."

Somebody has an idea that the reason why many people have no interest in missions is that they fail to invest the principal. Certainly the Master's test, "Where thy treasure is, there will thy heart be also," applies in the sphere of missions quite as truly as everywhere else. Bear that in mind the next time the contribution box comes around.—Congregationalist.

Letter from Mexico.

MR. EDITOR: More than a month has elapsed since we arrived in the City of Mexico. We have known sickness and suffering in a strange land; but, through it all, have been sustained by him who has promised, "I am with you." We are now hard at work on the Spanish language, and are both teaching English some. We had an exhibition for the mission school at our little chapel last Friday night. The children all acquitted themselves well. They are very bright, intelligent children. After some very sweet music by the school, the premiums were awarded, and all joined with zest in singing the national hymn. The Mexican men, young and old, clapped their hands vigorously whenever the chorus was sung. Ah! how they love their country! Now, if we could only win them to love as truly the King of kings, Mexico would be a happy land. The sufferings of the women and children here appeal to my sympathies every hour of the day. Oh! for help for them. Woman's work for woman is sadly needed in this field. Like our sainted Bishop Marvin, I feel like crying out: "Oh, women of my country! will ye not come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty?" Only to-day my eyes were suffused with tears, as I saw a poor girl telling our pastor's wife, Mrs. Watkins, that she had been driven from home because she joined our church, and since she left her home her mother had died.

Bro. Watkins and the native preacher, Bro. Blanco, are doing a noble work. They spare not themselves in their efforts to win souls to Christ. But we want another church in this city, and other preachers. These brethren do all they can do, but we want more help. Consecrated men of God, and women, too. Our need is great, and the laborers very few. Some noble men have fallen in this field. I go to-morrow with my chaplet of flowers to place upon the sleeping dust of our sainted Bro. Freeman, and we will there remember the noble young wife, so early and sadly bereaved.

Now, I feel sure if the women of New Orleans knew the happy hearts they were making, and could see the good they are doing in our one little mission school, they would rally others to their help and double their pennies in this noble enterprise. How I wish some of them could have been with us in our little chapel last Friday night. The house was filled to its utmost capacity. Many, many Catholics were standing in the aisles. These exhibitions tell favorably on our work here. I am so eager to be able to talk to the women. I believe the good Lord is enlightening my understanding, so that in a few weeks I hope to be able to converse in Spanish. I trust our friends in the dear home-land are praying that the Lord of the harvest will give us success.

"Stroke No. 3."

MR. EDITOR: YOUR ADVOCATE, of February 14, came to us as a valentine. It is, I believe, fashionable for the ladies to reciprocate with a valentine, especially if they have a suspicion of the author, who, of course, does not sign his name (in full).—Page 2, column 5, "Stroke No. 3," of Bro. Tom Stirling's pounding, where he told the good sister that Jack "asked to be removed; said it would be an affliction to be returned"—I wonder if he also told her the circumstances that provoked Jack to declare it an affliction?

Most affectionately,

THE ANGEL OF PATIENCE.

A free paraphrase of the German.

BY J. G. WORTHEN.

To weary hearts, to mourning homes,
God's meekest angel gently comes;
No power has he to banish pain,
Or give us back our lost again;
And yet, in tenderest love, our dear
And heavenly Father sends him here.

There's quiet in that angel's glance,
There's rest in his tall countenance!
He marks to grief with lille cheer,
Not wounds with words the murmurer's ear;
But ills and woes he may not cure
He kindly trains us to endure.

Angel of patience! send to calm
Our feverish lives with cooling palm;
To lay the storm of hope and fear,
And recognette life's smile and tear;
The throbs of worldly pulse to still,
And make our own sure Father's will.

O thou who meetest on thy way,
With longings for the close of day:
He walks with thee, that angel kind,
And gently whispers, "Be resigned:
Bear up, bear on, the end shall tell
The dear Lord ordereth all things well!"

Kentucky Correspondence.

BY JOSEPH B. COTTRELL, D. D.

There has been a little breeze up here in ecclesiastical circles touching "the new theology:" and, as you have perceived, not a few of our hitherto-considered safest, surest men are, by the "holiness" writers, accounted heretical. Dr. D. P. Fitzgerald, Dr. J. E. Edwards, Dr. J. E. Baxter, Dr. Bowland, and some others (among them some of our Bishops), are held to be teaching that which Dr. Leo Rosser declares, in our Southern Review, to "deny what is at the very core of Methodism." Awhile back it was "original or birth sin" that was at issue; then came the question as to the order of the "blessings"—first and second blessings; and Dr. G. W. Kelly, of Louisville, by a mere statement before the city preachers' meeting of what is "the new theology" has, as the Wizard Oil men sing, put other "razors a-flyin' in the air." I care not to make any criticism touching these questions, but will have you to allow me a reproduction of a criticism, substantially, I made in Stedd's Monthly, awhile back, on one phase of spiritual life:

Criticism is dangerous. Much caution is requisite in killing a serpent which has coiled itself among the flowers of the garden border. Right intent and a benevolent prompting may presume on divine guidance; and the point of the sword of the Spirit will find its way between the joints and the marrow!—the word of wisdom will discern and discover, first in purity, then peaceably; and then it will yield itself easily to entreaties of the soul, making all luminous without and within.

Religionists who have sought to retain the soul in the primary, provisional measures; who have exaggerated feeling and discounted processes of mind; who have accounted the apostles of science and philosophy, and government, and commerce, and art, as non-spiritual in comparison with those who have been denominated evangelical or religious, have misconceived the true genius of spiritual life. I deem Emerson, and "George Eliot," and Herbert Spencer, and Calhoun, and Tennyson, quite as spiritually-minded as Luther, and Calvin, and Bushnell, and Watson, and Wesley. The acme of the third Person of the Divine Ministers is exponential of the non-passional, non-affectional and non-emotional, but eminently spiritual, and spiritualizing ministries of life; and the grand apostles of thought, in scientific and philosophic, in political and commercial and artistic and industrial ranges, are evangelists just as truly as are such as make discovery of the thought of God from out the written Word, and who handle the symbols of the sanctuary. "I believe in the Holy Ghost!" I believe in all ministries of the "true, the beautiful and the good," as of his power and direction. Terms of our communion with him, and by inspiration of him, are mountain ranges and valleys—rocks and forests wide, with birds and all other living forms on earth, in air or flood; the heaving sea and rushing torrent; the garniture of the sky, as sun-kissed clouds and rainbow signet-ring betoken the wedlock of earth and heaven, whence, by means of rain—the fruitful rain—the flowers are as daughters of the clouds. Are they not echoes of the stars? All laws of this varied expression of wisdom and power, and life and love, are a trellis upon which the mind may twine itself as it feels upward after God; and in tracing out the methods, and gathering the secrets of the elaborate design, we have the whisperings of a voice that ever speaks in truth, and the fragrance of that breath of which all beauty comes.

Under persuasions and appeals articulated thus through all forms of life and being, does the soul respond to the Holy Spirit, discovering its own riches of thought and sentiment—its own imperishable glories—through literatures that become the inheritance of the ages. What gems and jewels of moral and mental treasure gleam along the line, as mind has submitted itself to the guidance of the Spirit who hath a symbol and a sign for his every conception, and knoweth well how to apportion the lessons—the ravishing lessons of that communion of Life, best denominated spiritual because voided of the commerce and converse incident to the passional, affectional and emotional. "I believe in the communion of saints." Communion is the fruitage of the Spirit, transcendently above commerce and converse; and in order to our ripening into this heavenly franchise, we are to "live by every word that proceeded out of the mouth of God." What an utterance is this universe! There is no stammer or stutter here. "He that hath ears to hear let him hear!" Oh! this beating of gongs and braying of horns! This everlasting clatter of conflicting and afflicting orthodoxies! Are we never to be permitted to yield the ear singly to God? If our eye be single, the whole body shall be full of light! If the ear be single, the soul will be full of the harmony and melody of truth!—of life!

So, then, I presume to say that, at the vital point, we have had, by insistance of religionists on mere fervency in the name of "Holy Ghost religion," a detention rather than an advancement of the soul in the experiences of the Life; and many, in attempted conformity to, or compliance with, the mistaken demand, have fallen into affections whence cant and all manner of grotesqueness have ensued. When the grace of naturalness has possessed and informed the genuine pupils of the Holy Spirit, they have been outlawed as not spiritually-minded. In becoming genuinely spiritualized, we are weaned, but not divorced, from home-life and love. God's law of love knows no divorce, but is full of yearnings. The soul, retained in the primary and provisional measures of the Life, which I denominate the passional, affectional, and emotional, becomes rancid, and mistakes it for richness. Often it is a cooling, rather than heating, that is needed in Zion—a cooling by the breath of him who forms crystals for a purpose and a service just as pure and as necessary in their turn as is flame of fire in its place and season. It is divine wisdom that spreads the mantle of snow upon the wheat and over the grass. Man's wisdom would lead to building, instead, trees in the field. Underneath the snow the grass grows. After this analogy, have we the ministries of grace: and thoughts, like snow-flakes, from minds that seem like clouds that know no lightning, fall unheralded by thunder. The most potent ministries of grace, as of nature, are quiet. They are silent. Is there alarm, lest this interpretation of the doctrine of the Spirit will deny the franchise of spiritual holiness to the humbler sons and daughters of earth, who have not opportunity as have the favored? Nay! God's ways are equal. There are melons that ripen on the ground, and they are as luscious as grapes that swing from the trellis, or fruit large high on boughs of trees. Yea, even underneath the soil does nature form the succulent potato: and it is quite as toothsome as are its kindred of the upper air. In the realm of grace have we the counterpart or the parallel of this benevolent wisdom, and to every honest soul the ministries of life are most immediate in suitable adaptations to the exigencies of human condition. Royalty of life is independent of place or form of service, and God's sweet covenant of life and love hath respect to all possible conditions. It is an infinite variety that is wrought by the one self-same Spirit. Work is worship: study is service: and rest is righteousness. The benevolence of masterly refrain from deed or word by which a brother is hurt or hindered, is correlative ever with that chivalry of soul that gives "place by subjection? No! not for an hour." Under guidance and comfort of the Holy Spirit we come fully out from under slavery of men into the humility of service, realizing life to be its own reward and its increase the only luxury of being.

To suppose our mirth and laughter, and all spontaneous, fresh and objectless converse that is ultimate and without respect of consequence, an element of life contraband of the Spirit of holiness, has been a foil to that naturalness requisite to highest relish.

Tobacco.

BY "ONE."

Why should this popular, poisonous weed be paraded in the ADVOCATE? I am not going to do that. But we have to talk about the devil sometimes, and about a great many things that are unpleasant. Now, it is the purpose of this paper to discountenance and discourage the use of tobacco by Christian people, especially Methodist people.

Let us begin with some rough, but, I think, safe guessing. I guess that in the three Conferences that patronize the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE there are three hundred and fifty preachers. I guess that of these, fifty use tobacco, and that they use upon an average $20 worth of the stuff per capita annually. That is $1,000 are chewed up and burnt up by these "servants of the Most High that show unto us the way of salvation," every year! And how long has this been going on! "Ye ministers," "ambassadors for Christ," is it right? I guess that in these three Conferences there are 90,000 members. Of these I guess 5,000 use tobacco to the amount of $20 each annually. That is $100,000 worse than wasted by these disciples of him who said, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself," every year. Why, that would put and keep in the foreign field, on a comfortable salary, one hundred missionaries. But, as we see it, Louisiana and Mississippi Methodism can not support more than a fifth of that number. That is to say, if I have guessed correctly, we chew up and spit out on the ground, and burn up and puff out on the air, five times as much as we give to send the gospel of salvation to the heathen. Well may our editor ask, "Are we a missionary church?" It is. In this view of the case, a habit that can be none other than wrong. Then, besides this, the use of tobacco is a filthy, offensive and poisonous habit. Tobacco so thoroughly saturates the blood that it can easily be discovered under the microscope, and shows itself in the peculiar color of the skin; while it so thoroughly narcotizes the system as to interfere very often and very materially with the action of the heart, thus unsteadying the nerves and impairing the health. And my! what offensive odors! I sat, not long since, some fifteen feet away from a man while he preached, and at that distance I could smell the odors of the pipe on him. And I knew a preacher, not long since, to go into a pulpit where the smell of the pipe was so strong as to be very sickening. His predecessor was an inveterate smoker. And it is so offensive to delicate and refined ladies!

And would that something might be done to abolish the deadly cigarette. These twelve-year-old boys who smoke cigarettes, ten chances to one, will not live to be grown. And if they should, they will have neither manhood nor moral force. I would not give the snap of my finger for the moral or physical worth of the twelve-year-old boy who, for the next nine years, constantly indulges the cigarette habit.

All this will go for fanaticism with many, if they read it; but the conscientious are asked to pause and ponder before they chew or smoke anymore.

Letter from China.

The statistics of Protestant missions in China for 1888, published in the Chinese Recorder, for January, 1889, show an encouraging increase in every item. There are 39 societies operating in China, having a total (including 3 independent workers) of 1,123 foreign missionaries, male and female, being an increase of 93 over last year—1887. The communicants number 34,555, an increase of 2,295 over 1887. The number of pupils in mission schools is 13,817, an increase of 1,140; while the contributions of the native Christians for all church purposes amount to $44,173 39—an increase of nearly $6,000 over last year. Surely these figures ought to afford encouragement to those who are working and praying for the salvation of China.

Final arrangements have been made for the General Conference of Missionaries in China. The Committee of Arrangements met in Shanghai, November 27, 1888, and, after organization, proceeded to select subjects for papers, to be brought before the Conference, and writers for the same. They adopted a program of proceedings for the Conference, which is to cover a period of ten days, beginning May 7, 1890. The program includes a wide range of topics, both interesting and important; and the careful discussion of them in the manner proposed can not fail to be of permanent advantage to the missionary enterprise in China. Forty-one different subjects are included in the program, and they are to be treated by sixty-two different writers. Besides these, three subjects for evening lectures are also included.

Although China is a great and, in many respects, a rich country, yet scarcely a year passes without bringing calamity of a more or less serious nature to some part of the country. When drouth occurs in one place, or flood in another, and the crops are destroyed for one, two or three seasons in succession, starvation and death are sure to result, and the lack of transportation makes it very difficult to get relief to the famine-stricken districts. Reports from Shantung and Manchuria show that the crops have been destroyed by repeated floods, while our own province of Kiangsu, and the adjoining province of Anhwui, are greatly afflicted by the drouth. The rainfall has been less here this year than for any year since 1880. Also Honan and northern Anhwui are still suffering from the overflow of the Yellow river, whose breach has not yet been, nor is it likely to be, closed. In all these places hundreds of thousands of the people are reduced to starvation, and only the relief sent from more favored regions can save the lives of the people till next season's harvest is gathered. Foreigners and natives, missionaries and merchants are all helping liberally to relieve the suffering, and telegrams have been sent to Europe and America, calling for assistance. No doubt, the hand of God is in these national calamities which are afflicting this country, in order that all may turn out for the furtherance of the gospel.

Imperial sanction has at last been given for the extension of the railroad from Tientsin to Tangchow, near Peking, a distance of some seventy-five miles. The Chinese Railway Company has advertised for over 7,000 tons of rails, and the Hong-kong and Shanghai Bank has loaned the Chinese government some two and a half million dollars for the construction of the road. We will, no doubt, see the iron horse in Central and Southern China ere many years pass.

Our work in Suchow is progressing. Three new stations have been opened in the Suchow district in the past two years, and we have just completed the negotiations for a house on an island in the Great Lake, where we propose to open another station. Ultimately the city of Changshuh, just opened last year, and now occupied by a native preacher, and the place just secured in the Great Lake, will be occupied by missionaries. Bishop Wilson decided that we will need twenty more men to properly occupy this field. Let us have them, everyone, within the next five years.

Two persons were received into the church at our last quarterly meeting.

A. P. PARKER.

That Look!

At Shiloh Camp Meeting there were several of us in the group, among the number my pastor, when I began to criticise the manner and the words that one of our ministers had used in the pulpit during the service before. In my mistaken zeal I had measured my brother by the divine standard of the Christ that I knew, and because I was disappointed in the comparison I had dared to censure one who had come in my Master's name; and, with that earnestness, tinged with anger, I was willing to point out my brother's defects to my hearers who probably hadn't seen them before! My pastor mildly expostulated at first; but seeing that I was determined upon expressing my disapprobation, he gave me a look that I never will forget! Rebuke, sorrow, love, pity, disappointment and grief were all blended there!

As our earthy teachers use illustrated primers to teach their scholars to spell and read more readily, so Christ, the divine Teacher, has always illustrated by Scripture lessons with human, living pictures; and, thus, through this sweet, tender way of his, I better understand how much his incarnation means to the world! Through this one, who had come "in Christ's stead" to me, I felt that every look in the Bible was turned upon my soul. I had often read about them, heard them preached of from the pulpit, but never before did their meaning so flood me with light! With this mental kaleidoscope I saw how magnetic the cord of love is that vibrates between the world and the great throbbing heart of its Redeemer, as he tenderly says: "Look unto me, and be ye saved, all the ends of the earth;" and how "our fears, looked unto him and were lightened." I see now how there could be life given to the smitten Israelites in the wilderness for a look at the brazen serpent, and how Peter's heart was broken under the sorrowful, loving look of his suffering Master as "he went out and wept bitterly." Oh, the looks of the Bible! how powerfully they will always beam on me, all because I had been blessed with "a faithful priest!" God bless him! He is a loyal "watchman on the tower;" and, while I make no defense of myself, I feel in my soul that I can say: "If there were more like him, there would be fewer like me."

From the Work.

RED RIVER CIRCUIT.

MR. EDITOR: I came on this peculiar circuit with very little information. Vague notions of a cyclone at Campo Bello, a $500 parsonage, and short, abrupt bends in the river, filled my mind. Since my arrival very little has been done towards putting things into shape, on account of bad weather and high water. Instead of a parsonage I found that $175 was on deposit at Coushatta, as proceeds of the sale of the East Point parsonage to another work. While our church at Campo Bello was blown down, there is a temporary place for preaching in a house near by. A prominent architect and builder, Mr. Russell, of Coushatta, has received word to commence the rebuilding of the demolished church, and the erection of a parsonage also. The $175 parsonage fund will, therefore, soon be called into use. I have opened a new appointment, nine miles from here (Knox Point), at a place called Ash Point. Owing to bad weather I have not preached there yet, but have visited the community, and approached the people on the question of Sunday-school and church services. Prof. Dortch has consented to act as superintendent of the Sunday-school, which, with the preaching, will be held in his school-house. A neat, new church building has also been talked of, with some prospect of certainty. Very few members are found on this circuit, but I trust it will not always be the case. Eleven families have been visited, while only two sermons have been preached. As spring opens, I expect better things. Our Sunday-schools at Knox Point, Campo Bello and Bossier Point will then, no doubt, resume study. I think much pastoral visiting and earnest, spiritual sermons and prayers, with Sunday-schools at every appointment, and the ADVOCATE in every member's home, will be the means of accomplishing much good. The intense business life led by these river people, and a great abundance of this world's goods, seem to have hindered spiritual religion. Yet, as a general thing, the gospel is regarded with favor, and churches are in demand by the people. While the congregations are small, their behavior is reverential, and their support towards religion is, indeed, generous. Society is of the highest type, in a secular sense, and needs only "the mind that was in Christ."

J. G. E. GREENE, P. C.

OCEAN SPRINGS, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: While others are writing of the pleasant receptions given at the parsonages, where good fires and smoking dinners awaited them, perhaps a few words from a young itinerant, on his first year's work, will be of interest to some. No such reception was given us at the parsonage, for there is none on the work; and, if there was, we did not want to stay there alone. But Bro. W. R. Stuart met me at the train, and took me to his home, which will be mine for this year; and a more delightful one can not be found. Bros. Hopper and Cooper, two other ministers of the Mississippi Conference, found homes in this house during the first years of their ministry.

My work embraces Ocean Springs, Handsboro, Mississippi City, and Biloxi. Ocean Springs has the strongest membership, and half of my time goes to that place. At Handsboro our church is very weak, and we have no house of worship, but will make an effort to build one this year. We have no church at Mississippi City, but preach in the court-house once a month. Biloxi is a town of about four thousand inhabitants, and is growing rapidly. Here, too, our church is very weak: Catholicism has the stronghold. I understand that the priest there recently published a statement that he had twelve hundred members inside the city limits (to say nothing of those outside who attend his church), an increase of two hundred in the past twelve months. This shows that instead of having service once a month, as we do now, we ought to have a station preacher there. If our Conference would send some of its best material there, supplement his salary from the home mission treasury for two years, I truly believe that it would then be a self-supporting station. It is next to impossible to build up a church in a town growing as rapidly as this, when the pastor can only be there three or four days in each month. I have one applicant for membership there, who has been for a number of years a member of the Catholic Church.

I have sent you one subscriber, and hope to get more soon; will endeavor to put the ADVOCATE in every Methodist family on my work. Pray for us, that this year may be one of gracious ingathering of souls on this coast country. Fraternally,

JAS. G. GALLOWAY.

THE CHILD-LIKE SPIRIT.

Mark ix, 33-42.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child he shall not enter therein.—Mark x, 15.

TIME.—A. D. 28.

PLACE.—Capernaum.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. xviii, 1-14; Luke ix, 46-48; xvii, 1-4.

33. To Capernaum—In his journey from Cesarea Philippi. Here he was called upon to pay the annual Temple tax, and sent Peter to find the amount in the fish's mouth. It was probably immediately after this that he spoke to them about their dispute. In the house—Probably Peter's. What we too eagerly dispute by the way, amid the stir and excitement of the world, is often rectified in the house, in the calm second thought and self-examination of the closet. He asked them—At first glance we should imagine an irreconcilable difference and error of detail. But a closer inspection will show that each evangelist gives different stages of the same transaction. Luke tells of the first rising of the dispute, which probably took place on the way from the fishing on the lake to Capernaum, and then he omits the rest until Jesus placed the child before them. Mark commences after they had come into the house, when Jesus questioned him, and they were silent; he omits what followed until the Lord called all together, and placed the child before them. Matthew tells us what occurred after our Lord questioned them, and they were silent for shame. From this example the unpracticed reader may easily see how the evangelists supplement each other. What was it Our Savior asked, not for information, but to prepare their minds for certain ideas he wished to communicate. They were made to feel by the form of the question that they were in the presence of one who read the very thoughts of their hearts; and they were silent, and shrank from announcing it. Disputed among yourselves—Notice that the Revised Version has it "reasoning among yourselves." While his disciples were constantly about him, they went on pretty well; but there was good reason for his leaving them sometimes to themselves. Observe what directions your thoughts and feelings most readily take when you are alone; and you will then form a tolerably correct opinion of your real state.

34. Who should be the greatest—They asked the question because they supposed, in accordance with the common expectation of the Jews, that he was about to set up a temporal kingdom of great splendor; and they wished to know who should have the principal offices and posts of honor and profit. This was among them a frequent subject of inquiry and controversy. The giving of the keys to Peter had not produced the idea in the apostle's mind that he was thereby nominated head of their body, or prime minister, vizier, or general in the divine kingdom. Among the disciples it was still an unsettled question which should be primate; it might be one of our Lord's blood relations; it might be the beloved John. Our Lord's discourse decides that it will be neither.

35. He sat down—The usual posture of teaching among the Jews. Called the twelve—He would have all the apostles hear this, for even if all were not engaged in this dispute, all had worldly views of his kingdom, and needed instruction. This first outbreak of selfishness and strife among his chosen companions was a [illegible] occasion in the sight of Jesus might, and it did, spring to a [illegible] tent from ignorance, and, with removal of that ignorance, [illegible] subdued; but it might and it did from sources which, after knowledge had been conveyed of the kingdom was and wherein distinctions lay, might still have to flood the church with a [illegible] evils. Therefore, it was that would signalize this occasion by and an act of particular impressi*If any man desire to be first*... potism makes man a slave; despotism makes him the lowest most abject of all slaves, who serve the most external and le hests of a police for the interna dom of God. Brain-Work.—Essentials for Its Development and Health.

There is such a thing as mind-stre gthening work. In truth, it is, as every physiologist knows, only by work that mu ds, or, more correctly speaking, brains, can be strengthened in their growth and naturally developed. The exercise of those centers of the nervous system, with whose function we call consciousness and intellect are associated, is as essential to their nutrition as activity is to the healthy growth of any other part of the organism, whether nervous or muscular. Every part of the living body is developed and enjoys vitality by the law which makes the appropriation of food dependent upon and commensurate with the amount of work it does. It feeds in proportion as it works, as truly as it works in proportion as it feeds. This canon of organic life is the foundation of those estimates which physiologists form when they compute the value of food in measures of weight-lifting power. It is, however, necessary to recognize that, although these propositions are true in the abstract, they need the introduction of a new integer or combining power before any sum of results can be worked out.

We know that food is practically just as truly outside the body after it has been eaten, digested, and even taken into the blood-current, as it is when it lies on the table. Nutrition is a tissue function, and its performance depends on the appetite and feeding power—which is something different from the organic need—of the tissue with which the nutrient fluid is brought into contact. Again, any particular part of the organism may be so exhausted by work that it has not power enough left to feed. It is a matter of the highest practical moment that this fact should be recognized. There is undoubtedly a point at which work ceases to be strengthening and becomes exhausting—self-exhausting and self-destructive so far as the particular tissue in activity is concerned.

Work may be carried too far—in fact, to such a point that not only the last reserve of power for action, but the ultimate unit, so to say, of the force of nutrition, which is, as we now believe, identical with the force of general activity, may be expended in work, and the organism left so utterly powerless that its exhausted tissues can no longer appropriate the food supplied or placed within their normal reach. We have said that it is necessary that this should be understood. it has a special bearing on the question of brain-work in childhood and adolescence.

Just as extreme weakness and faintness of the body, as a whole, produce restlessness and loss of control, so extreme exhaustion of the brain produces mental agitation and loss of health-consciousness. This is how and why the "overworked" become deranged. One of the earliest indications or symptoms of brain-exhaustion is irritability; then comes sleeplessness of the sort which seems to consist in inability to cease thinking either of a particular subject or things in general; next, the mental unrestful or uncontrollable thought gets the better of the will, even during the ordinary hours of wakefulness and activity, which is a step further toward the verge of insanity than the mere persistence of thought at the hour of sleep—this way lies madness; and, finally, the thinking faculty, or, as we say, the imagination gets the better of the will, and asserts the supremacy for its phantoms, those of sight or hearing being the most turbulent and dominant which happen to be most commonly used in intellectual work, and, therefore, most developed by the individual cerebrum—this is madness. Such is the story of overwork of the brain or mind, and it is easy to see that at any stage of the progress from bad to worse the will may be overpowered and the judgment perverted in such manner as to compel the victim of this mind trouble to seek refuge in death or to so disorder his consciousness that he supposes himself to be acting in obedience to some just and worthy behest when he commits an act of self-destruction or does something in the doing of which he accidentally dies. Such, in the main, is the story of suicide from overwork.

What, then, can be the excuse pleadable by those who heap on the brains of the young or adolescent such burdens of mind, labor, and worry as exhaust their very faculties of self-help, and leave them a prey to the vagaries of a starved brain? We pity the suffering of those ship-wrecked sailors who, after exposure in an open boat, perhaps without food for hours or days, "go mad," and, raving of feast and pleasures the antithesis of their actual experience, fall on each other or throw themselves overboard. Have we no pity for brains dying of lack of food because we have compelled them to expend their very last nail of force in work, and now they are distraught in the act of dying.

It may be a sublime ideal, that of a highly educated people, but if it should happen that the realization of this beautiful dream of our philosophic reformers can only be achieved by the slaughter of the weak, it will scarcely console the national conscience to reflect, that, after all, "the survival of the fittest" is the law of nature.—London Lancet.

Sunday Papers.

"The Sunday paper has come to stay." We know not from what oracle this sage deliverance originally proceeded, but it has been caught up by a swarm of newspapers and wafted about with as much confidence as if it were a revelation from heaven, and some ministers have echoed it back from the pulpit as though it were the final word on the subject. We are not so sure about it. Probably some papers of a low grade will continue to publish a Sunday issue for a long time; but papers which lay claim to respectability will find it difficult to make their Sunday issue stay. One of the foremost questions before the American people is that of rest-day. Leading secular journals take no prominent part in the discussion. The reason is plain. To defend the Sabbath, while they violate it, would be ridiculously inconsistent, and to oppose it would be to espouse openly the cause of social demoralization and corruption. But the time is not far off when they can be silent no longer, and when they are compelled to speak they will be constrained to act in harmony with their views.

While the secular papers are just now receiving severe criticism on account of their Sunday issues and the demoralizing tendency of a large share of their daily contents, it must not be forgotten that the proprietors of the papers themselves deplore these things also. Many of these proprietors stood out against the Sunday business a long time, and pleaded against it with irresistible logic. But the pressure on them at last became so great that they yielded, and now, having thrown themselves into the current, they feel constrained to defend the course they pursue. Whatever arguments they may use in self-defense, they evidently wish it were otherwise. Gladly would they close on Sunday and give their employees the day of rest, but they are carried on by the current of modern reckless scramble for money. They have created a demand which they now plead as a reason for going on. There is no justification in these facts; rather, they call for severer condemnation. But in the contest now being waged against some damaging features of the secular press, it is well to remember these facts and take advantage of them. Men who lack courage to carry out their convictions will soon have no convictions worth mentioning. The men who are willing to lose for the sake of principle will be the winners of the future. There is a loud call for such heroes now.—New York Christian Advocate.

EVERY DAY A LITTLE.—Every day a little knowledge. One fact in a day. How small is one fact? Only one. Ten years pass by. Three thousand six hundred and fifty facts are not a small thing.

Every day a little self-denial. The thing that is difficult to do to-day will be an easy thing to do in three hundred and sixty days hence, if each day it shall have been repeated. What power of self-mastery shall he enjoy who, looking to God for grace, seeks every day to practice the grace he prays for?

Every day a little helpfulness. We live for the good of others, if our living be in any sense a true living. It is not in great deeds of kindness only that the blessing is found. In "little deeds of kindness," repeated every day, we find true happiness. At home, at school, in the street, in the neighbor's house, in the playground, we shall find opportunity every day for usefulness. Our Church Home.

CHURCH EARNESTNESS.—A large number of church members are, we fear, sadly lacking in this indispensable qualification for taking part in the church's divinely appointed mission in the world. Self-consecration and personal efforts for the salvation of souls would speedily make such inroads upon the outlying masses around every church, as would cheer the heart of every pastor and bring rejoicing to the Savior. It is vain to talk of excellent preaching and fine music and lovely prayer meetings so long as these blessed means of grace do not rouse the people to action and bring them to say to each regarding the work God has given them to do in their own neighborhood, as Caleb said to Moses about the taking of Canaan, "Let us go up at once and possess it, for we are well able to overcome it."—Treasury.

BITTER WORDS.—A single bitter word may disquiet an entire family for a whole day. One surly glance casts a gloom over the household, while a smile, like a gleam of sunshine, may light up the darkest and weariest hours. Like unexpected flowers which spring up along our path, full of freshness, fragrance and beauty, so kind words and gentle acts and sweet dispositions make glad the sacred spot called home. No matter how humble the abode, if it be sweetened with kindness and smiles, the heart will turn lovingly toward it from all the tumults of the world, and home, if it be ever so homely, will be the dearest spot beneath the circuit of the sun.—Evangelical Messenger.

What is more beautiful than a living, working, loving church? It means a collection of families who are dwelling in peace, and whose homes are filled with the Spirit of God. There is no such thing as a church in love and sympathy made up of unhappy families. What will cause disturbances in the church will do so at home, and what will fill homes with strife will set a church on fire from beneath. Lifeless churches have no power to mould home life.

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, accumulating in the glands of the neck, produces unsightly lumps or swellings; which causes painful running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or many other manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the worst possible features of both. Being the most ancient, it is the most general of all diseases or affections, for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished, often when other medicines have failed, has proved itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. If you suffer from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

Briefs.

A writer in one of our exchanges asserts that "there are hundreds of Methodist families who really do not know that there is such a thing as the church paper"! If that is so, can anybody tell whose fault it is?

Our church has 11,724 Sunday-schools, 82,205 teachers, and 649,104 scholars. In all the world there are 116,306 Sunday-schools, 1,953,932 teachers, and 16,466,029 scholars, making in all in the Sunday-schools of the world 18,419,961 persons.

When you get through reading this paper, if you will show it to that friend who is not a subscriber, and point out the articles you consider helpful, you will do a good deed. You know a "cup of cold water" will not be unrewarded; how much less a deed by which your friend may be introduced to a weekly blessing of pure reading!

A good thing for a young preacher to remember is thus stated by A. S. Hill in his new book on, "Our English:" "Facility with words may be a facility fatal not only to thought, but also to strength and directness of expression." A preacher, above all men, should acquire "strength and directness of expression." Ponder that, ye young ambassadors of the Lord.

This is from the Chautauquan, for March:

The popular feeling is, that the Bible is exclusively a religious guide and to be read only for personal application. Its value as a historical document, as a portrayer of character, as literature of the finest quality, as a moral code, and as a link in the development of government and society, is generally unrecognized. We believe that there is no book of such varied and general interest as the Bible, and that an appreciation of its many-sidedness would increase its usefulness to every reader. The widespread and growing demand for placing the Bible in the college curriculum as a study will do much to bring it into the realm of books read "as if one liked them."

There has been incorporated in this city "The New Orleans Terminal Railway and Bridge Company." The object of this corporation is to bridge the Mississippi river at this point. The capital stock is fixed at two millions of dollars, to be represented by twenty thousand shares at one hundred dollars a share. The first Board of Directors is composed of the following persons: W. B. Schmidt, S. O. Thomas, Adolph Meyer, J. C. Denis, Carl Kohn, T. L. Airy and E. M. Hudson. The Picayune says:

The bridge is to be so built that it will in no way interfere with the free navigation of the river for the largest ships, while the railway accommodations which it will furnish are expected to satisfy every demand for terminal facilities. Moreover it will not be under control of nor its use subject to be monopolized by any existing railway interest, but will afford like accommodations to all.

In England there were 4,960 books published during 1888. There were twice as many poetical and dramatic publications as in 1887, but the largest increase was in the number of novels.

A Working Faith.

We listened lately to a practical sermon on "Faith That Worketh by Love." There are two great divisions of faith. One is a "dead faith," the other is a "working faith." A dead faith is no more than any other dead thing. There being no degrees in the idea of death, a "dead faith" is just as dead as a dead soul or a dead body. It is just as useless as any useless thing can be, and its possessor has something which he thinks is something when it is really nothing. To rely upon it is folly. To build upon it is to build upon the "baseless fabric of a dream." If there can be such a thing as "a real nothing," it is a "dead faith."

There are various kinds of "working faith," and all its kinds are distinguished by an intense energy. The Scribes and Pharisees of our Lord's time had a large, earnest, working faith, but it was a faith that worked by malevolence. Saul of Tarsus had intense convictions, and they put him to work earnestly to destroy the disciples of Jesus. His faith worked by hatred. In past ages of the church the church authorities have worked by faith in the destruction of heretics. The inquisitor, in his black robes and holding the crucifix in his hand, worked by faith to extort from his wretched victim the confession of his heresy. And so in a thousand ways a working faith exhibits itself among men today, working by hate, by cupidity, by lust, by ambition.

This is far from being the Christian's "working faith." The apostle's words are: "In Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but faith that worketh by love." Here is the everlasting distinction between the true Christian faith and all other faith of whatsoever kind or degree. It is a working faith—a faith of tremendous energy, a faith transforming men and remodeling society, but working by love. In the Christian system, in the Christian church, in the Christian family, in the Christian heart, God has joined together faith and love. Whenever they become separated, the order of God is reversed, and there is tumult, and upheaval, and chaos, and night, and death. Read Paul's famous chapter about love in his letter to Corinth, and learn what a mighty instrument faith wields in its work. "Faith working by love" is the power in the hands of the church to evangelize the world. What a limited view of faith and its power it is to look upon it simply as the instrument to bring peace to the individual soul! In Christ Jesus the only thing available in Christian work is "faith that worketh by love."

Very much more of the same practical sort the preacher uttered; and we found the wish in our heart that all the people could see and be made to feel the force of such preaching. How careful they would be to possess the faith that works by love, and not that which works from any other principle.

The Octopus.

This is said to be one of the most ferocious and dreadful monsters of the sea. It was well known to the ancients as the polypus, and marvelous tales have they told of its ferocity and power in seizing with its terrific tentacles and dragging down into the deep large boats with their hapless crews. It has eight long arms that reach out in restless motion in all directions, and to each of these are attached one hundred and twenty suckers—like fingers that expand and contract with rapid, ever-changeful motion; and by these nine hundred and sixty fingers it feeds its capacious maw with whatever comes to hand. "With eyes fixed on its adversary, and with parrot-like beak advanced for the encounter, this most unsightly of all living things inspires awe by its loathsomeness, not less than by its actual power to harm." It is the special dread of wreckers and divers, and many a poor fellow has found himself involved in its dreadful tentacles, and had his life-blood drawn out by its sucking fingers.

Strange to say, this hideous monster has its counterpart in our midst. Its body, containing a maw as capacious as the deep, is domiciled in this city; but its thousand tentacles reach out to every part, even to the remotest nooks and corners of this fair land. With an appetite insatiable, and that becomes keener by the efforts to satisfy its voracity, it is gulping down the hard earnings of the poor, paralyzing the energies of labor, blasting the hopes of honest toil, lowering the vitality of business life, weakening the integrity of the legislative chamber, deadening the spirituality of Christians and spreading a moral paresis over the whole body politic. The name by which this hideous monster is known among us is, THE LOUISIANA STATE LOTTERY.

Shall We Resist Innovation?

BY REV. F. M. GRACE.

There are several live questions now before the church which, as usual, have arrayed our writers in two opposing lines—the Innovators and the Unchangeables. Both sides claim very respectable names among their leaders or followers. Nor is age always to be found on the one side, or youth on the other. An Abbey of seventy-five or eighty may be found among the Innovators, and sometimes a callow young preacher will blow his whistle for the Unchangeables. One set of men act as the leaders in a team of horses, guiding and pulling the others after them. Nor are the old wheel-horses less useful—holding back on a down-grade, and keeping things from going to destruction. One of these questions is the woman question: Shall women be made co-ordinate and equal in the affairs of the church? Dr. Black has discussed the question in a well-filled volume. Dr. Foster comes back at him in a beautiful and well-written article for your paper. We like the discussion as we like the men who are engaged in it. It is a noble question, and it has noble advocates on either side. They agree in the essential point: that woman is to be honored, to be put into the place for which God intended her in the creation. But how to do it? Is she now in that place, or has she been unjustly kept out of it? If an old wrong has been done, it is time to make reparation.

In all controversies that involve the overthrow of established usage the burden of proof must rest on the Innovators. The presumption has always been that the well-known, established customs of society are founded on reason. But this class of evidence is only ex parte, or, at best, prima facie. Had this doctrine been always maintained, or this presumption been always correct, then no changes or improvements in human affairs would have been possible. The appeal to the fathers would have kept Jews from becoming Christians, or Gentiles from changing their religion, or Catholics from being made Protestants. If what we already believe is infallibly true and certain, then the book of knowledge has been closed and sealed forever.

My old friend and class-mate, Rev. James A. Peebles, now a presiding elder in Arkansas, has licensed a woman to preach—that is, he has permitted a Quarterly Conference to license both a man and a woman—husband and wife—at the same time. This is like the firing on Fort Sumter—it will bring on the war. The battle must now be joined all along the line, because Bro. Peebles' administration must pass in review before the Annual Conference of which he is a member; and if he is condemned, then he will, no doubt, take an appeal to the General Conference that meets next year. So we may as well prepare ourselves for the fight.

Let us look, then, without stopping for discussion, at the line of argument that will certainly be employed on either side:

AGAINST THE WOMEN.

1. Past and present usage in Methodism.

2. Example of our Savior who, though ministered unto by women, chose twelve men to be his apostles.

3. St. Paul's positive declaration: "I suffer not a woman to speak." "Let the women keep silent in the churches."

FOR THE WOMEN.

1. Old Testament prophetesses—Miriam, Deborah, etc.

2. Prophecy of Christ's kingdom: "Your old men shall see visions, your young men dream dreams, your sons and daughters shall prophesy, and on my servants and hand-maidens I will pour out in those days of my Spirit, and they shall prophesy." This quoted by St. Peter on the day of Pentecost, and thus applied directly to the Christian dispensation.

3. St. Paul always seems to speak with some diffidence when women are concerned. (1. Corinthians vii, 6, 12, 40.) Besides, in the eleventh chapter of this epistle, he gives specific directions as to the manner in which women shall prophesy. And in Galatians iii, 28, he says: "There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither bond nor free, there is neither male nor female; for ye are all one in Christ Jesus."

4. Admitting past usage in the church has been against women holding official position, is it not time to reconsider a question, the conditions of which have so greatly changed through the advance of civilization and higher education of women? Do not the organization of such societies as the Woman's Missionary Society and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union suggest an advance of thought on this subject?

5. Do not women now freely speak and appear in public in all other ways as equals of men in every good cause? Do they not get full houses and hold their audiences as well as men in speaking of temperance, missions, medicine, or other suitable topics?

6. Have not our churches uniformly allowed gifted women to pray in public and to take all the positions that men hold in the church, except in the mere formality of a license to preach the gospel?

There is one other view that ought to have weight on this question. Up to this time, the preaching having been done by men, most of the conversions have been from the opposite sex. Now, let us try the effect of the soft and gentle voice of woman pleading the cause of Christ from our pulpits; and, perhaps, by the blessing of God upon this law of sexual attraction, more men may be converted than women. And if the experiment does not prove successful, it will readily fall into disuse. Only a few women may be expected to seek the office of the ministry for some time to come; and, for one, I am in favor of giving them the opportunity.

The Protestant Episcopal Church in this country has sixty-nine Bishops and 450,000 members. If the same ratio between Bishops and members obtained in our church, we would have 169 Bishops. What could we do with them?

Minutes of Louisiana Conference.

The Minutes of the late session, held in this city, December 19-24, have been published, and are now being distributed to members of the church in the ratio of one copy to seventeen members! It seems strange that our able secretary did not see the advantage of giving us a larger edition, especially after the Conference had ordered a public collection to be taken for bearing the expense. Of course, everyone who contributed a nickel to that collection will feel entitled to a copy of the Minutes; but, as it appears, the cost will be as much as twenty-five cents per copy. This rate could, of course, have been very much diminished by publishing a larger edition—say, five thousand—and then the preachers would have been enabled to put one copy into every family. The important information thus conveyed would be worth much more to the church than the cost of publication. For instance, it would show that there has been an increase in all the departments of our work during the past year, except in the number of infant baptisms and of parsonages. The increase in members is very large, nearly two thousand, being about 12½ per cent. According to this rate, Methodism would double its members in Louisiana in eight years. The increase in all the collections is also large, except a small deficiency in the Bishop's collection. It appears that only one new church was built in the Conference last year, and that there are fewer parsonages by six than there were reported last year. What became of those six parsonages? And where are all the new churches that most commonly are built every year? The discrepancy may be accounted for by the correction of figures, but the increased valuation reported in church property of both kinds militates against the supposition.

On the whole, the past year has been one of gratifying prosperity in the church in Louisiana. Thousands have been converted, and for the first time in twenty years it looks like the harvest was ready to be gathered. If only the churches in the city could show increase of members corresponding to that in the parishes, Methodism would soon double her numbers in the State.

Our Church Extension Needs.

MR. EDITOR: I have received the following letter from Dr. Morton, our wise and energetic Secretary, and know no better use that can be made of it than to offer it to you for publication. It fully explains itself, and I will just say now that there is not enough money in the hands of the treasurer of our Conference Board to pay off the appropriations recently made by the Board. So let us have the money early.

NEW IBERIA, Louisiana.

Rev. J. W. Medlock, Treas., New Iberia, La.—

MY DEAR BROTHER: We are not likely to break or suspend, but we need a few thousand dollars to meet promptly our last spring appropriations; and the building this year of several churches of importance must be deferred if these are not paid. This would be a calamity to them and a misfortune to our work. I have been trying to stir up the presiding elders, and hope a good deal of money will reach you soon; and I trust you will have in my hands not later than March 15 all that may then be due us. Very truly,

DAVID MORTON, Sec.
LOUISVILLE, KY., Feb. 12, 1889.

We have received the Hebrew Messenger, a monthly published in the interests of Christian Missions to the Hebrews. It is the only paper of the kind published in our church. It is edited and published by Julius Magath, of the North Georgia Conference, professor in Emory College, Oxford.

The publisher informs us that new subscribers are coming in at a rate that is very gratifying. We thank the agents for this evidence of their interest, and trust that they will continue to press the claims of the ADVOCATE upon the attention of all Methodists and all other people. In a private note to the editor, one of our young ministers in North Mississippi says: "Your 'Thoughts on Preaching,' in my case, were timely. I expect to love and study God's Word more and strive harder to make a true, acceptable, and successful minister of Christ." In the Christian warfare no weapon is equal to the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God."

In this country last year seventeen churches were built for each working day in the year. Verily, Christianity must be dying out!

The people of Pennsylvania will vote on June 18, on the question of a prohibitory amendment to their Constitution. There being no other question before them, there will be no complication with politics.

Judge Harris, of Athens, Ga., has purchased Bishop Key's residence in Oxford, Ga., and presented it to Emory College as a residence for its president. It seems to be a historic house, having been the residence of presidents Few, Longstreet, Pierce and Haygood.

Rev. A. T. Mann, D. D., a member of the North Georgia Conference, died recently, aged seventy-four years. "Fifty-two years were spent in unbroken labors in his holy vocation."

There is a bill before the Legislature of Pennsylvania making "treating" to intoxicating liquors punishable by a fine of not less than $50, nor more than $100.

Bro. W. H. Huntley, from Flora, Miss., gave us a pleasant call last week. He represents Methodist matters on Flora circuit as in a most hopeful condition, and expects it before long to take rank among the first circuits of the Conference.

Mr. Moody announces that, on April 4, he will open in Chicago a convention of Christian Workers, similar to those he holds in Northfield in the summers. The meetings will continue from thirty to sixty days.

J. R. Gunning, a teacher in a Methodist Sunday-school in Natchez, Miss., has missed but two Sabbaths from Sunday-school in forty years; once because of sickness in his family and once because ill himself! How is that for punctuality?

Having read in the Nashville Advocate that the young ladies of Dr. Price's school have contributed the whole amount for the organ at Nantziang, China, I desire those who sent money to me for that purpose to inform me what I shall do with it. I have $13 in my possession.

Secondly, we expect to have a parsonage. Then, firstly and thirdly, we are going to have a revival. Taking in some members already."

TOBACCO—ITS USE AND ABUSE. By Rev. J. B. Wight, of the South Georgia Conference. Published by Southern Methodist Publishing House, Nashville, Tenn. Price, $1.

This book is well written. The subject is treated in twelve chapters. The effect of tobacco on the mind and physical health is pretty fully stated. The evils which result from its use are clearly pointed out and ought to have weight with every reader. Some of the arguments are rather weak, and some of the inferences are without any foundation whatever. If writers against liquor and tobacco would cease arguments which apply equally as well against good things, they would make more progress in accomplishing their ends. The author quotes freely from the highest authorities; his quotations going back even to King James "Counterblast." That our old topers may know what they are using and our young people be warned in time, we quote from the author a sentence showing what are the properties of tobacco: "It is errhine, sternutatory, sialogogue, emetic, cathartic, expectorant, cholagogue, diaphoretic, diuretic, antispasmodic, nervine, stimulant, narcotic, anæsthetic, anaphrodisiac, parturifacient and antipsoralic." If you will use it after reading that, your case is hopeless.

PERIODICALS.

—The Gospel in all Lands, for February, is devoted to the discussion of the various parts of missionary work in China. Rev. Judson Smith, secretary of the American Board, contributes Our Missionary Opportunity in China; Rev. S. L. Baldwin writes of Some Problems Solved by Methodism in China; Rev. G. W. Woodall contributes Our Methodist Missions in China; a resumé of the progress of Methodism in China is also given. Price, fifteen cents a month, $1 50 a year.

—The Homiletic Magazine has a full table of good things arranged under such headings, as, Sermons, Expository Papers, The Church Year, Practical Homilettes, Texts Illustrated and Reviews. E. B. Treat, 771 Broadway, New York. Price, $3.

Literary Notes.

D. Lothrop Company are hastening toward completion a remarkable story by Mrs. Martha Livingston Moody, of New York. It is a contribution in story form to the present "religious fiction craze" and is in many respects, as intended by its author, a capital refutation of the inconsistencies of "Robert Elsmere."

While the March Century was being prepared, the press was stopped in order to insert a paper by the Hon. Thomas B. Reed, of Maine, one of the Republican leaders in the Lower House, on "The Rules of the House of Representatives," and it has peculiar importance from the fact that it not only calls attention to the present difficulties of the situation, but suggests changes.

Many educators, who would be glad to use science in the training of young pupils if they knew just how to go about it, will be interested in the practical directions given in an article on "Natural Science in Elementary Schools," by J. M. Arms, in the March Popular Science Monthly. Mr. Arms writes with a full appreciation of the true aims of science teaching, and from an experience of ten years in the work.

Prof. Boyesen's "Vagabond Tales," in press by D. Lothrop Company, is a most engaging collection of this popular story-teller's recent "novellettes." No writer living—scarcely excepting even the great Björnstern—so thoroughly understands the Norse character, and when into this is infused the American element, the success of Prof. Boyesen's tales is easily understood. Some of the stories taken into this collection have already been translated into French, German and Spanish.

Joel Chandler Harris has contributed to St. Nicholas a story called "Daddy Jake, the Runaway," which will begin in the March number and continue through three issues. The last installment is said to contain one of the best of Mr. Harris's "Uncle Remus" stories.

Swan, Sonnenschein & Co., London, have printed "Is Marriage a Failure?" in book form, containing the correspondence in the Daily Telegraph on the subject, prefaced by Mrs. Lynn Linton's paper on "The Philosophy of Marriage," and supplemented by an appendix on "The Marriage Laws of the World," by H. A. Smith. Mrs. Mona Caird has just finished a novel dealing indirectly with the question raised in the recent "marriage" correspondence, under the title of "The Wing of Azael."

A hitherto unpublished chapter in the life of Edgar Allan Poe will appear in Harper's Magazine, for March. The old lady who was the heroine of this early love episode of the poets gave Mr. Augustus Van Cleef permission to write down and publish her reminiscences of it, provided her identity should not be revealed. She declared that the portrait of the poet which is reproduced in this number of Harper's was the "best one she had ever seen, and had his expression." She died in the West in 1887, over seventy years old.

Ruskin is reported to have done most of his literary work by candlelight before breakfast.

Dr. Birbeck Hill is about to publish a new collection of Dr Johnson's letters, including a number never printed hitherto.

Louisiana Conference Minutes.

Bro. Armstrong will find his lost figures in the line below, and incorrectly credited to Oak Grove. Bro. Munholland, doubtless, made a verbal report of the $15 for self-denial. Having just examined his written reports on file, I can find nowhere in them any amount reported for self-denial. Hence the statistical secretary is not to be blamed in the matter.

JOHN T. SAWYER.

FEBRUARY 21, 1889.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church; that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders. The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS.—This is the heading of the advertisement of Mr. J. G. Grant's, 50 and 52 Baronne street, New Orleans. Now, we would suggest to our readers to peruse it carefully, and they will be astonished at the low prices which Mr. Grant is selling furniture for. As this gentleman is thoroughly reliable, and guarantees the smallest article that leaves his store, we feel satisfied that those who may try him once will have further dealings with him. There is no store of this character in the South that keeps a larger or finer assortment than his, and as his expenses are less than others in the same line, he has informed us that he can sell lower. Try him.—N. O. Weekly Picayune, January 24.

Strong Endorsement.

Bishop C. B. Galloway, D. D., formerly editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, while spending a pleasant hour in our office, last week, stated that recently he met a merchant who advertises largely in religious papers, who told him that his advertisement in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE brought him more business than his advertisements in all the other religious papers put together.

Three Reasonable Requests.

1. Let every subscriber carefully read this issue of the ADVOCATE, and then show the paper to some neighbor who does not take it, and ask him to subscribe.

2. Let every minister arrange for a complete canvass of his circuit, so that every family of every Methodist congregation may have the paper offered to them. Where the minister can not do this personally, let him appoint some suitable person to do it.

3. Let the benefit and duty of subscribing for our church paper be mentioned in every congregation, and all reasonable efforts put forth to obtain new subscribers, and secure the renewal of old ones.

Judge—"What sort of a man, now, was it whom you saw commit the assault?" Constable—"Shure, yer honor, he was a small, insignificant craythur—about yer own size, yer honor."

"Don't you believe the milk I sell you is pure?" asked a milkman of a customer who complained that the lacteal fluid looked rather blue. "I won't tell you what I believe," replied the customer, "but I know your milk makes my mouth water."

Next to your subscription the greatest favor you can extend the ADVOCATE, in a business point, is to mention the paper in writing to advertisers.

Our Young People.

TO PHILLIS, TEN MONTHS OLD.

Baby Phillis, lady fair,
Fat and small of size,
With the sun's gold in your hair—
And the sea's blue in your eyes—
How I wonder what your will is,
Winsome Phillis!

When you point with tiny hand
At your tiny toe,
How am I to understand
What you mean by doing so?
Prithee, tell me what your will is,
Dainty Phillis!

When you, wide-mouthed, on the floor
Like a birdling sit—
Twenty different notes try o'er
In a pretty talking fit—
Guess it, can I, what your will is,
Saucy Phillis?

When you suddenly, unlaught,
Clap your hands amain,
Is it that some new sweet thought
Flashes through your baby-brain?
Come, unriddle what your will is,
Merry Phillis!

When you gravely fingering scan
Tiniest scatterlings,
Studying the Atomic Plan
Are you, in those specks of things?
Who can fathom what your will is,
Quaintest Phillis?

But when you come crawling after
Me with eyes askance,
And with sudden burst of laughter
Stretch your small, plump arms to mine—
Ah! I know then what your will is,
Darling Phillis!

—The Spectator.

Are You on God's Side.

Dear Children: By this time you have all seen, and I hope studied, the maps I sent you, and are each one ready to come out on the Lord's side in the great battle against sin and Satan. Satan has many friends in this country. That seems strange, does it not, when this is called a Christian country? Satan not only has many friends, but they are very active and are trying to win the whole country for him. Then God's friends must be busy too, and do all they can to help him. And if you are God's friends you must not be idle. There are many things a little child can do if she is really the friend of God. There was such a little girl in a country called Madagascar, which was not a Christian land, but belonged entirely to Satan. A very wicked queen reigned over the country. She encouraged her people to be very wicked. If she found anyone who wanted to be a Christian, she had him killed. The little girl was kin to the queen, and lived in the palace with her. A good man who had gone to that country to win it for Christ, though he had to be very secret about it for fear of the wicked queen, taught this little girl to love God. She became a Christian. One day the wicked queen ordered fierce, bad men to seize and bring every Christian they could find to a very high steep place on the side of a mountain. This place was called the Hurling Rock, because the people whom the queen wanted to punish were hurled from it and killed. Now each Christian who would not give up his faith in Christ was seized by his arms and legs and thrown headlong over the high place, and dashed to pieces on the rocks below.

The little girl was there, and when she heard the Christians confess they loved Christ, though they knew they must die the next instant for it, she became afraid Jesus would think she did not love him if she kept silent. She cried out: "I am a Christian; hurl me over too." No one noticed her. Again and again she cried out aloud: "I am a Christian: hurl me over too." How brave she was! She loved the Savior so dearly that she was willing even to die for him.

They did not throw her over because they thought she was too little to know what she was talking about. But God did not. He knew that small as she was, she loved him truly and faithfully, and he had a great work for her to do. She grew up to womanhood loving God and desiring above all things to help his people. Finally the wicked queen died, and the little girl became queen. Now things were changed. The Christians were no longer afraid, for the queen herself was a Christian.

She invited good men to come and preach to her people, that they might all learn to love Jesus. A church was built upon Hurling Rock, and Jesus was worshiped where so many who loved him had perished. The whole country was won for Christ by the little girl who was not afraid to confess her love for him, not afraid to come out on the Lord's side even if she should have to die for it.

As queen she encouraged her people to become such true Christians that they put to shame other nations that had much longer called themselves Christian countries.

If this little girl was willing to come out on the Lord's side and give him her life to show her love for him, should we not be willing to give up something for him? Can we begrudge him a few pennies? We can not value him very highly, can not love him very much, if we are not willing to give up something for his sake. The heart of the little girl was troubled when she saw the people dying in their sins because God's ministers were not allowed to preach the gospel to them. As soon as she became queen she did all she could to help them and to deliver her country from the power of Satan.

You will none of you ever be a queen, but you can each one do as the good queen did—that is, you can do all in your power to aid those who preach the gospel, that the people may come to Christ and the country be delivered from Satan, the great enemy of all good. When in your prayer you say, "Thy kingdom come," remember you are helping to extend the kingdom of God in your own country by building homes for the preachers who are trying to bring souls to Christ. And you must pray for them, that God will help them, will keep their hearts pure, will make them realize more and more how much depends on them. Then you must not forget each one to try to persuade some one to love our precious Savior who so loves us all. And may God keep you close to his heart, dear children! Your friend,

LUCINDA B. HELM.

Mr. Editor: As I have not written to your valuable paper in so long a time, I will make another attempt. Though we are a long way from our old home, Louisiana, mamma says we can not get along without the dear old Advocate. It is a welcome visitor we look for Friday evenings. Since I have written to your paper we have moved to Abilene, Texas. I like my new home very much. We are among strangers, but they are very good and kind to us. We have a very large, interesting Sabbath-school and over one hundred regular pupils. The people take great interest in religion. We have preaching every Sunday by Bro. McCarver, our pastor. Mr. Miller is my Sunday-school teacher. I like him so much; he is so kind to his pupils. I go to day school also; I started December 1. We have two large schools in Ahilene. The one I go to has three teachers and about one hundred scholars. We have such a fine time playing together; they have so many new plays for me—in fact, everything is new and different to me; so many curiosities. But it would be nicer if some of my little cousins were out here to get to see so much, too. I will ask a question: Where is the shortest chapter in the Bible found? I will close for this time.

Your little friend,

MARY S. HODGES.

Abilene, Texas.

Mr. Editor: I am a little boy six years old. I live in Winona, Miss. I go to Sunday-school every Sunday. Capt. D. L. Sweatman is the superintendent, and Mrs. Sweatman is my teacher. She says the little boys are smarter than the big boys. I have good lessons all the time. I don't go to the day school, but I have learned to spell and write my a. b. c's. I have no dog, but I want one mighty bad. If you can get me one, just put it in a box and express it to Winona. I have a book called the menagerie. It tells about bears and squirrels and tigers and monkeys and foxes and dogs and parrots. That parrot is a funny bird. Father saw a parrot on the train, and when its owner went to get a drink of water it cried out, "Come back, papa." I used to have a cat, but it got killed. Then I had a little kitten named Marshall, and when we moved to Greenwood my kitten just moved itself to a neighbor's, and I never saw it any more. Sister Lay sent me a basketful of oranges not long ago. Give my love to all the little cousins of the Advocate.

Morning Bible Reading.—The best time for Bible reading is in the morning. The mind and body are fresh after the repose of the night, and the highest powers of thought may be brought to bear upon the chapter selected. But, with most people, each recurring morning brings its own pressing tasks. Business cares, the daily toil and the duties of the house are the first and most engrossing concerns. Some hours must pass with many before they can find time to sit down to any quiet reading. Let the plan be earnestly tried by taking some words from God's book for the meditation of the morning. Make, for the month, a fair, steadfast trial of the plan of studying the Bible when your faculties are at mental high-water mark. You wonder at the familiarity of this or that friend with the Psalms, the Epistles, the Gospels. It has been gained, a little at a time, by patient, daily reading—thoughtful, prayerful reading, too, which was hived by the soul as something worth treasuring. We shall all gain immeasurably in our influence as well as our comfort, by giving more of our unwearied thought to the holy Book. A few tired, sleepy, worn-out moments at night, and those only; are almost an insult to the Master whom we profess to serve.

Faults of Many Mothers.—American women of all classes are, as a rule, sinfully negligent of some of the duties which pertain to health, especially exercise in the open air. The excuse that their many cares engross them, and that they, in consequence, have but little opportunity for leaving their homes is scarcely sufficient. The number who actually can not enjoy each day an hour's outing must be small, indeed, even among the class forced to work the hardest. Not only do many women fail in this respect in their duty to themselves, but their young children suffer in consequence of the same neglect. From one week's end to another during the winter not a few of them keep their little ones in overheated rooms, if not huddled around the kitchen stove, and the result is we find them, as spring approaches, weak, puny and ailing. In such families colds, coughs, sore throats, and the like, are common affections. There is scarcely a day during the coldest season when even the baby can not be safely taken out of doors. Mothers should understand that upon the daily enjoyment of fresh and open air depends, in a great degree, the health of their little ones as well as themselves; it is, in fact, absolutely indispensable to the well-being of all.—Boston Journal of Health.

Somebody suggests the keeping of a "birthday book" for the children. Get a substantial blank book, and let each child, as his birthday recurs, write a page giving a summary of his past year. Perhaps it will begin with only a printed page and a crude drawing at the end; but turn the leaves, and see the bold, plain, handwriting of the boy in his teens. He can write now, and there is no picture at the end. He has outgrown all that, but the record of the year has taken on a manlier tone, and between the lines mother love can read the unfolding of her boy's inmost purposes and desires. One of the names may drop out after a while, and then how precious the pages become! And how the date which marks the heavenly birthday may be turned to account by Christian parents! Not by brooding over the loss, nor by putting away the little garments and playthings to shed tears over as the anniversary comes around, but by filling that day with sacred ministry, in the name of the absent one, to the poor and sorrowful. Memory of this kind is a beautiful antidote for grief.

Dear Sir: I wish to say a word in behalf of your wonderful Chill and Fever Pills. Some months ago, a friend, who knew that my wife had been afflicted for months, sent me a package of your pills. I gave them to her and they cured her at once. A neighbor, Mr. Perry, had suffered with chills for more than a year, and had taken Quinine till his hearing was greatly injured. Seeing the cure wrought in my wife's case, he procured a bottle of pills and was speedily restored to perfect health. I feel that this is due to you. Very truly,

Rev. J. D. Davis.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla is selling faster than ever before. I never hesitate to recommend it."—George W. Whitman, Druggist, Albany, Ind.

"I am safe in saying that my sales of Ayer's Sarsaparilla far excel those of any other, and it gives thorough satisfaction."—L. H. Bush, Des Moines, Iowa.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla and Ayer's Pills are the best-selling medicines in my store. I can recommend them conscientiously."—C. Bickhaus, Pharmacist, Roseland, Ill.

"We have sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla here for over thirty years and always recommend it when asked to name the best blood-purifier."—W. T. McLean, Druggist, Augusta, Ohio.

"I have sold your medicines for the last seventeen years, and always keep them in stock, as they are staples. 'There is nothing so good for the youthful blood' as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—R. L. Parker, Fox Lake, Wis.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla gives the best satisfaction of any medicine I have in stock. I recommend it, or, as the Doctors say, 'I prescribe it over the counter.' It never fails to meet the cases for which I recommend it, even where the doctors' prescriptions have been of no avail."—C. F. Calhoun, Monmouth, Kansas.

MASON & HAMLIN

The cabinet organ was introduced in its present form by Mason & Hamlin in 1861. Other makers followed in the manufacture of these instruments, but the Mason & Hamlin organs have always maintained their supremacy as the best in the world.

Mason & Hamlin offer, as demonstration of the unequalled excellence of their organs, the fact that at all of the great World's Exhibitions, since that of Paris, 1867, in competition with best makers of all countries, they have invariably taken the highest honors. ORGANS $22 TO $1000. One hundred styles from $22 to $900 or more. Illustrated catalogues free.

Mason & Hamlin do not hesitate to make the extraordinary claim for their pianos, that they are superior to all others. They recognize the high excellence achieved PIANOS GRAND & UPRIGHT by other leading makers in the art of piano building, but still claim superiority. This they attribute solely to the remarkable improvement introduced by them in the year 1882, and now known as the "Mason & Hamlin Piano Stringer," by the use of which is secured the greatest possible purity and refinement of tone, together with greatly increased capacity for standing in tune, and other important advantages.

A circular, containing testimonials from three hundred purchasers, musicians, and tuners, sent, together with descriptive catalogue, to any applicant.

Pianos and organs sold for cash or easy payments; also rented.

SYKES—I take this opportunity to write briefly of the elements entering into and forming the character and life of our brother and friend, WILLIAM H. SYKES, to whose memory we offer this tribute of respect.

He was a good citizen. True to the interest of his country in the dark days of war, as well as when the kiss of peace rested on the land. There was no better soldier than he. He was brave, without being reckless; reserved and cautious, without cowardice; firm and solid, without being harsh or dogmatic; popular and pleasant, without the surrender of his convictions. But as soon as the war was over he returned to the community where he was reared and settled down to the peaceful and quiet life of a farmer. While he was Southern in every fiber of his nature, he recognized the close of the war as a settlement of hostilities, and became at once a factor in the section in which he lived for order and quiet. The promptness with which he met his obligations is worthy of the highest commendations—in this matter he had no superiors.

As a neighbor, he was kind, attentive and, of course, beloved and respected. The large congregation that attended his funeral services, and the tears of these strong men, testified to the estimate in which he was held by those who have known him longest and best. As a husband, he was rarely equaled and, perhaps, never excelled in the recognition of those relations growing out of the marriage state. While knowing that the divinely solemn form blended their lives and hearts into one, he never lost sight of his wife's individuality and never failed to contribute everything in his power to her happiness. Said one to me, who knew them well, "There was no better husband; it is doubtful if he ever crossed or spoke an unkind word to her." How thoughtful and kind he always appeared!—so considerate of her privileges and rights, and in making her happy himself was made happy. As a father, he was very affectionate. But one of the children lived to know and appreciate this wealth of love. He seemed from the first of his long illness to have a premonition of approaching death. Said he to his wife: "I have not lived as I ought to have lived, but, through Christ, I hope for salvation. My only trust is in Christ." In the main, he was a good man.

William H. Sykes was born December 24, 1840; was married to Mollie W. Wiggins, February 7, 1885; professed religion and joined the church, 1883, and died January 29, 1889. Peace to his memory!

H. C. MOREHEAD.

WILLIAMSON—WILLIE C., son of the late W. C. and Nannie Williamson, died at the residence of Dr. D. H. Kay, in Monroe, La., September 22, 1888, aged eight years and twenty-two days. His sufferings, though of only thirty-six hours' duration, were intense, until the wheels of life ceased to revolve and his spirit took its flight to the realms of glory. Few parents ever loved their own children as Dr. Key and his estimable wife loved Willie, and none ever more sincerely regretted their loss than they do the loss of little Willie. Indeed, the endearment between the doctor and Willie was so strong that neither was happy except in the company of the other. Willie's last words were, "I want my precious uncle so bad." And the doctor's eyes fill with tears at the mention of Willie's name. He who says, "Suffer little children to come unto me," also says, in his inspired Word, "Cast thy burden upon the Lord, and he will sustain thee." May the bereaved ones test him who made the promise and realize its fulfillment. Willie leaves a precious sister under the tender watch-care of Dr. and Mrs. Key, and they who loved and cared for him also love and care for her. Sleep on, precious Willie. We will meet you again.

A FRIEND.

COCHRON—Bro. W. O. COCHRON, son of W. O. and S. J. Cochron, was born in Marshall county, Miss., August 26, 1850, and died at his home, in Cockrom, Miss., November 30, 1888. He professed religion and joined the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, August, 1872, in which communion he lived a consistent member till called from labor to rest.

It was my pleasure to be his pastor for two years. Bro. Cochran was a quiet, unassuming Christian gentleman. He was strictly conscientious in what he conceived to be his duty as based on the broad principles of Christian integrity. While he was undemonstrative in his outward religious feeling, there was a deep-inward emotion that showed itself through the lineaments of his face. We often talked upon the obligations of man as growing out of his relations to God and each other, and I always found him consistent with the principles enunciated by Christ. He was at the time of his death engaged in the mercantile business, to which he seemed specially adapted. And I must say, while I have known and dealt with quite a number of merchants, yet I never knew a more straightforward, conscientious one. In my dealings with him, I have thought of Zaccheus' declaration to Christ, if "I have taken anything from any man, by false accusation, I restore him fourfold." He was a loving husband and an affectionate father. Therefore, to the tender love and care of him who is "a father of the fatherless, and a judge of the widows," we commend the grief-stricken wife and sorrowing children, praying that they may be reunited in the Father's kingdom!

H. L. VAUGHN.

MUNSON—Died, January 26, 1889, EDNA EUGENIA MUNSON, aged twelve years, one month and thirteen days; in the summer of 1888 she joined the church at Pipkin Chapel, near Port Hudson, La., in which she remained a devoted and consistent member till her death.

On the following Sabbath the Sunday-school, deeply feeling its loss, passed the following resolutions:

Whereas, It has pleased the Almighty to enter into our midst and remove from our number the person of our beloved sister, Edna Eugenia Munson, and while we realize the fact that one of the brightest and best of our Sunday-school will no longer be permitted to honor us with her presence and encourage us in the path of duty by her bright example, we bow in humble submission to his will, knowing she has been transferred from a world of care to unalloyed bliss and communion with the God whom she adored.

Resolved, That we will, as long as life shall last, cherish the memory of our sister, Edna Eugenia Munson.

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with the dear father and mother of our deceased sister in the loss of a daughter, whose gentle disposition and high regard for truth and right would have made her the noblest of women.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the father and mother of our sister and be furnished to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE for publication.

WAMACK—Sadness, like a chilling shadow, has fallen upon the home of Capt. J. K. Wamack, of St. Helena parish, La., in his untimely death, which occurred a short time ago—February 1, 1889. Capt. Wamack had been, for many years, a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and was ever a faithful supporter thereof. When well he was a quiet and peaceable man, a good and useful citizen.

Unfortunately, some years ago, from a sunstroke, he received a permanent injury in mind, which at times rendered him incompetent for the duties of life, and was a source of serious anxiety to his friends. From what cause the writer has not been informed, he was shot by one of his neighbors, which, after a few days, resulted in death. We learn that among his last words he said he was not afraid to die. May the Lord minister to the bereavement of the one and to the distress of the other family! is the prayer of a former pastor.

The Problem of Artificial Lighting.

In the course of a series of articles setting forth the modern view of electricity, Professor Oliver J. Lodge arrives at the conclusion that "light is an electrical disturbance, and that light waves are excited by electrical oscillations;" which conclusion he believes must ultimately have practical import. Professor Lodge remarks that our present systems of making light artificially are wasteful and ineffective. We want, he says, a certain range of oscillation—between 7,000 and 4,000 billion vibrations per second; no other is useful to us, because no other has any effect upon our retina. But we do not know how to produce vibrations at this rate. We can cause strings to vibrate one or two hundred or a thousand times per second, with the result of emitting a pure tone of definite pitch; but to get much faster rates of vibration, we have to fall back upon atoms. We can make atoms vibrate by what we call heating the substance; but the vibrations are then infinite in number and mode and only a few of them are of use to us. As we do not yet know how to separate vibrations that are useful to us from the great majority, we are obliged to excite them all together, at an obviously unnecessary expense. We take a lump of matter—say, a carbon filament or a piece of quick-lime—and by raising its temperature, we impress upon its atoms higher and higher modes of vibration: not transmuting the lower into the higher, but superposing the higher upon the lower, until at length we get such rates of vibration as our retina is constructed for, and we are satisfied. The process is evidently wasteful and indirect and empiric. We want a small range of rapid vibrations; and we know no better than to make the whole series leading up to them. It is, says Dr. Lodge, "as though in order to sound some little shrill octavo of pipes in an organ, we were obliged to depress every key and every pedal, and to blow a young hurricane." If this remark applies to the incandescent electric lamp and to lime light, it also applies with even greater force to lights of combustion, in which a great amount of radiation is produced, but is not wanted; the only result really desired being the minute, almost infinitesimal fraction of the whole effect which enables us to see. In short, the production of light waves, without any others, is held out by Prof. Lodge as the problem of artificial lighting for the future.—Journal of Gas Lighting.

VOCAL MUSIC AND PREVENTION OF CONSUMPTION.—At a meeting of the Medical Society of Virginia, October 23, 1888, Dr. C. E. Busey, of Lynchburg, Va., read a paper on the cultivation of vocal music in schools as one of the means of preventing phthisis. He states it as a well-known fact that those nations which are given to the cultivation of vocal music are strong vigorous races, with broad expansive chests. If an hour a day in public schools were devoted to the development of vocal music, there would not be the sad spectacle of the drooping, withered, hollow-chested, round-shouldered children which confronts us now. There is too great a tendency to sacrifice physical health upon the altar of learning. Vocal music is gymnastic exercise of the lungs, producing increased expansion of the lung tissue itself. The lungs in improved breeds of cattle, which naturally take little exercise and are domiciled much of the time, are considerably reduced in size, when compared with those animals running at liberty; and so it is with the human beings who lead inactive lives. Phthisis generally begins at the apices of the lungs, because these parts are more inactive, and because the bronchial tubes are so arranged that they carry the inspired air with greater facility to the bases than to the apices. During inactivity a person will ordinarily breathe about 480 cubic inches of air per minute. If he will walk at the rate of six (sic) miles an hour, he will breathe 3,260 cubic inches. In singing this increases more than in walking, as singing well requires all of the capacity of the lungs. The instructor of vocal music, in addition to his musical education, should understand the anatomy and physiology of the respiratory organs.—Virginia Medical Monthly.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

The storm that raged throughout the Northwest on the twenty-first was in some respects the worst of the season. It was bright and warm in the morning, but the mercury fell rapidly and a heavy snowstorm, accompanied by wind, set in. At midnight the thermometer registered 20 degrees below zero.

General Master Workman Powderly, of the Knights of Labor, has issued another special call, the second in a year, for per capita contributions from members of the order.

The up-river train on the European and North American Railroad, on February 23, when near Kingman, Me., was wrecked by jumping a switch frog at Boyd's Mills. The engine tumbled over, tearing up the track and knocking down three telegraph poles, which destroyed all communications by wire to Kingman.

The long-continued and bitterly waged warfare in the ranks of the green glassblowers of the section of the country east of the Alleghanies, including all of Canada and some of the Southern States, was ended on the twenty-third. The league transfers all of its effects to the district assembly, and gives the district a membership of about 1,600, divided among twenty-eight local assemblies.

The Northwest was visited by a genuine blizzard on the twenty-third. In Minnesota the thermometer registered 52 degrees below zero.

The Nova Scotian bark Josie Troop was wrecked on February 22 at Chicamicomico, N. C. The master and ten men were drowned; six were saved. The vessel and cargo are a total loss.

The Louisiana resolution was discussed in the United States Senate on the twenty-third. Senator Daniel, of Virginia, made an able speech, opposing its passage. Senator Hoar, in reply, denied that there was anything sectional in the investigation, or that it meant an attack upon the State of Louisiana. If the charges were true, that State was lying helpless and bound at the feet of a band of conspirators. The charges were, not that Louisiana had been wrong, but that Louisiana was suffering wrong.

Representative McCreary, of Kentucky, on behalf of the majority members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, has prepared a report recommending the adoption of the Edmunds Panama Canal resolution.

FOREIGN.

On February 22, President Carnot signed a decree appointing M. Tirard, Premier and Minister of Commerce; M. Constans, Minister of the Interior; M. Rouvier, Minister of Finance; M. Thevenot, Minister of Justice; M. Faye, Minister of Agriculture; M. Gmyot, Minister of Public Works; M. de Freycinet, Minister of War; Admiral Jurirez, Minister of Marine. The Paris press received the new Cabinet coldly.

Two thousand Prussian Poles have held a meeting at Posen, and adopted a resolution declaring that the prohibition of Polish elementary schools is a violation of the national rights guaranteed by International treaties, and by the promises of Prussian kings.

A China steamer, which arrived at San Francisco, on February 22, brought news of a great snowstorm in Chee Foo. Over a million and a half of people in the provinces are starving and riots occur daily. Missionaries have been attacked by mobs of Chinese led by the gentry.

There have been heavy falls of snow in the Bernes, Switzerland. Avalanches have destroyed many houses and caused a number of deaths.

Emperor Francis Joseph will, in a few days, issue a proclamation granting general amnesty as a memorial to Crown Prince Rudolph.

The Peters' Emin relief expedition will consist of 100 Somali soldiers and 500 carriers, who are now being engaged at Zanzibar and along the coast. The force will be well organized and led by eight Germans. Several young officers in search of African adventure have obtained the Emperor's permission to accompany the expedition.

The Welsh colliers have given notice that on March 1 they will demand an advance in their wages. It is believed that the demand will be refused and that a strike will follow.

The efforts of the Berlin banks to obtain the new Italian loan, though very persistent, failed, and the French intriguers are accused of additionally pushing up Russian securities and trying to frustrate every operation which Italy attempts with German and English firms.

A committee of the Lower House of the Austrian Parliament has heard the evidence of twenty-five labor experts of all nationalities on the proposal to establish chambers of labor. The majority agreed that the proposed chamber would adequately represent the business and political interests of workmen, provided the right of electing representatives in Parliament was granted. Nearly all demanded universal franchise.

M. Constans, Minister of the Interior, France, has written a letter to the Prefect of Police, stating that he will not be able to receive the deputation of workmen which intended to visit him. In the letter M. Constans requests the Prefect to inform the workmen that public assemblages are forbidden, and that the police will not tolerate them.

Mr. Spurgeon has returned to London, and is reported as looking remarkably well. He preached twice on February 24.

The London Times' Berlin correspondent says: "At the dinner given by Prince Bismarck to the members of the Lower House of the Prussian diet, the Chancellor said he regarded it as an utter impossibility that the Samoan question should have the effect of interrupting those friendly relations between Germany and America which had existed for a century."

The whitest, worst looking hair, resumes its youthful beauty and softness by using Hall's Vegetable Sicilian Hair Renewer. Try it.

A Correction.

The published Minutes of the Mississippi Annual Conference (seventy-fifth session), held at Vicksburg, December 5-10, 1888, do not credit East Feliciana circuit with having paid a cent of the assessment for Conference claimants or the Bishops' assessment. Our assessment for Conference claimants was $30; for Bishops', $10. Both of them were paid in full. The above statement is published in justice to myself and the brethren by whom the assessments were paid.

N. J. ROBERTS.

Ruston Station and Self-Denial.

Please correct error of omission in our late Conference Minutes. I reported "self-denial" fund of $30 for Ruston, and gave the treasurer Dr. Kelley's receipt for that amount. This item is not named in the Minutes, as it should be in justice to all. Respectfully,

J. A. PARKER.

H. Dudley Coleman & Co.

It affords the business manager of this paper pleasure to call attention to the conspicuous advertisement of Messrs. H. Dudley Coleman & Co. Both Hon. H. Dudley Coleman, member of Congress elect, and Mr. Edgar L. Stream are personally and favorably known not only to the writer, but to thousands of persons in the Southwest as gentlemen of strict honesty, energetic and prompt. They are well versed in manufacturing corn mills, cotton presses, grate bars, sugar machinery, saw mills, steam engines, boilers and machinery of all kinds.

The Hon. H. Dudley Coleman, as well as his junior partner, is a Louisianian, self-educated, self-advanced; neither of them wear unearned spurs, the former having worked through a three hundred thousand dollar failure, paying to all who granted him time their entire indebtedness, dollar for dollar, with interest. This he did without sacrificing his foundry property or any of his real estate, worth over $100,000.

Mr. Stream, on Tuesday, February 19, entered into matrimonial partnership with one of Louisiana's fairest brides, Miss Chase. This is likely to prove as happy and prosperous as did his admission into the firm of H. Dudley Coleman & Co., about a year ago. His numerous friends attended the wedding at Rev. T. R. Markham's Presbyterian Church. On the return of the bridal party, Mr. Stream will assume the entire charge of the large and increasing business of this enterprising firm during the necessary absence of its senior, who will be attending the United States Congress as a representative of the Second Congressional District of Louisiana.

All impatience of monotony, all weariness of best things, even, are but signs of the eternity of our nature, the broken human fashions, of the divine everlastingness.—Macdonald.

Farmers Should Read This.

It affords us pleasure to notice the prosperity of the Standard Guano and Chemical Manufacturing Company, of New Orleans, whose advertisement will be found elsewhere in this paper. So rapidly has the trade of this company increased that during the past year they have nearly doubled their plant, increasing largely the size of their steam engines, boilers and machinery. This growth of business is mainly due to the high grade of fertilizers manufactured by this enterprising and reliable corporation. Its officers are C. M. Soria, Esq., president; John S. Rainey, Esq., vice-president; Frank W. Rainey, Esq., secretary and treasurer—all of whom are known to be gentlemen of integrity and honor. Their fertilizers are carefully and scientifically prepared, and each package contains what it purports to be—a first-class fertilizer.

The annual statement of the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York shows the remarkable progress made by this institution during twelve months. The record made by the Mutual eclipses its own best efforts, and naturally exceeds that of any other financial institution in the world. The new business written amounted to $103,214,261 32, an increase of $31,756,792 95 over the new risks assumed in 1887, and a gain of $46,381,542 over the business of 1886—showing a continuous and phenomenal advance. The assets of the Mutual Life now aggregate $126,082,153 56, indicating a gain for the year of $7,275,301. The Company has now an outstanding insurance account amounting to $482,125,184. Its total income from all sources is reported at $26,215,432. It paid to its members during the year for death claims and endowments and other obligations $14,727,550 22. Up to date the Mutual had 158,369 policies in force, showing a gain in membership for the year of 17,425, thus forming the biggest army of policy holders in any regular Life Insurance Company in the world. The surplus fund was increased $1,645,622 11 in 1888, and the Mutual now has $7,940,063 33 over and above every liability.

East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia R. R.

The mountain resorts of East Tennessee are reached in twenty-four hours, and Virginia resorts in thirty hours. For tickets, sleeping accommodation, circulars, schedule, etc., call at Kenesaw ticket office, 22 Carondelet street.

Commercial Notes.

The total bank clearings reported last week in the United States was $887,890,305—an increase of 19 per cent. for the same week in 1888. The main points of interest in the bankers' statements are as follows: An increase of 100 per cent. at Duluth, Minn., an iron ore center; 60 per cent. at Galveston; 25 per cent. at New York; 17 per cent. at Boston; 13 per cent. at Philadelphia; a general increase at all the large Western cities, specially Denver, St. Louis, Chicago, Kansas City, Milwaukee. Memphis shows 20 per cent. improvement, while the bank clearings at New Orleans are 12.8 per cent. less this week than same period last year. A comparison of these statements show the direction of currents of trade to and from commercial centers.

The government pays to the railroads $20,000,000 annually for carrying the mails. At the present rate of increase it will be but few years until the amount reaches $40,000,00. If the present rate of compensation is maintained.

For the calendar year 1888 the total imports of coffee were 523,139,336 pounds against 442,750,870 pounds in 1887, an increase for 1888 of 80,000,000 pounds. And one of the biggest crops known is now being marketed. The imports of tea for 1888 were 87,814,529 pounds against 81,193,468 pounds in 1887. The average cost per pound of the 1888 imports was a fraction over 16 cents per pound.

From Rev. Dr. McAnally, editor of the St. Louis Christian Advocate.

"I have tried J. & C. Magnire's Condorango on myself and others, and it is my opinion that to produce a healthy and safe action on the Liver, Kidneys and secretions generally, there is not a better medicine known, and for persons of illicious or Costive habits its action is most effective and salutary." Pe-ru-na and La-cu-pi-a Can Handle Catarrh.
Catarrh is a very common ailment. In its lighter forms it does not give much trouble. In its severer phases it is most serious and dangerous. It is the breeder of a great many serious diseases. The way to treat it is never to allow it to get deep-seated. If taken at the start Pe-ru-na is bound to cure it completely. LA-CU-PI-A If, however, it develops into a scrotulous form, get a bottle of LA-CU-PI-A at once. For proofs of the success of these two medicines in all forms of Catarrh send to the Pe-ru-na Medicine Co., Columbus, O., for Dr. Hartman's "Ills of Life," free of charge. PE-RU-NA and LA-CU-PI-A are sold by all druggists. Manufact'd by THE PERUNA MED. CO., Columbus, O.

A TRIBUTE OF LOVE.

For the Memorial Service of Bishop Holland Nimmons McTyeire.

BY MRS. L. CRARY SADLER.

I bring my alabaster box,
Dis memory to perfume;
The frankincense of one true heart
That weeps around his tomb.

Upon this altar—sacred place—
I lay my offering down;
Tho' he for whom we mourn to-day
Has gone to wear his crown.

The mem'ry of the just is blest,
And he was just, indeed.
He lived to work for God and man,
And love was all his creed.

But, O, the aloes and the myrrh
Breathes from the box I bring
A bitter perfume o'er us all;
But, hark! the angels sing

Celestial songs to welcome him.
Then let our mourning cease;
His ear hath caught the seraph's note,
And answers back, "Peace, peace."

Texas Notes.

BY REV. H. W. WILLIAMS.

The subject of Christian education is always timely, always appropriate, always important. A few words in regard to our church schools in Texas would, therefore, be of interest. First among these I would mention Southwestern University, at Georgetown. It began the year with increased and liberal patronage, and has made steady progress up to the present time. The helping hall is full, and the various Conferences are aiming to build cottages on the ground for the accommodation of students. The contract for the North Texas cottage has already been let. The annex building is now about completed. Provision is thus made for the accommodation of the young ladies, whose interests will be carefully looked after. The members of the faculty are persons of learning and piety, and a good religious influence prevails among the students.

It appears that the attendance at Waco Female College exceeds the capacity to accommodate. A contract has recently been let for a new building. Central College, located at Sulphur Springs, is reported to be in a healthy and prosperous condition, having recently received liberal contributions for its support. The North Texas Female College, under the presidency of Mrs. L. A. Kidd, gains steadfast footing at every step.

The Granbury College building was burned a few years ago, but promptly rebuilt. This school has been in successful operation for fifteen years, with usually a good attendance. There is, however, a debt of $6,000 against it, secured by a mortgage, which will be closed in May if the money is not paid. Here is an opportunity for some of the rich men of our church to make a wise use of money in helping out an institution that has done much for the cause of Christian education in Northwest Texas. Who will respond to this Macedonian cry?

Our Cumberland Presbyterian brethren are also moving forward along the line of Christian culture and instruction. Hitherto they have had no female seminary in the State. Recently they have decided to establish a first-class female seminary in the city of Weatherford. This was secured in consequence of a proposition made by the Commercial Union Club, of that city, to donate eight acres of ground and the sum of $20,000 in money, to be expended in buildings and furniture. The enterprise will not only be a source of great gain to the Cumberland Presbyterian Church in Texas, but also highly advantageous to the city securing the location of the school.

From various pastoral charges we have encouraging reports of gospel successes. A revival at Cleburne some time ago resulted in 129 conversions, and 84 accessions to our church. The town was wonderfully revolutionized, and other churches received accessions also. A meeting at Waxahachie lasted three weeks, and resulted in great good. Over one hundred joined the Methodist Church. A recent revival at McKinney has stirred the town, aroused the church, and saved a large number of persons. Such are the consequences which follow the faithful preaching of the Word of God.

In view of the many gracious revivals that have resulted from the labors of pastors and evangelists, let us thank God and rejoice. When the Word of God is preached in its fullness and simplicity, and not weakened and diluted by loose theology and wrong methods, it does reach the hearts of the people. The gospel is still the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth. The preaching of to-day is not ineffectual, and the story of the cross has not ceased to exert its divine influence in renewing and transforming the moral character of individuals.

Dr. Foster's Idea of "Christian Womanhood."

BY REV. J. A. PARKER.

Of the many and strange opinions of men which I have heard or read, I have no hesitancy in saying that the sentiments expressed in the paper from the pen of our good Bro. Foster, and published in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, of February 21, are entitled to the premium. It seems that his object is to prove that woman is, by divine authority, both unfitted and unqualified to enter any business or profession which has heretofore been engaged in by the other sex. Instead of offering proof-texts from the Sacred Word, he theorizes at large, bringing in such sentences and parts of sentences as help him to express his views. The long quotation from Paul, about the behavior of the older women towards the younger women, can not even express an idea outside of the married circle. The whole thing applies to those who have husbands, and to none others. The idea of teaching widows and single women to "love their husbands!" Then when the Doctor comes to theorize about Adam! He places him in a "garden" full of "statuary of pure gold and precious stones," including, "perhaps, a beautiful model of the coming Eve—which so charmed Adam that even the Lord himself could not reconcile him, * * * 'till woman smiled!'" Moreover, he supposes "the good Lord delayed a while the making of Eve, that Adam might experience what solitude was!"

This will be news to men who have studied this question from scientific points of view, for really we have believed, and do yet believe, that both Adam and Eve were the result of one day's work. Maybe the Doctor has found in some of his archæological investigations some proof of the fact that Eve was a sort of layniappe, and does not primarily belong to the genus homo. At any rate, he is certain that Adam was made "in the image and likeness of God;" but he does not say so much for woman. If the Doctor will read Genesis i, 26, 27, I think he will modify his opinion.

I hope the Doctor will tell us what man was made for, if the woman was made for the man; and also, what pre-eminence, if any, God gave the man over the woman.

Permit me to suggest this to the good Doctor:

1. The proper way to honor a person is to confer upon them as much privilege as possible, and, at the same time, the least possible responsibility.

2. In the history of civilization woman's sphere is enlarged in proportion to the grade of civilization. Among savages she is the slave, among Pagans she is the servant; but among Christians she is an equal. At least, this is Paul's idea of Christian civilization.

3. There can be but little honor in petting a woman, calling her sweet, beautiful, angelic, and the like, and, at the same time, refuse her the privilege of calling sinners to repentance.

4. There would not be much liberty for a woman carried to a palace, and told that she must stay at home, because she was too pure and sweet to go out to "heal the sick," or to "lend the blind."

Letter from South Carolina.

BY REV. H. BASCOM BROWNE.

South Carolina keenly feels the loss of our good and wise Bishop McTyeire. An eminent layman, who reads the family of Advocates, said to me the other day: "I had no idea that the Bishop had so impressed the church, far and wide, as he has." He loved his native State, and especially old Barnwell. He made occasional visits to the home of his early youth, and loved to linger amidst the scenes of his boyhood. Once, when nearing his old home, he had Uncle Si to stop the buggy, when he stepped aside in the wood and appeared to be searching for some peculiar spot, and finally said: "Yes; here is where the dog caught the rabbit." His memory of scenes and facts of the long ago, as well of yesterday, was remarkable. The last time he was in Charleston he preached the centennial sermon of Bethel Church, and reopened that edifice after the great earthquake disaster. I remember that, just before leaving us for Nashville, the conversation was in reference to a more thorough training for the pulpit, when he remarked in his own inimitable way: "If a man is going to chop wood for a day, he will do better to first spend a half-hour in grinding his axe."

The Rev. William Martin died recently. He was the oldest effective member of our Conference, having been admitted in 1828. He had rendered valuable service to the church, and his presence will be missed at our annual gatherings. These links that bind us to the pioneer days of Methodism are not like ropes of sand, but are the links of the great cable that shall carry the electric story of the toils and triumphs of the fathers down to the latest generation.

The South Carolina Conference Brotherhood is now a permanent institution with us, and has been the means of immediately relieving a number of saddened homes. The design is purely benevolent, the aged preachers being received on the same terms as the younger brethren are. The only qualification is membership in the Conference, and the payment of fifty cents entrance fee. When a member dies, the surviving clerical members pay three dollars to the family of the deceased, and the non-beneficiary (lay) members one dollar each. This has, so far, realized from $450 to $500. An earnest effort is now being made to increase the number of lay members, who, with only the pure desire to help the needful, contribute their part. Our average annual death-rate for the past two decades has been about 2½ to 3.

The assessment for superannuated preachers, widows and orphans in our Conference has been increased from $8,000 to $11,000, and still the allowance to these worthy servants is meagre. But there is no prospect of another increase in the near future, for the other collections, in the aggregate, now amount to about fifty per cent. of pastors' salaries, and at many points a reaction would not be surprising. It is worthy of remark that, excepting the Virginia Conference, and, perhaps, one other Conference, our preachers are paid the highest average salaries in the connection.

Our collections for the past year were in advance of all past history, and the hugle cry is to go unto perfection. The stations have always been in the front ranks in the matter of liberality, but now many of our well-developed circuits are coming to the front, and are doing nobly.

Revivals in town and country resulted in the ingathering of hundreds last year, and the blessed influence was far-reaching in every department. The camp-meetings in this low country reminded the old members of the olden days. Conversions clear and unquestionable were cause for shouting and triumph. In some sections the holiness movement, peculiarly so called (or second blessing theory), has given concern to the church. Some fear only ill will work to the church as a final result. Others are content if, by any means, the church is raised to a higher plane, it will be well. All are agreed that it is still the one business of Methodism to spread scriptural holiness over these lands; and I believe the old South Carolina Conference is as true to her work of preaching and practicing holy living as the fathers were.

Bishop Keener is to be with us at our District Conference in April, to be held in Beaufort. This old town is about the center of the Garden of Eden, which the Bishop locates between the Santee and Savannah rivers. His articles have attracted much attention. Our city press constantly refers to this section as, at least, the present Eden. The Bishop is always received with profound respect and love by South Carolinians. Many preachers went away from the last Annual Conference more surely trusting in that never-failing Providence about which the good Bishop preached on Thanksgiving Day.

In my way of thinking, a preacher never proves more emphatically his unfitness for any appointment than when he thinks himself too good for any save first-rate ones.

Is There Not a Mistake?

BY REV. J. D. HOFFPAUIR.

I have long been noticing such remarks as the following in regard to the appointments of preachers: "That man deserves a better appointment;" "That man is coming down;" "That work (especially if it is a good one) should have a better preacher." And if I can read the signs of the times correctly, there is a prevalent practice of judging of the quality and merits of a preacher by the quality of the work he is sent to serve. If he serves a third-rate appointment, he is a third-rate preacher; and if he serves a first-rate appointment—well, the inference is plain.

I know nothing of the working of the Bishops and their Cabinet, but I am inclined to think there is a slight mistake in thus invariably estimating preachers and their work. If the Bishop and his Cabinet see a weak work struggling for life, and they have at their command a good preacher—a man that would rank well—and by sending this man to said weak work, it could be built up, would it be anything more than just to send him to it? Would it be a discounting of the preacher and his talent? Could it be considered a waste of talent? Would it justify the remark so often heard, "That preacher is coming down?" Coming down, indeed! Is there any coming down in going to save poor lost souls and build up our common cause? Yes: verily such a coming down as that exhibited by our blessed Savior, when he came to earth "and took upon himself the form of a servant," "to seek and to save that which was lost." Is not this idea of change of position, as well as place, included in our itinerant system? And, after all, the change of position in point of importance is more apparent than real. Any place where we can work for the Master is an exalted position. Was Paul underrated when commanded to turn from the Jews to the Gentiles? Was he coming down when called into Macedonia, and there had to suffer? Was he losing rank when sailing a prisoner to Rome?

There is evidently a mistake somewhere. If 'tis a fact, that poor preachers are always sent to poor, puny works, it is a mighty good way to keep them poor and puny. I am not ready to believe that our good Bishops and their Cabinet are guilty of this mistake. If not, then we, as a band of preachers, are mistaken in estimating our standing in the Conference by the grade of our appointment every time. Then we should throw all such thoughts and sayings, as I have reference to, to the wind, and if sent to a work not considered first class, go to work like honest men, in the strength of God, and make it better. If I had my choice, I would prefer being sent to a work considered inferior, and when I left it, leave it better than when I went to it, to being sent to a first-class work, and leave it something the worse. I am a young preacher, and write for the young preachers; the older ones need not read.

In my way of thinking, a preacher never proves more emphatically his unfitness for any appointment than when he thinks himself too good for any save first-rate ones.

Missions.

BY REV. A. D. MILLER.

I am a strong believer in missions, both foreign and domestic, and am confident that we, as a church, are very far below our obligation with regard to missionary work, for the reasons:

(1) It may be, and doubtless is, a fact that we, as ministers, have not presented the matter as plainly and urgently to our people as we ought; and (2) our people have not sought and obtained the information they might have obtained by taking and reading our missionary literature. And the result is, that we are very far beneath our duty and privilege as missionary workers. But I do hope the time is not far in the future when we will awake from our sleep and arise from the dead lethargy into which we have fallen; that Christ may give us light, and that we may transmit the light to our heathen brethren, far and near.

And now, Mr. Editor, I know of nothing more likely to awaken thought and stimulate our people to action than a sermon by our own Rev. T. L. Mellen (of the Mississippi Conference), and published in pamphlet form by our Publishing House. (Title, "Obligations and Objections.") And I would here and now commend it to our people as one of the ablest productions it has been my privilege to read on the subject of missions; and I verily believe if our people would get and read and ponder said sermon, that we would have very little trouble in getting our missionary money. Let everybody get and read said sermon from our Publishing House.

But, Mr. Editor, I set out to write about the Indians in our State (Mississippi), and I know we have greatly neglected our duty with regard to this race of people in our midst. We (our Conference) have been talking for several years of getting a missionary to preach to them; but, up to the present, talk is about all we have done, and I, for one, am afraid to meet them at the judgment bar without making some effort for their salvation. And what we do we ought to do quickly.

So I now make this proposition: that I will be one out of one hundred that will obligate myself, by the help of Almighty God, to pay five dollars annually (extra of regular missionary collections), for the next five years, to support a missionary to preach to the Indians in Mississippi; the first five to be paid over to Bishop Galloway as soon as the one hundred names can be obtained, with notes for the other four annual installments, to be used according to Bishop Galloway's godly judgment in inaugurating and carrying on the work. And, furthermore, I will be one of one hundred that will pay five dollars for the purpose of erecting a parsonage for said missionary to live in, said parsonage to be located and built by a committee appointed by Bishop Galloway, and amounts to be paid to Bishop Galloway as soon as the one hundred names can be obtained.

Now, brethren, who will be one of the ninety and nine? I will not confine these propositions to the Methodists of Mississippi, but liberal-hearted men with liberal amounts may help us from anywhere; but let us have the one hundred names under each proposition at once.

CARO, Mississippi.

That Pounding.

Having read much in your valuable paper of preachers being pounded and parsonages stormed, I thought nothing in that line would be at all surprising. Behold here comes a grave (?) presiding elder, with much suavity, yet with the dignity of a chief justice; tells us, in "mourning numbers," that he has been pounded all along the line from Dan to Beersheba.

And oh! those terrible strokes! Mr. Editor, you certainly can not realize the effect of those strokes on the mental man, or you would not wish to exchange your tripod, to say nothing of those before-mentioned adjuncts of editorial dignity for a "presiding elder's saddle."

As for the saddle, it would be as comfortable as that easy chair in your sanctum, and you would not have to climb as high to get to it; but the horse—"that's the rub." Sometimes the horse is too fast, then too slow, and when you are in the biggest hurry, he don't go at all. Then, alas! for the saddle! "Distance lends no enchantment to the view." A new pair of boots and a heavy grip-sack neither lend enchantment nor give comfort. From the $250 circuit in Dan that wants "a stronger man," you cast a longing look to the hills of Beersheba, where wife and bairns lend all the enchantment there is in the view; and, with a sigh, you think of the stuffed pigeon-holes, the piles of letters, the pencil-written MS., the scissors, the beaver—the silk—and you exclaim: "O, Bro. Stirling, thou hast conquered! Take your saddle and your poundings; give me back my tripod." TEROL.

Read the Bible when you are fresh and wide awake; when the brain is clear and you are not pressed for time. Read it as the only book on earth that has dropped down from heaven, as your directory for life and your guide to immortality, and it will become a new book to you altogether.—Rev. J. Thain Davidson.

WANTED

Wanted—in places of folly and sin,
Courage, those wayward souls to win,
Voices, to tell the meed of Jesus' love,
Faith, that points to the rest above.

Wanted—we cry the homes of the poor,
Christian love to open the door;
Gentle hearts, to soothe the pain
That to the world comes of mind and brain.

Wanted—in the business hours of man,
The golden rule in each trade to plan,
Deal out we say, whatever we do,
That the love of God may shine all through.

Wanted—grace in heart's deepest loss,
Trials, to burn the gold from the dross;
Will, to bow in obedience mild
To the rule of Christ, as a little child.

Wanted—wisdom, power's true love,
To show Christ's all deep sin and cure;
Perfect trust in a living God,
Walking the path our Savior trod

Wanted—to be kept from evil here,
To live in life love without a tear—
Nothing to know but his will divine,
And that I am his, and he is mine.

Mississippi Methodist College.

AN APPEAL TO METHODISTS.

The committee of the Mississippi and the North Mississippi Conferences, at their session in Jackson, February 14, appointed the undersigned to prepare for publication an address to the Methodists of the State in advocacy of a Mississippi Methodist college for boys and young men.

The necessity for such an institution is manifest in such facts as these: There is no Methodist college in the State—not even a high school or classical academy under the control of our church. We are practically doing nothing for the Christian education of our boys, and have done very little for many years; and that, too, in the presence of the fact that there are, in round numbers, seventy-five thousand white members of the Methodist Church in Mississippi, and many thousands more who look to us for religious teaching and Christian education. The Presbyterians, so small in number compared to our church, have a well-endowed, prosperous collegiate institute at Port Gibson, and one of much influence and growing power at French Camps. Their institutions afford preparation for advanced classes in the university at Clarksville, or give a solid education in the classics and mathematics for professional or business life. The Baptists, with about our membership in addition to several high schools, have their splendid Mississippi College, at Clinton, with an attendance this session of two hundred and fifty pupils; and the average patronage for years has been over two hundred. The Baptists, though they have colleges in Louisiana, in Alabama, in Tennessee and Arkansas, have felt the imperative necessity of a home college for their people; and the great work done in the way of educated laymen and well-equipped preachers has vindicated their policy. A multitude of young men—well trained in science, literature and the classics—go forth, year by year, into all the professions and callings of life, dyed-in-the-wool Baptists. Full of zeal and enthusiasm, and with an intelligent comprehension of the wants and duties of the church, they are making their church a great, aggressive and progressive power in the field of Christian work.

It may be that there are Methodists in Mississippi who think that because the Mississippi Conference is joint proprietor of Centenary College, and the North Mississippi Conference in Vanderbilt, and the Southern University at Greensboro, Ala., is more accessible to many of our people than either of the other two, that there is no necessity for a Methodist college in Mississippi. Let such consider this: that, according to the latest information accessible in regard to these institutions, there are not exceeding ten boys each in their collegiate department; making, in a liberal estimation, a total of (say) thirty boys from Mississippi in Methodist colleges in other States.

The Master commended the children of this world, in that they were wiser in their generation than the children of light. Does not the educational policy of Mississippi Methodism illustrate the truth of this maxim? In all lines of secular business men abandon a policy that has proved a failure; yet we, the Methodists of Mississippi, are pertaciously adhering to a policy upon whose forefront "failure" was written in indelible characters years ago. For many years the most persistent efforts have been made to turn our Mississippi Methodist boys to colleges beyond our limits. That we have made a signal failure, who can deny? No discount is made upon the institutions named. Vanderbilt is the pride and glory of Southern Methodism, and deserves the widest sympathy and largest support. Greensboro has come to the very front rank, noble and strong, and intent upon still greater things than already achieved; while Centenary deserves to be what we hope she will ere long become—a commanding power in Christian education in all the fertile region tributary to her, a region destined at no distant day to be filled with an intelligent population, who will look to her for religious culture. But the fact remains that our boys do not attend these institutions, and have not done so in the past quarter of a century; and any hope that they will do so in the future seems utterly delusive. Now, since there are only about thirty boys in all the Methodist colleges, where are the remainder of our youth? According to the statement of a member of the faculty of that institution, twenty-five Methodist boys are in the Baptist college at Clinton—nearly as many as are found from the whole State of Mississippi in all our Methodist colleges. Let us ponder over this fact. It means Methodist boys away from home—from their pastors, churches, Sunday-schools, and all the tender ties and sweet associations of their own home and church-life in the most formative and impressible period of life—under Baptist influence utterly—Baptist preaching, Baptist teaching, with all the deference and docility that accomplished teachers inspire; Baptist worship, Baptist companionship in the social circle, in the class-room, in the literary societies—everywhere and in everything there is a silent, unconscious, well nigh resistless power modifying the religious beliefs and shaping the church-life; and this, too, it may be, without an open, direct effort at proselyting.

There are in the State University, at Oxford, fifty Methodist boys, and in the Agricultural and Mechanical College (say) eighty—one hundred and thirty in all. It has always been held by all denominations of Christians, and in all ages, that the collegiate and university training of their youth could not, without peril, be relegated to State institutions. Soon after the planting of the Christian Church among the nations, there were established seats of learning for the education of her future clergy, and of the sons of the nobility, gentry and common people. Out of these have grown the famous universities of Great Britain and the Continent. But when the Church and the State were united, and these schools became State schools, it came to pass that many of them lost their Christian character; and the mortifying spectacle has been witnessed for centuries of men, occupying professorships in institutions endowed by Christian men and women, openly attacking Christianity and seeking its overthrow. Many of the stale stock arguments against religion one meets with are but the echoes of men filling chairs of instruction in institutions once Christian, but now fallen under the power of a Christless court and State. The evangelical churches—Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, and all—have been forced to establish their own denominational colleges, in order to secure for their sons the religious culture which the great State universities did not afford. When the colonists came over to this country, it was but a short time before they began to found colleges for the Christian education of their boys. Thus arose Harvard and Yale, Brown and Amherst, Princeton and Dartmouth; and as the tides of population swept on westward and southward, denominational colleges sprang up everywhere.

The wisdom of this policy is manifest to every true Christian who will reflect seriously upon the matter. The Christian education of her sons is a work which the Church can not relegate to the State without proving recreant to the trust reposed in her by her divine Founder. Methodism surely, of all denominations, can least afford to take this backward step.

It is a lamentable fact that far too many of our boys are growing up without the benefits of a collegiate education. We have no college in our State to compel attention by its very presence to college life, and by its cheapness and excellency of work to stimulate attendance; hence our people here become apathetic to the claims of Christian education. Our preachers, too, being divided in opinion as to which college in other States ought to receive our scant patronage, take but little interest in the matter, and, in marked contrast with the ministers of other denominations, especially our Baptist brethren, are doing almost nothing to help needy young men of promise in their preparation for the pastorate and other high callings in life. The Baptists, it is believed, have as many boys in Oxford and Starkville as the Methodists have; and even if they have none in other States (and they have several), there would be more than two hundred Baptist boys in excess of Methodist boys in colleges; and this is, doubtless, due to the fact that they have a college in the State, while we have none. This also explains why fewer college graduates are entering our ministry than years ago, while there is a steady increase among the Baptists and Presbyterians. The statistics are not at hand to enable us to make a positive statement as to the exact number, but it is believed that in the last decade not more than half as many college graduates have joined our two Conferences as have gone into the ministry of these sister churches. This is not at all surprising when we reflect that we are doing practically nothing in the education of our boys. The great law of supply and demand obtains in the realm of education and religion no less than in the economies of production and exchange. A railroad built through a country creates values and develops resources. Even a canning factory located in a town will modify its industries, and change, in a large measure, the habits of its people. In like manner, a college located in our midst will create among our young men a desire for learning and a realization of the possibility of its attainment. Our preachers would be enthusiastic in the support of an institution to which they could repair with pride to hear, from pulpit and rostrum, the magnates of our Israel; to look upon the inspiring spectacle of halls crowded with students, and to reflect upon the possibilities that lie within reach of their own offspring—possibilities which fortune never placed within their grasp. Such an institution would be a constant and powerful stimulus to the liberality of our people. And who will deny that Methodism needs to cultivate "grace of liberality," especially as regards the cause of education? Seventy-five thousand Methodists in one State, and having such immense resources as we possess, doing practically nothing for the cause of Christian education, is a spectacle which is out of harmony with the spirit of the age in which we live. This muscle of our body has become shrunken and dwarfed from want of exercise. A first-class Methodist college in our midst will enable our people to realize, as they have never done before, the blessedness of giving. Such a college would be visited from year to year by sweeping revivals of religion that would bring into the church multitudes of college boys, many of whom would enter the ministry. These revivals in colleges are a part of the very life of evangelical Christianity. No attentive observer of current events needs to be told that these great outpourings of the Spirit scarcely ever occur in State schools. If we want our children to become Methodists of the true pattern—i. e., Christians who have the power as well as the form of godliness—we must educate them at our own schools. But in no respect is the need for a Methodist college in Mississippi more apparent than in regard to ministerial education.

One Presbytery in Mississippi has twelve young men in school studying for the ministry. The Baptists have forty-six at Clinton alone, some supported in part by the church, and others to the full extent of their expenses. Have the two Mississippi Conferences as many as ten preparing for the ministry? And why is it that the few we do have take only a partial course, so that nowadays we hardly ever get a graduate? It is acknowledged, with gratitude that the general level of ministerial culture is higher among us than ever before; yet the deplorable fact remains that college-bred men, thoroughly educated men, are coming to us, as stated above, less frequently than years ago. But education among the people generally is receiving more attention than ever before, is held in higher esteem, means more, and is worth more, and the want of it draws a heavier discount than in former times. The State institutions, the colleges and high schools around us, are pouring into all lines of business and professional life every year thoroughly equipped, well-educated young men, refined and elegant in manners, and cultured in mind. There are probably six hundred Mississippi Methodist girls now in college. Girl graduates, by the wholesale, have their names in our cities, villages and country places. They are cultured and polished, elegant and fastidious, and experts by years of careful training in all that is beautiful and graceful in art, literature and life. Where are these girls to find congenial husbands? In another church, and be lost to ours, as many are every year? How are we to hold these great numbers of educated men and women? Who but an educated, loyal, consecrated laity and clergy can read the signs of the times, and educate our people into that abundance of life and largeness of liberality that God demands of us?

Look on this picture: A young man, yet in his teens, leaves his shop, or his plough in the furrow, and rides off to the "big meeting." He is powerfully converted to God; he is called of God to preach; the call comes as clear and distinct as if it fell upon him in an audible voice from heaven; and, with a soul of great possibilities, and all aflame with the love of God and of lost souls, he goes for advice to his pastor, singing as he goes, "The half hath never been told of love so full and free." He learns that to join Conference he must pass an examination, and so, between manual labor and attendance on meetings, and the heaven of love into which he has entered, he crams up on the most elementary branches of education; the committee squeezes him through; the Conference admits him, and the Bishop sends him to the swamp, or a backwoods mission. He has no books, and, if he had, he does not know how to use them (it takes years in school to learn that), and, if he knew how, he has no time, for he is kept moving by the demands of his work and his "quarterage." Round and round he goes, from year to year, with his sweet wife and promising children, perplexed and worried, and wrestling with the question as to how all these are to live on two or three hundred dollars a year; does the best he can, and the wonder is how well he does on such slender means. After awhile he is put on a circuit that has a railroad town on it, and the good man is glad that his family will be near the church and the school-house, and he hopes that there will be now an increase in his salary. He rides into town to preach his first sermon and find a house to move into. It is a beautiful Sabbath morning. Lawyers, doctors, teachers, merchants and sweet girl graduates are all out in full force, and the old brethren and sisters are in the "amen" corners, dubious and timid, for they have heard about the new preacher. He goes through with the services, prays and preaches, but the congregation was snowing on him. He was not at himself, for he felt what an ordeal of cruel criticism and harsh judgment he was enduring. No wonder he failed and the people were disappointed! Poor fellow!—if he were only in the pulpit of the country church, away back in the hills, such as that where mercy found him, he would thunder and roar, and happy faces and streaming eyes and Christian sympathy and prayer and hearty responses would make him a giant in the work of the Lord. But in this new field many of the educated young people, and some of the church officials, soon leave their own church to hear the nice young Baptist or Presbyterian minister across the street; and the old brethren and sisters, with some irritation, wonder why the Bishop sent that man here. Had they taken the money out of their pockets and put it in the brains of that preacher, he would have taken that town by storm, and the old brethren and sisters would have made the "amen" corners ring with hallelujahs. That preacher was a diamond in the rough, and only needed the lapidary of a college training to cut, polish and set it, and make it a gem of the first water, of priceless value in the church, and a real Kohinoor, to shine a sparkling brilliant in the Savior's crown. The petulance with which congregations ask "why this man was sent here," reminds one of an incident in the closing hour of terrible Waterloo. Blucher had come up with heavy reinforcements for the allies, and Wellington was driving the British battalions like wedges of iron into the melting ranks of the French. A field marshal most sorely pressed, sent to Napoleon an urgent request for more men. "More men!" said Napoleon, petulantly; "can I make men?" Can the Bishops make preachers to order as a shoemaker does shoes? Shame on us, as a church, that we sit still in our lazhess and stinginess and complain of the want of culture in our preachers, when we have hardly given a dollar to help educate one of them, hardly a dollar to equip a college where they might be trained!

But a great day is about to break on Mississippi Methodism. Our people are thinking, conferring, praying, and moving up. At the meeting of the joint committee in Jackson, a layman, who was educated in a Methodist college, and who knows, by a happy experience, the benefits of such an education, made a telling speech in favor of the college, and tendered to the church a donation of fifty thousand dollars, on condition that the church shall raise an equal sum. It is understood that several places in the State are preparing to offer all the grounds needed, and a considerable sum of money ($50,000 in some instances) to secure the location of the college. Whatever amount may be raised in this way will be used in erecting suitable buildings. The church must raise $50,000, to be used with the $50,000 already donated as an endowment fund. Only after this endowment fund of $100,000 is raised will we consider the question of location. Here, then, is the work to which Mississippi Methodism must address itself—the raising of $50,000 to be used as an endowment fund. Does this seem a large sum? We think not, under the circumstances. If one Mississippi Methodist is willing to give $50,000, ought not seventy-five thousand others to do as much? We have many laymen who can give us a handsome sum—one thousand, or, perhaps, five or ten thousand dollars. Then we have a very much larger number who can give us sums ranging from one hundred to five hundred dollars. And almost everyone can do something. Let no one excuse himself on the ground that he can give but little. The widow's mite, small, though it may be in the estimation of the money changer, because of the self-sacrifice it represents is of priceless value in the sight of Him who sits over against the treasury and takes note of its contents.

When Lord Nelson was about to engage in battle against the allied fleets, and when the fate of England and, as Lord Macaulay says, the fate of Protestant Christianity hung in suspense, he passed through his ships the thrilling watchword, "England expects every man to do his duty." A crisis equally great is now upon us. Failure now means a golden opportunity gone forever; means irreparable loss to our church for years to come. We must raise the $50,000. We ought to raise three times that sum. Let the cry ring along all the lines of Mississippi Methodism: "The great Head of the church expects every man to do his duty."

Three Reasons Why.

When the fact is made known that some of our church papers have such a small circulation, many persons spread their eyes, and, in great surprise, exclaim: Why is it? 'Tis strange! 'Tis mysteriously strange! But this mystery is in one respect like all others. When the whys are known, the mysteriousness vanishes.

I do not claim that the appended reasons are the only whys; but I do claim that they are the principal whys that some of our papers have such limited circulation.

1. A great many of our people are afraid to take and read them, lest they should condemn them for their illiberality and sloth in religious matters generally, and they would be led to higher planes of Christian living and to pay the Lord his dues. They are afraid of the light.

2. The pastors, or many of them, who are the agents for these papers, present the paper in a careless, uninterested and uninteresting way, and quickly drop the matter lest they should offend or disgust. The fact that they seem indifferent begets the same in the people. They merely say: "Do you take our church paper? Well, you ought to." And there the matter ends. They never argue and demonstrate, clearly and convincingly, the duty and profit, personal and general, of subscription, but simply, incidentally broach the subject, and then let it rest. Pastors, it is an established fact that, when you help your paper you help your people and also help yourself.

3. The last, but by no means the least, is, some editors prefer using the scissors to the pen. I admit that using the pen is labor; thinking is labor, and so also is arguing; but, then, there can be probability, no hope of success in anything without labor. Then let us labor, for we must succeed.

To read some of our church papers makes one think of a backwoods' preacher who for years has been preaching the same sermon to the same people. He again and again asks the people to give him their attention while he recites the same old threadbare anecdotes.

Now, dearly beloved editors, lay down your scissors, take up your pen, and give us something new as well as old, and we will prepare us a big paper speech and press the dear Advocates so tight to the lean hearts of our people that they will take the paper to stop the cannon's mouth, if for nothing else.

Sunday-School Lesson.

(Hurlburt and Simpson's Lesson Commentary, Phillips & Hunt, New York.)

LESSON XI.—March 17.

CHRIST'S LOVE TO THE YOUNG.

Mark x, 13-22.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not; for of such is the kingdom of God.—Mark x, 14.

TIME.—A. D. 29. Shortly before the crucifixion.

PLACE.—Perea, on the east side of the river Jordan.

PARALLEL PASSAGES.—Matt. xix, 13-22; Luke xviii, 15-17.

13. They brought young children to him—St. Luke (xviii, 15) uses a word which implies infancy. The fact that they were brought indicates that there was something in our Lord's look and manner that attracted children, and impressed their parents with the feeling that he loved them. Touch them—Hebrew mothers were accustomed in this manner to seek a blessing for their children from the presidents of the synagogues, who were wont to lay their hands upon them. His disciples rebuked those that brought them—That is, reproved them, or told them it was improper. This they did, probably, either, first, because they thought they were too young; or, second, because they thought they would be troublesome to their Master.

14. He was much displeased—The language of the original is much stronger; so it is expressed in the Revised Version. Moved with indignation—The disciples had already been cautioned about their treatment of children. (Matt. xviii, 10-14.) Suffer the little children to come unto me—It was a thing highly gratifying to him, and which he earnestly sought, that children should be brought to him; and a case where it was very improper that they should interfere. Of such is the kingdom of God—Of children and of child-like souls. For the adult man must become child-like to be fit for the kingdom of Heaven.

15. Receive ... as a little child—In that spiritual condition which the child in conscious symbolism represents by its disposition.

16. Took them up in his arms ... blessed them—It teaches, first, his sympathy for and with children; second, our right to bring children to him for blessing, and this before they can understand anything concerning him or his truth; third, that they are members of Christ's kingdom, are so regarded by him, and are to be so regarded by us, and this irrespective of any parental faith, for there is no declaration here of parental faith, nor is it even stated that these children were brought by their parents, much less that they were received for their parents' sake; fourth, that such as die before they have wandered out of God's kingdom into the kingdom of Satan are certainly saved, since they are "of the kingdom of Heaven;" fifth, it condemns all conduct on the part of the church, the teacher or the parent which tends to repress, chill or check the enthusiasm of childhood for Christ, and darken its simple faith in him.

17. Gone forth into the way—From some house where he had been stopping. Then came one running and kneeled—His rapid movement indicated his earnest feeling; his kneeling indicated his reverence. Good master—This was a new and a very studied title by which to address our Lord. Others had called him Lord and Son of David; but he is a noble Jew, who must give a polite address without quite admitting that he is addressing the Messiah. What shall I do that I may inherit eternal life—The question exhibits the highest and noblest phase of Pharisaicism. The seeker has a firm belief in something that he knows as "eternal life." He thirsts for it eagerly. He believes that it is to be won as a perpetual inheritance by some one good deed of exceptional and heroic goodness. He feels that he has as yet done no deed that can claim that character. The Teacher has left on him the impression of a goodness such as he had seldom, if ever, seen before, and as being, therefore, able to guide him to the supreme good.

18. Why callest thou me good—If we may combine what seems to be the true reading of St. Matthew with the answer recorded in the other evangelists, our Lord seems to have said to him, "Why askest thou me about the good? and why callest thou me good? One is the good, even God." He would as little accept the title "Good" as he would accept the title "Messiah," when given in a false sense. He would not be regarded as that mere "good Rabbi" to which, in these days more than ever, men would reduce him. So far, Jesus would show the youth that when he came to him as to one who was more than man, his entire address, as well as his entire question, was a mistake. The sole reason, then, for his appearing to disclaim the application of the title to himself was an unwillingness to accept it when erroneously applied. None good but one, that is, God—"Why do you ask me what is right to do?" answered Jesus. "Your question is superfluous, for it answers itself. There is only one Absolute Good—that is, God. The good act respecting which you inquire can be nothing else than perfect obedience to his holy will. If you really would enter into life eternal, you must keep the commandments given thee by him."

19. Thou knowest the commandments—Jesus, as the youth wanted to do something, tells him merely of those of the Second Table, for, as has been well remarked, "Christ sends the proud to the Law, and invites the humble to the Gospel." Defraud not—Mark has the addition of "Defraud not;" representing probably the tenth commandment.

20. All these have I observed—He has kept them, as he imagines, until they have grown commonplace. At the same time a sense of the insufficiency of his own righteousness does not allow him ease. He has no full sense of peace with God. He wishes some new prescription, by which he may feel that he is a sure heir of eternal life.

21. Jesus beholding him loved him—Jesus read his heart in a moment, and was won by the guilelessness of his answer and question, and by the evident worth of his character. As he looked at him, so earnest, so humble, so admirable in his life and spirit, he loved him. A peculiarly interesting fact as indicating divine insight blended with natural human feeling. That love explains the following command, which might otherwise have an aspect of sternness. One thing thou lackest—Literally, one thing is behindhand (wanting or deficient) to thee. And Jesus, seeing his sincerity, looking on him loved him, and gave him one short crucial test of his real condition. He was not content with the commonplace; he aspired after the heroical, or, rather, thought that he did; therefore, Jesus gave him an heroic act to do. Sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor—The man had grown prosperous, with all his commandment-keeping, and now he required to be sharply pulled upon the side of his wealth to see whether the commandments or the money had the greater hold upon him. There was no other method of meeting the case. The fortress of self must be stormed. Every prop must be struck down, every link broken, or he must remain outside the strait gate. The gospel does not, indeed, require of owners of property a general registration, so as to unsettle the foundations of the social system, but it does require such a consecration of all to God that when the duty is made known to give some, or much, or all, to God, the offering can be made. Treasure in heaven—The "treasure" is the "eternal life" which the young ruler is seeking, the memory of good deeds, the character formed and perfected, the vision of the presence of God. Take up the cross, and follow me—To follow Jesus then meant to be a personal attendant on his ministry; to go about with him from place to place, as well as to imitate and obey him. Now it means, 1. To obey his commandments. 2. To imitate his example, and live like him.

22. He was sad—"Sorrowful," says St. Matthew (xix, 22); "very sorrowful," says St. Luke, (xviii, 23); "Sad," says St. Mark, or rather lowering, with a cloud upon his brow. The original word occurs in one other place, Matthew xvi, 3, "for the sky is red and lowering." Mark expresses very graphically in the original the change in his countenance: "But he, saddened at the saying, went away grieved." It was too much. The young ruler went away very sorrowful, grief in his heart and a cloud upon his brow, for he had great possessions. He preferred the comforts of earth to the treasures of heaven; he would not purchase the things of eternity by abandoning those of time; he made, as Dante calls it, "the great refusal." And so he vanishes from the gospel history; nor do the evangelists know anything of him further.

Another Missionary from Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: You, and many of the readers of the ADVOCATE, have read the late appeals for help from our women in China, Brazil, and Mexican Border Missions: I write to tell you the help has come. One of our own members, an officer of our Conference society, has answered: "Here am I; send me." A more gifted young woman, one better qualified in every respect for the work required, could not be found than Miss Clara Chrisman, of Beauregard. She is a granddaughter of that whole-souled Methodist, Bro. Harvey Thompson, of Beauregard, Miss.

Miss Clara went to Nashville on February 15, to be examined with three others by the committee; her papers having preceded her. The following is the official record:

The corresponding secretary presented the papers of Miss Annie Clare Chrisman, Beauregard and Wesson circuit, Mississippi Conference. These testimonials were highly satisfactory. Help being greatly needed in Brazil, she was recommended to assist Miss Watts in the college at Piricicaba. She will be expected to sail June 5 to her field of labor.

Mr. Cunningham adds:

We were delighted with Miss Chrisman. Would that we had a dozen more such young ladies! Hope you will send somebody for China.

Do you think we can appreciate this gift from the Lord too highly? Ought we not to feel grateful to our God that he has so repeatedly honored our dear old Mississippi Conference Society? It looks as though the Lord were trying us, to see if we are as much in earnest about this work as we profess to be. We surely are very quiet about it. Instead of letting the work creep on as best it can, we ought to be full of enthusiasm; so charged that the whole community would feel it. Oh, that all of our auxiliaries would feel this enthusiasm, that they would appreciate this great work as they ought!

We have enough to encourage us. I have recently had letters from both of our representatives—Misses Hughes and McClellan. They are now together in Clopton School. Miss Hughes has charge now. They are "well and happy, hard at work." Miss Mary sent me a group-picture of all our fellow missionaries in China. Bishop Wilson and wife and Dr. Y. J. Allen are among them—eighteen in all. The card is 8x10, the faces large enough to be perfectly distinct. I wish you could see it: they all look natural and happy. This picture I have had copied, and can sell them for one dollar each. The profits will go to the society. There are so many who would like to have it, it may not be out of place to mention it here.

The time for the annual meeting of the Board has been fixed for May 9, at Little Rock, Ark. You know the annual meeting of our Conference society is to be held in Natchez: time not fixed yet. We would be very glad to have your presence at our meeting.

Very respectfully,

ANNIE LINFIELD.

CRYSTAL SPRINGS, MISS., Feb. 23, 1889.

Times and Seasons.

MR. EDITOR: How brave in you to urge the preachers to write! What liabilities you and Bro. Gant have incurred! When all the preachers write to you and the ten thousand and more subscribers are attained, how both of you will be involved in debt and labors and responsibilities! Let all hail the blessed time when, subjectively and objectively, the measure of possibilities of our great paper shall be filled. Fate has inscribed Excelsior upon your list of subscribers, and Fact reads it as the inspiration of every issue of the ADVOCATE.

When the pulpit preaches and the pews pray as you direct, there shall be many great things written and read. But at present of what shall we write? Against times and seasons as a subject Paul advised once. Yet these are always with us, upon tongue and pen. Shall we say that winter, who embraced us so warmly a few days ago, tosses in his icy fingers this morning many a frozen flower, victim of misplaced confidence in this cold traitor? That temerity has once more met its fate? That the blue-birds twittering and tapping at the window-pane, eliciting the genuine and beautiful sympathy of the children, echo the same truth! Let the moral be, "Soon, but not too soon." But nature teaches by utility. These birds and flowers are upon the shrine of earth's beauty and bliss.

Or shall we write of gifts of the people consequent upon kind receptions of the pastor, brightening these after-Conference days, and evoking mutual confidence as the blessedness of giving and receiving is enjoyed? Of such, pleasant experiences might be given. We will only inquire how many other pastors, among kindnesses and introductions, enjoyed receptions graced by the presence of a presiding elder's wife, and blessed with the ministry of her hands? But in these localities preachers are not strangers. Near us is Cane Ridge Church, in front of which is the grave of Dr. W. H. Watkins. To our parents belonged the benediction of his friendship and ministry; to us in infancy that of his hands in holy baptism. Near is the home of his boyhood. Near also is the home whence Rev. B. F. Jones went out to fulfill his calling. These places now serve as occasional and second homes, where holidays, made more pleasant by hallowed associations, are enjoyed by relatives, some of them members of our Conference.

While we remember the gifts of these places to the Conference and these men as gifts of God to the church, to-day recalls as anniversary his wonderful gift of a chieftain to our race and nation. Seven years and a century and a half ago to-day the God of truth gave us a leader of the people to the enjoyment of liberty and power that could have no other source and foundation than the principles of truth. One of earth's greatest to-day—Gladstone—declares that for sixty years he has considered Washington the greatest of all men.

Other things are also in season now. The ADVOCATE comes to us in mourning. The "Giver of every good and perfect gift" has "taken away"—are we not ready, as a church, to say?—our greatest. Deprive us of what we owe to the life and labors of our lamented Bishop McTyeire, and sad would be our loss. But God does not "take away" in the sense of such a deprivation. He gave a faithful, efficient laborer who has gone before to his reward, whose works do follow him. The God of all grace will still give, give to his church. His greatest gift, Emmanuel—"God with us," and that forever—shall never be taken away. Of him may we be able to preach and write, and of his wonderful works in the churches may many records be made in our beloved ADVOCATE this year!

J. WILSON BROWN.

A Location for the New College.

In order to locate a college wisely four things are requisite: money, health, accessibility, and insulation as respects other colleges. But since no location can be found, especially in Mississippi, to furnish all these requisites, it might be thought that wisdom suggests the one that can and would furnish the majority of these. If health is specially understood as one of the majority, we heartily concur to the conclusion, for all the rest would be wholly useless without health. In our humble judgment, therefore, Brandon is the place for our male college.

No one, perhaps, would venture to question its healthfulness, for it is conceded by all persons with whom we have been associated, who know anything about Brandon, that it is one of the healthiest towns anywhere. It is one mile from the railroad—which is a suitable distance for a college—and besides it is connected with the railroad by two stage lines. It is one of the most insulated towns, as respects male colleges, to be found anywhere. In the eastern part of the State is the A. & M. College; in the northern, the State University; in the western, the Baptist College, and at or near Kosciusko, the Presbyterian. So, you see, Brandon is the most central, healthy, accessible and insulated place, as respects male colleges; to be found anywhere in the State. Therefore, let us locate our Mississippi male college at Brandon.

ISAAC L. PEEBLES.

From the Work.

NATCHITOCHES, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Possibly a few words from this antique and dissimilar town will be of interest to some. Never have I found much trouble in dissenting to the truthfulness of that old aphorism—"There is nothing new beneath the skies;" but when the universality of the above phrase is destroyed by giving to it a local appellation, I acknowledge at once the genuineness of the maxim. This much to answer the numerous questions, naturally propounding themselves, to the mind of an ex-inhabitant. In many instances the same houses that covered the heads of our great-great-grandfathers as they reveled in the luxuries of primitive slavery, now are homes for their still extant progeny, continuing in their same beliefs, steering clear of all forms of proselytism.

The prison-like walls, the dungeon-like structures, standing firm upon their adamant foundations, almost defying "the wrecks of matter and the crash of worlds," compel us to notice the faultless strides of our pristine architects. Could the spirit of the founders of our town be heard to give, in their verdict upon the social, political and religious status, they would, with one record, exclaim, "There is nothing new in Natchitoches."

Having been in my new home for nearly two months, I find that my labors during this year will be among noble, hospitable, kind, big-hearted, people. Though we could not well call this a Christian town, yet for benevolence, charity, etc., the majority of this populace are strikingly characteristic. Though our church is not what it ought to be here, we hope, with the blessings of Almighty God upon our persistent efforts, and continuous labors, to move out of the pool of a sin-cursed stagnation into the swiftly flowing waters of a Savior's love. Our spiritual and financial strength has been gradually decreased during the last three or four years by death and removal. Our Sabbath-school, successfully carried on under the efficient management of Miss Alice Shields, is increasing in members and growing in interest. Our prayer meetings have just been organized, and have already proven as a great means of grace; singing, praying, and talking together in Christian love. Our Ladies' Aid Society has been resurrected, and has determined, at no distant day, to put some needed repairs on our church building. These noble, God-fearing ladies have taken hold of all church interests with such enthusiasm and zeal, that we hope to see them even eclipse the creditable works done by them here in the primitive days of Methodism.

So you see, our outlook is by no means discouraging. Remembering the truthfulness of that old Lutheran utterance, "The just shall live by faith," we shall pray, work and hope on, until the wilderness of sin will resound with the hallelujahs of the redeemed; and the desert places of iniquity blossom with the flowers of Christian love and friendship.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE—WATER VALLEY.

MR. EDITOR: The Minutes of our North Mississippi Conference to hand. They are a little late. I think the arrangement of them will generally please. The secretary, Bro. Barerolt, has done his work well. They contain, in the main, statistics very gratifying. It is rather surprising that the salaries paid presiding elders and preachers in charge are below last year. Further, that the church building did not add quite two houses. A careful perusal of these minute facts will bestir us in trying to save more souls, more successfully edify believers make better collections on every opportunity, erect and repair many more church edifices and parsonages.

Wood St. Church, Water Valley, is a delightful charge. Plenty of work to do among nearly three hundred members, and in the midst of four or five thousand people. Have received four members; one on profession of faith, two from the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, one by an old certificate. Expended thirty-two dollars on parsonage; ordered pulpit and chairs at a cost of one hundred dollars.

J. M. WYATT.

ADA, LA.

MR. EDITOR: We have a degree of church prosperity under the ministerial labors of Bro. Ivy Hoffpauir; but he says he has to be with the people often to make his work permanent. The work is so large he can not get around often; consequently we all have a spell of backsliding every month. Now when Gen. Jackson defended New Orleans, would he have succeeded if he had been called upon to fill all the offices and fire all the guns while his men slept. No; it was the zeal and patriotism of the men that kept our country from falling into the hands of the British as much as the skill of the commander. It seems our people are not always as true to the cause of religion as they should be. They do not always aid the minister as they should. They, even, sometimes throw heavy stumbling-blocks in his way.

Well, now, could not the Conference appoint one of its wise and experienced itinerant ministers to write us an essay on the duties of church members, telling us how we should relieve and aid the preachers who are sent to us; how we should overlook all faults and draw out all good qualities. We ought to learn to take our preacher as we find him, and use him and aid him even when we think some other preacher would suit us better.

Woman's Scepter.

The most notable fact of our age is the prominence given to what is popularly called the "Woman Question." Somebody has characterized this century as "Woman's Century." In the shops, in the counting rooms, in the public offices, in the schools, in the town councils, and especially in the literary circles, woman has made her appearance and achieved a preeminence that has astounded us all. By the very manner of her appearance in these various positions she says, "I am here to stay;" and by the character of the work she does, she has demonstrated her fitness for most of these positions, and her worthiness to reap the honors and rewards that come to those who fill such positions well. We believe that the advance of woman is due not merely to the fact that she has been successful in most of the new spheres of activity into which she has entered. Of course, the general law is, that success opens the way to further advance, but other causes have been operating in this same direction. The elevating influences of Christian civilization, and the possibilities which the Christian religion have revealed to the hopes and aspirations of the human heart, have been potent factors, working quietly through the past centuries for the uplifting of the race. Woman has felt those influences more deeply than man, and those possibilities have stirred her to greater and more persistent effort for their attainment; and hence we see her achieving success in spheres once thought unattainable.

But one of the chief glories of the gospel of our Lord is, that it has introduced woman into the sphere of spiritual activities, and opened to her efforts opportunities for work in the spiritual realm, and invited her to full citizenship in the kingdom of spiritual privileges. Operating here, under influences originated by the Divine Spirit, she becomes the true woman, seeking the "light from heaven," and leading others into its brightness. Appreciating her position, and realizing the fullness of divine grace, she breaks down the selfishness that is around her by exhibiting the beauty and wielding the power of an unselfish life. In whatever position of life or grade of society Providence may cast her lot, she may exercise a power which very few men possess. She may feel that her hands are weak; that her will is feeble, and that her intellect is dull; yet God has endowed her with a power akin to his own. The Psalmist said to the Lord: "Thy gentleness hath made me great." This is the talent entrusted to the true woman. Her power all lies in the exercise of a gentle spirit. The lifting power of gentleness is incalculable; and it is by this power that the true woman lifts those about her up into a broader and brighter sunshine. The true greatness is that which stoops down to the lowly and elevates them to their proper positions. This spirit of gentleness is woman's scepter. By it, and it alone, can she rule. Wherever it is wielded, there is obedience, for gentleness is one of the forms of love; and love is omnipotent. This realm of gentleness is woman's kingdom, and in it she has no rival that belongs to human kind. Here she sits a queen upon a throne, to which no man makes claim. She may extend this kingdom until its influence shall be felt everywhere. Wherever she may be—in shop or office, or profession or school, or at home or abroad—she may rule by gentleness; but by that only. Men gladly yield to such rulership, but will brook no other. They will do anything, dare any danger, suffer any hardship in obedience to the commands of gentleness, but stubbornly rebel at commands originating in any other principle. Woman's power is not in the position she may occupy, but in the spirit with which she occupies that position. It is not her surroundings that make her great, but her gentleness. It is not her success in art or science or literature, in the shop or profession or home circle, that gives her right to rulership, but the gentle spirit which breathes into others an unselfish devotion to duty, and fills them with aspirations for higher and holier things. Where such a spirit reigns, where such rulership obtains, human hearts yield to it, and are sweetly constrained to the love of God and man, and human lives, permeated by its power, pour themselves out in glad consecration to the service of humanity. Woman's chief adornment is her only greatness, and that is, "the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit." The only scepter by which she can rule, in any position, is her gentleness.

In Memoriam.

The services conducted in Felicity Street Church, last Sunday afternoon, by Bishop Keener, in memory of the late Bishop McTyeire, were most impressive and solemn. The beautiful new church was tastefully draped. There hung back of the pulpit in front of the organ a fine portrait of our deceased Bishop, on each side of which, printed in evergreens, was the word, "Peace." Bishop Keener preached a short sermon, the theme of which was: "The Effect of Christ's Death upon the Death of His Saints." It was a masterly statement of the subject. He then read a paper on the character and work of Bishop McTyeire. Having been the life-long companion and co-worker of the late Bishop, Bishop Keener's paper abounded in facts of great interest and value, and was listened to with eager attention. Many of Bishop McTyeire's old acquaintances in this city were present to take part in these services, and to pay their last tribute of respect to his memory. The services were closed by a fervent prayer by Dr. J. B. Walker.

The Great Change.

Last Monday, at noon, occurred one of the greatest changes that ever takes place on this continent. The government of this great republic passed out of the hands of Mr. Cleveland into the hands of Gen. Harrison. This transfer of "the greatest government on earth" from one political party to another was effected in a simple and quiet way, amid the rejoicing of the incoming party and the good wishes of the outgoing one. In the presence of assembled thousands in front of the Capitol, the Chief Justice of the United States administered the oath of office to the new President, and he turned and delivered his inaugural address to the great crowd; and the transfer of the administration of the government passed from the Democrats to the Republicans.

The address discusses largely the protection policy and strongly advocates it; enters into a consideration of the election laws of the entire country, and urges the purity of the ballot as the true aim of such laws; promises the sympathy of the President and the support of the whole country to all proper reforms that are attempted in a fair and honest manner.

Now that this change has been effected so quietly and peaceably, we trust that every reader of the ADVOCATE will make it the aim of life to live as a true, earnest, honest, Christian citizen, and pray for the divine blessing upon the new President and all the officials of the land; that the country may prosper yet more and more until she reaches that happy period "when our sons shall be as plants grown up in their youth; and our daughters as corner-stones hewn after the fashion of a palace; when our garners are full, affording all manner of store; and our sheep bring forth thousands and ten thousands in our fields; when our oxen are well-laden; when there is no breaking in and no going forth, and no outcry in our streets."

Preaching and Hearing.

BY "GILDEROY."

In many respects this has been a remarkably fine winter, particularly a warm winter. I do not remember but one warmer—away back in the fifties, when the old cotton stalks, in favored situations, put out and made a second year's growth. I was on the farm then, and left a few stalks to see what they would do. They grew, bloomed, had a few balls; made but little fruit, and that very imperfect. Since then I have believed that cotton, as an annual, is better than if it were perennial.

It is much the same way with sermons. It is better to grow them fresh from the seed—the Word of God—than to depend on new shoots putting out from the roots of old sermons. The fact is, making sermons is hard work; and most of us have to fight indolence, if not laziness, too. The ground has to be broken up, put in good tilth, and fresh seed planted to insure a full crop of most things grown in this country. This is specially true of things that make bread. Good, fresh, wholesome bread depends on fresh, good grain, grown on good land, from good seed, and thoroughly cultivated. The life-giving power of preaching depends largely on the same conditions. God insures good seed in great abundance, and the warming and fructifying light and heat of the Holy Ghost and the showers of grace, if we will only stir the soil and keep it in good farming condition. However, a good sermon, like good wheat, under favorable conditions, branches well, so that often a dozen full sermons grow from one seed.

Good hearing, like good preaching, is hard work. "Take heed how ye hear," is a good text for hearers. Some people hear, and do not hear; do not understand; do not get hold of the Word; do not appropriate it. The Word preached does them no good. It falls by the wayside, or on stony ground. Some people hear to misunderstand, misinterpret and misapply what is preached. They hear a lie in the truth, and believe it that they may be damned. Our ears may be good, but our hearts will make them hear wrong unless we take heed how we hear. There is in every man an outer and an inner organ of hearing—one hears the words, the other the spirit of truth. It is as important to prepare for hearing as to prepare for preaching. We must clean away the briars and thorns, and get the ground ready for the good seed. If we do not, these will spring up and choke the Word. It is a remarkable fact that the soil most capable of large fruitage from good seed is also best adapted to the growth of briars, thorns and weeds. The most capable need the most care in getting ready to hear. Careless churchgoers and listless hearers of the Word; hearers with minds preoccupied; minds surcharged with the things of time and sense, tend to make preaching profitless, however good and true it may be. Most sermons contain truth enough to make a large yield if it only fell into good ground—ground made ready for truth by penitence and prayer. Preaching is oftener ineffective and inefficient because the hearer is not ready to hear, than because the preacher is not ready to preach. Zeal for God and souls often eats the preacher up, while the din of worldly cares and the clinking cash of deceitful riches drown the hearer's sense of hearing. He is in his place in the house of God before the seed-sower, the Word of God going in at one ear and out at the other, while his inner ear is wholly attent on other sounds. He may blame the preacher, condemn the preaching, but the fault and failure lies deep down in his own heart. "He that hath ears, let him hear," and "let him take heed how he hears." Profitable hearing is a question of will, of purpose, of resolution, of inflexible determination. Where these exist, the finger of God—the Divine Spirit—opens the ears of our understanding that we may hear in the truest, highest and best sense of hearing. One may well pray, "Lord, I hear, but help thou my hearing." Sin seals the inner ear to the thunder of divine truth. We have ears, but hear not; eyes, but see not; hearts, but feel not; living, sentient men, but "dead in trespasses and in sin." "Lord, thou, and thou only, canst make me hear."

Not Peace, But a Sword.

BY "JEAN PAUL."

I hold that the enmity between the seed of Satan and that of the woman will not cease until time shall be no more. It is recreant to cry, "Peace! peace!" when there is no peace. Turning the world upside down bespeaks commotion, upheaval. Said Jehu to Joram's messenger: "What hast thou to do with peace?" Though the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, we must fight if we would reign.

New Orleans, as you know, is the favorite winter resort of the world, the flesh and the devil. Gaiety abounds; the theatres filled; terpsichorean festivities night after night. With Mardi Gras the carnival of mirth reaches its culmination. On the day preceding Mardi Gras, the mythical Rex enters our city. This day fell on the Fourth of March—the anniversary of the Fire Department. Processions, etc., abound. Rex and his fabled court feared a diversion of interest and requested the firemen to conduct their usual procession on Sunday, March 3. The firemen agreed to the arrangement. Did this concern the Christian community? It verily did. Our Sunday League and the Young Men's Christian Association, by numerously signed petitions, requested the Fire Department, in deference to Christian sentiment, to reconsider and, if possible, to annul their action in regard to the designed parade on the Sabbath. In due time answer was made that a change of their programme was not practicable. Now, quietly submit? No! The Evangelical Preachers' Union, composed of ministers from Presbyterian, Baptist, Episcopal, Christian, Methodist Churches, met and adopted an earnest protest against the intended Sabbath desecration. The protest was signed by forty-two Protestant ministers of our city, and was published in the leading dailies. In addition to this, it was resolved to call a mass meeting at Carondelet Street Church, on March 1, in order to give full expression to the sentiment animating God's people in this matter. A committee on arrangement appointed the following divines as speakers for the occasion: Ahrens, Bussey, Bakewell, Carradine, Mallalieu, Ferguson and Sawyer. The meeting was held. With stentorian emphasis God's people raised their voices against the intended iniquity.

Our protest availed not in preventing the Sunday parade, but has, nevertheless, served a wise purpose. The intended wrong has been called by the right name. The responsibility now rests with those who deem it a frivolous matter to ignore the demands of God and the wishes of his people. Well did Dr. Bussey say that the Mississippi Valley was no more in need of levees than a Christian nation of a Sabbath. Break the former, and devastation is unavoidable; ignore the Sabbath, and religious effeminacy and, ultimately, mobocracy and anarchy will inevitably follow.

You are aware that public sentiment is as fickle as fashion. Instead of quailing before it, dolorously lamenting increasing godlessness, it behooves us energetically to enlist in remoulding that sentiment in order to conform to scriptural requirements. In our nice little sermons we say many nice things to our nice little congregations; but oftentimes our courage is insufficient to beard the lion in his lair. It is sadly true that most preachers confine their evangelistic efforts to the faithful few. To these few we tell what the masses should hear. By iterated union meetings, emphatic declarations of true Christian sentiment, denouncing the various popular vices, availing ourselves assiduously of the columns of the secular and religious press in advocating the right and decrying existing evil, we would soon effect a reversal in public sentiment.

You know as well as I do, Mr. Editor, that Christian ministers are God's ambassadors. They have received positive instructions. God's demands are known to them. Must they not insist on a scrupulous compliance therewith? I hold that, as children of God, we must resist and resent all encroachments on the rights of our heavenly Father? What! not feel indignant when an indignity is attempted against our best Friend! Not rise in energetic opposition when the holy law of our greatest Benefactor is basely trodden under foot?

NEW ORLEANS, March 4, 1889.

Call for Preachers.

In the Nashville Advocate, Bishop Granbery has this:

The Board of Missions will provide next May, I trust, for two more missionaries to labor in Brazil. I now make a call for two men. They ought to have some experience in the itinerancy—to be elders, or, at least, deacons. Some acquaintance with Latin, and with French, or other modern European language, though not indispensable, will be of aid in learning the Portuguese. I would be glad to have a graduate, especially in view of the importance of establishing a school. The principal must have a diploma, or else stand an approved examination before a Brazilian Board, in order that a license for a school may be granted.

Consecration to God and to the work of the ministry is the prime requisite. It is not necessary that a man shall feel specially called or drawn to missionary work. The call to the ministry is not a call to preach in the United States, or in any other land, exclusively. Our commission is to go into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. If you are needed in Brazil, and your age, health, and other conditions suit that field, be ready to labor there.

Perhaps a young layman, who has graduated at one of our colleges, would be glad to devote his life to the service of Christ as a missionary teacher in a foreign land. Why not? "Whose I am, and whom I serve," should be the motto, not of the preacher only, but of every man. "For the love of Christ constraineth us."

Notes.

One of the papers propounds this problem for solution: "If it takes $1,000 a year to carry on a church which saves five souls every year, and if the saloon pays $250 a year for the privilege of ruining five souls every year, how long will it take a town having a population of 6,000 souls, with five churches and fifteen saloons, to go to the devil?"

A young brother writes: "How the notes from the different brethren interest us all; and they are, read too. We can't write to our many people to whom and from whom we are sent from time to time, but the ADVOCATE prints a circular for nothing, and we all read free. I hope to do my part toward getting the 10,000 subscribers." Let the brethren everywhere watch for items of interest in church progress and send them in.

Apropos of preaching in these days the Western Christian Advocate has this pointed paragraph:

We heard the remark recently that "preaching in these days is too good." We doubt whether such a thing is possible, and we are certain that preaching in these days is not too earnest. We believe, still further, that the earnestness of the modern pulpit is not equal to its intellectual power. Fire kindles fire. The minister who sacrifices soulfulness to brilliancy of thought or beauty of rhetoric makes a fatal error.

Rev. Joseph Parker, of London, has this, which will serve as a text for a profitable meditation:

That having all things in common, of which the New Testament speaks, was not alone the pitiful, little, arithmetical affair that most people fancy it to have been, a sharing of mere pounds, shillings, and pence. No, no. If one has much, he must use it for the feeble. Has he standing room, he must reach down to those whose feet have slipped from the ladder's round. Has he brain, it must be at the service of the one who does not quite know how to take care of himself. Large spiritual endowment is not to be enjoyed in a cloister, as a selfish boy would go off by himself to eat his Christmas sweets; but each must share with the needier to the limit of his ability.

Dr. Broadus, the eminent Southern Baptist, gave the lectures at the Yale Divinity School this year. Among a multitude of good and sound things we find this:

"Any preacher who does not some time make a very bad failure is a very poor preacher indeed. Be not flattered; if there's anything in you, let it come out." Dr. Broadus condemned the habit of verbatim recitation from manuscript, declaring that it was incompatible with freedom, and he quoted from old Dr. Emmons to the effect that the three requisites for extemporaneous speaking are ignorance, impudence, and presumption. He advised the students not to degenerate into verbatim reporters and thus gravitate hurriedly downwards, but to have their thoughts at their tongue's end. He also told them not to try to convert reading into speaking. "Don't lean forward and shake your hand into space," said he, "when your eyes are on your manuscript."

Show this to the brother who quit taking the ADVOCATE because he couldn't afford it. It is from Bro. Lafferty, of the Richmond Advocate.

When the Christian father and mother lets the church paper cease instructing their children to save less than a nickle a week, it is a cruelty to the offspring. They are unworthy of the precious gifts of God. This stinginess helps to hurt the souls of the dear children. We have known the little ones, after the Advocate was dropped, to gather up the old copies and re-read them on Sunday, while the father was chewing and spilling enough money away in tobacco to keep the paper going. There are brutal instincts, but when the boy or girl is the victim it shocks humanity. Think of saving half a cent a day at the risk of ruining your own child! What sort of religion is that? Even the postmaster knows when the paper quits going to a Methodist family that morality is getting low in that household. It's a sign of decay."

Speaking to a Methodist Home Mission Convention, in Yorkshire, England, not long since, Hugh Price Hughes told them that "when 20,000 people came together to see them kicking the devil as they did to see men kicking a football," the problem of reaching the masses would be solved.

At the same meeting the chairman, Sir Henry Mitchell, said:

What is wanted in these times is a fully developed Christianity. Some of us may have had the notion that it consists in our attendance upon the means of grace, public worship or belief in certain doctrines or in religious experience, and in a life of decent morality. We are not going to give up our public worship, nor our doctrines, nor our religious experience, and I hope we are not going to give up our morality. But it is a great deal more than that, and implies a great deal of work. We are to be a power among the populations in which we live, and we are to recognize in every man a man for whom Christ died, and endeavor to be instrumental in God's hands in being a blessing to everyone brought under our influence.

Personal and Otherwise.

It is announced that John D. Rockefeller, of New York, the president of the Standard Oil Company, is to give seventy millions of dollars for the endowment of a Baptist University.

The International Sunday-school convention, which is to be held in London in the first week of July, next, bids fair to be the largest and most important gathering of its kind since the centenary celebration of 1880.

Speaking of a certain church, a man said: "They are Christians, but they are not working very hard at it at present." Was that your church?

Another man said of another church: "When they work as hard at Methodism as their sons work at baseball, the whole town will be stirred." Do you know those people?

We are indebted to Rev. John Barcroft, the efficient secretary of the North Mississippi Conference, for a copy of the Minutes of the last session of the Conference, held in Starkville, Miss., December 12-17.

The Arkansas Methodist comes to us with new headings, longer columns, and wearing an air of improvement in several directions. The day of publication has been changed from Saturday to Wednesday. We offer our congratulations to our Arkansas brethren. May they increase yet more!

Dr. W. C. Black, of Jackson, Miss., will dedicate a new church at Gallman, Miss., the second Sunday in April, next.

The prohibitionists in the late election in Clarke county, Miss., carried the day by a handsome majority.

It is said that 1,400 persons joined the various churches in Los Angeles as the result of the meeting held by Rev. Sam Jones.

Rev. John F. Hughes, a member of the Tennessee Conference, died in Nashville, February 28. He was born in 1811, and was in the ministry over fifty years.

We received, too late to accept, an invitation to attend the examination of the Musical and Art Departments of Mansfield College, together with the programme of the Art Exhibition, March 1 and 2. We are glad to know this college is doing good work under the presidency of Bro. McVoy.

A postal card from Rev. J. M. Brown, of Bastrop, La., announces the death of Thomas H. Brodnax, a prominent member of our church at that place.

The manuscript which comes to this office written on both sides of the paper, has to wait indefinitely before it goes into the "chopper." It generally finds its way into the "waste-basket."

The convention of the Young Men's Christian Association of Mississippi will be held in Meridian, April 25-28.

During the last few days there have been seen in our midst hundreds of Methodists from all parts of Mississippi and Louisiana. Strange that they should happen here at the same time!

Postal Card Reports.

—Rev. G. W. Gordon, writing from Carrollton, Miss., February 25, says: "We have raised in money and subscription the entire amount assessed to Carrollton and Greenwood by district stewards, with an excess of nearly seventy dollars, and more to follow. 'Praise God from whom all blessing flows!' The next thing in order is a glorious revival to sweep every heart and home. May the Lord give it to us! Pray for us."

—Rev. L. W. Wood writes from Covington, La., February 26: "Glad to report a better attendance at preaching and prayer meeting at all points in this circuit. Also improvement in Sunday-schools. Have organized one new school and taken steps to organize a second. There seems to be a deeper interest in all church matters all along the line. Hope to swell the ADVOCATE's list soon. Praise God for all his goodness to us."

—Rev. J. P. Drake writes from Shubuta, Miss., March 1: "The friends of religion and good morals will rejoice that, by God's gracious help, the intelligent and Christian people of Clarke county, Miss., have been able once more to defeat the common enemy.' At our local option election, February 26, we polled a larger majority 'against the sale' than ever before. Considering the fact that prohibition has been on probation here four years, the verdict is instructive. Fervent prayer and hard work won the victory. We give thanks and go to work for the ADVOCATE hopefully."

—Rev. J. M. Johnston writes from Pleasant Hill, La., March 2, 1889: "Yesterday (Friday) Sister Gooch, wife of W. D. Gooch, died suddenly (supposed) of apoplexy. She was apparently as well as usual when she rose in the morning, sat at the breakfast table; a short time after rising from the table walked out into the back yard, and in a few moments was found dead. We mourn because we feel that the church, relatives and friends are the poorer, but heaven is the richer, as we have no doubt but what she has joined her sainted mother and loved ones in the glory land."

BOOKS.

THE PROHIBITION MELODIST. By J. H. Sweney and William J. Kirkpatrick. Published by John J. Hood, 1018 Arch street, Philadelphia. Price, thirty-five cents; $3 60 per dozen.

GERTRUDE'S MARRIAGE. By W. Heimburg. Translated by Mrs. J. W. Davis, of Cambridge, Mass.; with photo-gravure illustrations by W. de Meza. 1 volume, 12 vo., cloth extra, $1 25; same in paper, seventy-five cents. For sale by Eyrich, 130 Canal street, New Orleans.

A very charming and exceedingly interesting novel written by one of the foremost German novelists of the present time. The author is considered the successor to "Marlitt," her style is as perfect, but her characters are more natural. This story appeals strongly to the human heart, and possesses real dramatic fire. We predict the book will be the favorite of the year.

PLEAS FOR PROGRESS. By Atticus G. Haygood. Printed for the author, by the Publishing House of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South. For sale by Atticus G. Haygood, Jr., Decatur, Ga. Price, $1, postpaid.

This is a volume of addresses delivered by Dr. Haygood at various places during the years 1883-1888, inclusive. A large part of them relates to the Negro, his condition, his education, and our duty to him. This has been for twenty-five years, and is to-day, a most important subject. Dr. Haygood meets the question in a straightforward way. Having studied it closely and thoroughly, he does not hesitate to state his conclusions in a language so plain that everybody can understand him. He has very strong convictions, and he puts them forth in words whose force can not be questioned. Whether we think as he does or not, we are compelled to acknowledge that we are listening to a speaker who believes what he says, and says what he believes with an earnestness that attracts our whole attention. Besides the Negro question, the doctor has addresses on the Public Schools, on Broaden the College, on the Convict Question, all of which will amply repay the most thoughtful study. The chapter on Our Danger and Our Defense is a paper read by him, as Chairman of the Committee on Temperance before the North Georgia Conference at its session in 1887. This is as able a temperance document as we have ever read. If you read this book, you will discover that you have at last found a man who has something to say, and knows how to say it in a way that compels you to listen.

PERIODICALS.

There are also several portraits of Rossetti. Cassell and Co., New York. Thirty-five cents a number; $3 50 a year, in advance.

James; The Master of Ballantrae, by Robert Louis Stevenson; A German Rome, by W. B. Scott; Hereafter, by G. R. Tomson; Economy in Intellectual Work, by W. H. Burnham; An Eye for an Eye, by Robert Grant; Some of Wagner's Heroes and Heroines, by W. F. Apthorp; Mexican Superstitions and Folklore, by T. A. Janvier; Extenuating Circumstances, by W. M. G. Wood writes on Color in the Animal World; John Habberton on Embezzlers and Defaulters; Z. R. Brockway on The Care of Criminals; C. R. Bishop writes an appreciative article on Henry Clay; Ernest Ingersoll contributes a paper on the Industrial and Social Effects of the Sewing Machine. There are other articles by popular writers. The editor's "Outlook" and "Notebook" give a good ending to a splendid number of this monthly. Price, $2. Theodore L. Flood, editor. Meadville, Penn.

—Cassell's Family Magazine, for March, has for its frontispiece a charming picture of a handsome young girl, and looking into her youthful face from across the page is the sharp-featured, sour-visaged "Miss Jigger," a character in Mr. Barrett's serial, Under a Strange Mask. The Family Doctor this month treats of coughs and colds, which are very apt to prevail at this season of the year. The Rev. S. Baring-Gould writes of the Elixir of Youth; while "J. W. S." describes All Night at a Junction, which gives us an excellent idea of the life of the man who works the switches from the signal tower. Housekeepers will be interested in Our New House and Its Plenishings, also in the monthly installment of Our National School of Housewifery. One who has suffered from Stammering and Stuttering gives himself as a warning to parents who do not have their children broken of this infirmity while they are young, which is the only time that anything can be done. Our Second Visit to Mars takes the reader up among the stars, and the fashion letters from London and Paris bring her down again to this terrestrial ball. There are the serials of the New Year still running, and there are short stories and poetry and a "Gatherer" full of useful information. Cassell & Co., New York. Fifteen cents a number; $1 50 a year, in advance.

—St. Nicholas, for March, opens with an exquisite picture, Under the Mistletoe. Joel Chandler Harris begins the Story of Daddy Jake, the Runaway; Washington as an Athlete, is by Mrs. Burton Harrison; The Bells of St. Anne are continued; and also the Routine of the Republic; The Bunny Stories are also continued, Palmer Cox has another chapter of his inimitable Brownies. There are other articles equally interesting. The young people will find this number equal to any. Century Company, New York. Price, $3.

—The Methodist Magazine, for February, has a full table of interesting matter. The writers who appear in this number are Mr. Gladstone, Harriet Beecher Stowe, D. H. Wheeler, Mark Guy Pearse, Canon Farrar, D. W. Butler. Shaw and Son 171 Washington St., Chicago. Price, $1 50.

Mississippi College.

MR. EDITOR: A college for Mississippi is an assured fact. Fifty thousand dollars from one man means business. There are many others in Mississippi who will give liberally for this college. I hope no mistake will be made in the location of it. Good health must be the first consideration. There is no place in Mississippi so well suited in all respects for a college as Brandon. Brandon is 190 feet higher than Jackson, Miss.; has as good water as can be found in any State, and as intelligent people.

I would say to the people of Brandon to put in their bid for the college. Gentlemen of Brandon, put your mind and heart to work in this matter; donate enough land to build upon, and then do your part in raising money to erect the building. Brandon, wake up! You hold the key to the situation. Come to the front, and let the church hear from you.

F. M. FEATHERSTUN.

Woman's Christian Temperance Union Convention.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Mississippi, being desirous of reviving and extending the work of the organization in the State, cordially invite all Christian women who are interested in temperance, whether connected with the Union or not, to meet with them in convention at Crystal Springs, April, 1889, and help to plan work for the coming year.

Miss Willard, Mrs. Chapin and other great workers will be in attendance.

Ticket agents at all points in the State will furnish those desiring to attend with delegates' certificates securing two-third rates.

Names of delegates and visitors should be sent to Mrs. Bettie Smith, Crystal Springs, Copiah county, one week before meeting of convention.

Notice.

Nearly 2,000 copies of the Minutes of the North Mississippi Conference, late session, have been published and mailed to all pastors and presiding elders. Many addresses of preachers, in making out our directory, were never sent me, and I could only infer them; but hope they are approximately correct. A few copies are left and will be sent to any brother who failed to receive his quota.

Notice—Beware!

I feel it my duty to inform the preachers of the Louisiana Conference of the elopement of a local preacher from my circuit last December, whose name is W. W. Webb. He has a local preacher's certificate and a church certificate also. He left here in debt after having deceived all who trusted him. I would not write this, but the circuit demands it. He is an unsafe man.

Bros. J. A. Parker and "F. M. G."

Examining the original reports as filed by Bro. J. A. Parker, we find that, together with two other amounts for missions, he put on the wrong paper the $30 for the week of prayer. Then, scratching out all three amounts, we find that, though he put the other two there, he failed to put the self-denial amount on the right paper—the paper for missions; and so the statistical secretary, Bro. Beard, very properly supposed that Bro. Parker intended to make no report of self-denial money. At the bottom of the missions' paper Bro. Parker wrote in lead-pencil: "Total for missions, $304 82." The $30 he may have included in this total.

"F. M. G." is mistaken in saying that the distribution of the Minutes is "in the ratio of one copy to seventeen members." The usual number was published, and, with the exception of those sent to Bishops and connectional officials, mailed to the brethren according to their membership. "F. M. G." lays great stress upon the assessment, for he says, "Especially after the Conference had ordered a public collection," etc. Assessments in Methodism are not always paid by the people; and the better way in this matter of our Minutes is the old way in use when Bro. Shroeder was secretary, and during my former service of some four or five sessions. An amount deemed proper by the Conference Board of Missions was appropriated for the publication of the Minutes, to be supplemented by the secretary with such advertisements as were requisite. There was no such thing as an assessment, as now, on the top of all our other assessments, nor were we expected to sell the pamphlets at ten cents, or any amount. They were published for the benefit of the people, and they went to the Methodists of poor works and rich charges alike. By this present arrangement our people at Felicity were assessed $17, and yet our membership did not allow us as many copies as some brethren who sent me $2—their full assessment. To have given them out at ten cents per copy, or according to amount of assessment paid in, would have given Bro. Carradine's people and mine copies largely in excess of other charges of Louisiana Methodists who need the Minutes as well as our flocks, and have just as much right to receive them. Let us have the 5,000 edition next time, and, appropriating what amount may be proper, let the secretary get us many advertisements as needful to pay him out in his arduous work. Then, as "F. M. G." and all of us wish, every family can have a copy.

There are fifteen great American inventions that have been adopted throughout the civilized world. They are the cotton gin, the planting machine, the mower and reaper, the rotary printing press, navigation by steam, the hot-air engine, the sewing machine, the india-rubber industry, the machine manufacture of horseshoes, the sand blast for carving, the gauge lathe, the grain elevator, artificial ice-making on a commercial scale, the telegraph and the telephone.

The Louisiana Lottery Company Exposed.

On Sunday morning, February 24, the Rev. B. Carradine, D. D., pastor of the Carondelet Street Methodist Episcopal Church, South, preached in that church a masterly and timely sermon on "The Louisiana State Lottery Company Examined and Exposed." This sermon produced a powerful effect upon the large audience which heard it, and, owing to numerous requests that it be published, it has been prepared by Dr. Carradine for the printer; and it is now going into type. Ten thousand copies of it will be issued, and will be for sale at $1 for ten copies. Several persons have subscribed for 100 copies. It is important for social, political and religious reasons that this subject should be fully and immediately discussed by ministers and all public speakers throughout the State, in order to prevent, if possible, the continuance of the Louisiana Lottery Company, this monster of iniquity, another quarter of a century.

Orders for this sermon of Dr. Carradine, as well as for his sermon on "Church Entertainments" (of the latter there being a few copies left), should be addressed to

MABEL DINES OUT ALONE.

PREVIOUS INSTRUCTIONS FROM MAMMA.

I made her stand beside me,
My 6-year-old little girl;
I arranged each dainty ruffle,
And smoothed each sunny curl.
"Now, ba'by, you'll be careful
In all you do and say;
You will not trouble auntie
While dining there to-day.

"You'll take your place in quiet,
Nor ask for anything,
But eat what uncle gives you,
Or what the waiters bring.
You won't take too much pudding
When there's no mamma to check;
And when it comes to sweetmeats,
You'll scarcely taste a speck."

RESULT: AS DESCRIBED BY AUNTIE.

The feast was rich and splendid,
The board held flowers rare,
But yet my roughind tender
Was the sweetest blossom there.
Her eyes we c'eclar'd as diamonds,
Her spee'h a birdie's song;
She was frugal as a hermit,
Lest she might eat something wrong.

When asked to take some pudding,
She answered at her ease;
When questioned as to ice-cream, said:
"A little, if you please."
Alas that such behavior
Should end in utter wreck!
The sweetmeats come; the little tongue
Lisps, "Thankth; I'll take a peck."

MR. EDITOR: I am a little girl seven years old, and enjoy reading the children's letters in the ADVOCATE very much. Thought I would answer Henry D. Roberts' question: "Where in the Bible are we told that the remains of a dead body brought a dead person to life?" In II Kings xiii, 20 and 21 verses we find: "And Elisha died, and they buried him. And the bands of the Moabites invaded the land at the coming in of the year. And it came to pass, as they were burying a man, that behold, they spied a band of men; and they cast the man into the sepulchre of Elisha: and when the man was let down, and touched the bones of Elisha, he revived, and stood up on his feet." Now, Mr. Editor, as this is my first attempt, please do not cast it into the waste-basket.

Your little friend,
FLORIDA HENDERSON.
WOODVILLE, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: As I have never written to your valuable paper, I thought I would write. I am a little girl eleven years old. I go to school. I study writing, dictionary, sixth reader, geography, grammar, arithmetic. My teacher's name is Mr. I. C. Price. I like him very much. I like to read the children's columns very much. Our pastor's name is Mr. J. J. Huffpauir. I like him very much. He preached us a fine sermon today. I hope he will be sent back here again next year to preach for us. Papa takes your valuable paper, and I like to read it very much. I think I have written enough for the first time, so I will close by asking a question: How many times is "fox" found in the Bible? I hope my letter will not reach the waste-basket.

ALICE BARROW.

MR. EDITOR: As I have not written to your paper for a great while, I will write. I go to school every day. My studies are spelling, history, arithmetic, mental arithmetic, grammar, physiology and writing. I like to go to school very much. I am a member of the Methodist Church. I am thirteen years old, and have five sisters and two brothers, and a dear papa and mamma—all living, thank God! I hope my letter will not reach the waste-basket. I will answer Beulah Hinson's question: The first place in the Bible to find "gold" is in Genesis xiii, 2. I will close by asking a question: What word occurs in the Old Testament 35,543 times? I remain, Your true little friend,

MAGGIE E. WALKER.

MR. EDITOR: I am a little Methodist boy, and love to read the cousins' letters. I have never seen a letter from this place, so I thought I would write. I will be seven years old my next birthday. I have no pets to write about, except my little sisters. I will give you their names: Mattie May, Eula C. and Bessie Lee. I think they are very sweet little girls. My papa is a preacher. I am all the protection mamma has when he is gone. I will ask the cousins a question: What chapter in the Bible contains the word "which" seventy-five times. I hope my first letter will not find the waste-basket. Success to you and the dear ADVOCATE. Your little friend,

WILLIE H. MORSE.
MORTON, Mississippi.

MR. EDITOR: Another little Methodist girl would like to join the cousins and tell you how much we love the dear ADVOCATE. I live with my aunt, Mrs. Tidwell. She takes the ADVOCATE, and says she will have to take another copy so she can get to read it before the news becomes stale. We all enjoy reading it so much; I, especially the letters from the little cousins. God took my mother when I was five years old and I came to live with my grandpa, Judge J. A. Williams. A little over a year ago God called grandpa to heaven; then auntie got married and I continued to live with my auntie and uncle. My papa and sweet little brother, nearly six years old, and my "new mamma" live near us. I am ten years old, and never went to school in my life, we live so far out in the country; but learn my lessons at home. My studies are fourth reader, word book, geography and arithmetic. With best wishes for the ADVOCATE, I am, Your little friend,

Realizing High Ambitions.

Benjamin West, the great painter, was the youngest son of a poor Pennsylvania Quaker who had eight other children. When he was seven years old, he drew a portrait of one of his sisters that sent the rather large family into ecstacies, and he got all the encouragement that the limited means of the elder West would permit. Hairs from a cat's tail composed his brushes, and the indigo bag of his mother's kitchen gave him his paint for his school-day experiments.

It is related of him that before he was yet in his teens, he was out riding with another boy of about his own age, when talking each of the future, the other lad said that he expected to be a tailor. "What!" exclaimed little West, "a tailor? Then you can ride alone. As for me, I mean to be a painter, and be the companion of kings and emperors. I am not willing to ride with any boy who is only going to be a tailor."

This aristocratic element in the youth's nature held its own, until in later years he had indeed elbowed royalty, been recognized in the great world of art, and stood foremost among the painters of his day. Then, softened and idealized by that best of all teachers, Experience, there was nowhere in the world a more devoted democrat, for he came to learn, as all honest men learn, that true manhood—the manhood which can adorn a tailor's bench as much as it can become a throne—outreaches far all other earthly things.—Young Hearts.

AS TO BREATHING.—A boy fourteen years old, recently imported from Kentucky, handed the following in as a composition on "Breathing." The instruction was: "Tell all you can about breathing." He said: "Breath is made of air. We breathe with our lungs, our lights, our liver and kidneys. If it wasn't for our breath we would die when we slept. Our breath keeps the life a-going through the nose when we are asleep. Boys that stay in a room all day should not breathe. They should wait till they get out of doors. Boys in a room make bad, unwholesome air. They make carboncide. Carboncide is poisoner than mad dogs. A heap of soldiers was in a black hole in India, and a carboncide got in that there hole, and killed nearly every one afore morning. Girls kill the breath with corosits that squeeze the diagram. Girls can't holler or run like boys because their diagram is squeezed too much. If I was a girl I had rather be a boy, so I can run and holler, and run and have a great big diagram."—Washington Star.

A little girl was taught to spell cat, and one day, soon after, she came rushing up to her auntie, exclaiming, "O Nantie, I've found a piece of a cat!" She had found the letter C.

Household.

A Man's Part in Housekeeping.

A man should first of all hold his wife in planning her work. Let every husband give his wife the benefit of his practical business experience, and advise with her how she may best arrange and time her several duties that they may least conflict.

In the second place, the husband should give the wife the full amount of money necessary properly to care for the home.

Third, he should see that she has the best tools that can be had to lighten her labor.

Fourth, he should by every possible means shorten her hours of labor. If he finds that she is obliged to work earlier and later than he then he should at once give or procure for her such assistance as will make their working hours equal.

Fifth, realizing that for her labor she receives no direct compensation, he should at the least be careful to give continually that reward of cordial praise which costs him nothing and so much pleases her.

Finally, the man must recognize that many of the domestic duties are essentially proper to him, and not to the woman; such are all that require great physical exertion. Therefore, not only should proper implements be generously furnished for the woman's use, but all the materials she must use should be provided and made accessible. Plenty of coal, wood and kindlings should be kept near the place where they are to be burned, water should be supplied so as to be handy and abundant, plenty of hooks, shelves, closets, etc., should be arranged to the best advantage.

At house-cleaning time the man should either move or get moved the heavier articles of furniture; he should attend to the cleaning and putting down of carpets, the setting up of stoves and the like; in other words, he should assume the responsibility for all the heavier and more disagreeable duties connected with good housekeeping, and be willing on occasion to take a hand in those which are lighter. But if he won't do these things that he ought to do, let him at least have grace enough to keep out of the woman's way while she is doing them for him, and refrain when they are done from rewarding his overworked helpmate with cross and complaining speech.—Good Housekeeping.

A WISE MOTHER.—A good New Jersey mother thus prepared her daughters to enter upon the duties of married life as housekeepers. This mother, a widow, was in good circumstances, continuing a prosperous business her husband left her, and she had four daughters, to all of whom she gave the best education the city she lived in afforded. As it was the seat of a college the schools were unusually good, and so was the society of the place. When the eldest daughter was graduated from school, her mother took her into the kitchen and initiated her into all the arts and mysteries of that department, and from that to up stairs work, to the providing the supplies—in short, to everything pertaining to housekeeping, even to presiding at the table. After she was thoroughly instructed in all this, and perfectly competent to do it, she and her mother took turns in having the entire charge of the house, a week about. When the other girls were graduated they went in turn through the same course of instruction, and when they married housekeeping was no bugbear to them!—New York Advocate.

HOW LORD MACAULAY READ.—When a boy I began to read very earnestly, but at the foot of every page I read I stopped and obliged myself to give an account of what I had read on that page. At first I had to read it three or four times before I got my mind firmly fixed. But I compelled myself to comply with the plan, until now, after I have read a book through once, I can almost recite it from the beginning to the end. It is a very simple habit to form early in life, and is valuable as a means of making our reading serve the best purpose.

Best of All
Cough medicines, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is in greater demand than ever. No preparation for Throat and Lung Troubles is so prompt in its effects, so agreeable to the taste, and so widely known, as this. It is the family medicine in thousands of households.

"I have suffered for years from a bronchial trouble that, whenever I take cold or am exposed to inclement weather, shows itself by a very annoying tickling sensation in the throat and by difficulty in breathing. I have tried a great many remedies, but none does so well as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral which always gives prompt relief in returns of my old complaint."—Ernest A. Hepler, Inspector of Public Roads, Parish Terre Bonne, La.

"I consider Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a most important remedy

For Home Use.
I have tested its curative power, in my family, many times during the past thirty years, and have never known it to fail. It will relieve the most serious affections of the throat and lungs, whether in children or adults."—Mrs. E. G. Edgerly, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

"Twenty years ago I was troubled with a disease of the lungs. Doctors afforded me no relief and considered my case hopeless. I then began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, before I had finished one bottle, found relief. I continued to take this medicine until a cure was effected. I believe that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life."—Samuel Griggs, Waukegan, Ill.

"Six years ago I contracted a severe cold, which settled on my lungs, and soon developed all the alarming symptoms of Consumption. I had a cough, night sweats, bleeding of the lungs, pains in chest and sides, and was so prostrated as to be confined to my bed most of the time. After trying various prescriptions, without benefit, my physician finally determined to give me Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took it, and the effect was magical. I seemed to rally from the first dose of the medicine, and, after using only three bottles, am as well and sound as ever."—Rodney Johnson, Springfield, Ill.

DAVENPORT.—Mrs. NANCY DAVENPORT was born in South Carolina, May 1819, and moved with her parents near Amite City when quite small. From there they moved to Tangipahoa county, Ark., where she was married to Mr. Fountain J. Davenport, on December 15, 1837, when they moved to Morehouse parish, where she lived and died. This sad event took place on January 12, 1889. Her maiden name was Roberts.

She lived to a good old age and to see all her children grown. They were with her in her long weeks of suffering and did all in their power to comfort and help her bear the pain through which she was racked. On Christmas Day she wanted some one to sing, asked for her pastor and his wife; but as he was away attending conference, her oldest son sang one of her favorite songs. She enjoyed it so much, and he said, "She looked happy." May God bless her children, and may they give their lives to his service; and especially would we ask the prayers of the church for her daughter, "her baby," as she so often called her! She never could be persuaded to stay away from "ma," preferring society to that of those near her own age, and, oh! how tenderly she watched and tried to stay the hand of death; but, alas! your mother is gone. God grant that children and grandchildren may meet her on the happy golden shore." S. R.

THOMPSON.—Died, February 5, 1889, near Hebron, Miss., Mrs. MARY JANE THOMPSON, (nee Malone). Sister Thompson was born in Caswell county, N. C. in 1825; was married in Georgia, January 9, 1844, to Z. Tolliver Thompson. They moved to Mississippi, and, in April, 1816, under the ministry of Rev. Andrew Day, she joined the Methodist Church. While Sister Thompson was not demonstrative in her religious experience, she had a well-defined hope in Christ Jesus and loved to live in the full discharge of every Christian duty, as a wife, mother and neighbor. She was ever diligent in making her home a centre of happiness, and sought the peace and welfare of the community where she lived. For the last twenty years she has been compelled to suffer God's will in the furnace of bodily affliction. Her last illness caused confinement to her bed for some three weeks. She knew that with age and her infirmities, that there was no hope for her recovery, and patiently and trustfully looked forward to the hour when she would be with Jesus. God kindly gave her a clear mind unto the last. She spoke calmly of death and expressed her readiness to take her departure and be with Jesus. Thus, one more, God's children are gathered home. ROBT. R. DOWNER.

STEPHENS.—Little CARL STEPHENS, of precious memory, died at his home in New Albany, Miss., December 1888. He was the son of Col. Marion and Letha Stephens. He was seven years, three months and twenty-four days old; was a bright and promising child, having been brought up under the careful Christian training. He was a member of the Sunday-school and attended it full of joy and life. With the other two brothers, made the joy of the household great to both parents and all visitors, especially teachers. Little Carl, may thy dust rest in peace, and thy ransomed spirit with him who took little children up in his arms and blessed them, and said "such is the kingdom of Heaven!"

D. W. RAMS.

RABB.—Bro. JAMES W. RABB, of Caddo parish, La., died December 1888. The new year begun the life of glory with him. He had been a member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, for several years and lived up to the full measure of his profession. He was one of the few in whose Christian experience was always bright and never seemed to have a cloud before his spiritual skies. The church has sustained an irreparable loss, but the testimony he left behind will more than suffice. He leaves a wife and two step-children to mourn the loss, to whom we extend sincere sympathy. GEO. T. ASHLEY.

ALLISON.—Rev. G. W. ALLISON, son of G. W. and Amanda S. Allison, was born December 12, 1862, and died December 28, 1888, at the residence of J. P. Holder his father-in law. He was quiet and benevolent, kind and good from his boyhood. He professed religion and attached himself to the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, September, 1883. He was married to Miss Mary Jane Holder, December 27, 1883. He was granted license to preach at Holder Church, of Sparta circuit, while Bro. C. T. Munholland was in charge of the work, and continued in the local connection until his physical strength was exhausted by the deceitful disease called consumption. I formed my acquaintance with him about five years ago, and since that time we have been in company with each other very often, and I always found him to be the same brother, ready to rebuke, reprove and exhort, and I was also with him during his sickness, and he seemed to bear his afflictions with patience; and in one of his last conversations he asserted to me that the Lord was his shepherd, and he should not want; and there is no doubt but while God was putting it in the hearts of the good brothers and sisters and friends to administer to his body, that he was also feeding his soul on the Bread of Life; and while his friends and relatives were watching by his bedside to administer to his wants, angels, no doubt, were hovering over him ready to bear him to that better land, and so strengthened him that he might have utterance to bid friends and relatives good-bye. Bro. Allison has left a wife and one little child and a host of friends and relatives to mourn his death. R. H. R.

SIMMONS.—Mrs. HARRIET CELIA SIMMONS (nee Warner) departed this life in Tangipahoa, La., Nov. 23, 1888, in her fifty-fourth year. She was married to Joseph M. Simmons, in Pike county, Miss., January 29, 1852. She was converted during the Civil War, and, there being no Methodist Church near her, she joined the Baptist Church, and, having united with that church, she continued in it, though her husband and children were devoted Methodists.

The New Testament, which she inherited from her mother, was her constant companion. She also read other good books and church papers and was fond of sacred music, singing much herself and having her family sing for her. She was very familiar with the Scriptures and delighted in quoting them at all times. She talked much upon the subject of religion, especially during her last illness. She died of consumption, but her faith was equal to her long-continued and great suffering. Once when a storm was raging, and loved ones were much alarmed, she calmly reproved them, through faith manifesting the most perfect composure.

Shortly before her death she called her mother—long since departed—declared she was present, and that she saw her. May the fond hope of reunion ever cheer the sad hearts of the bereaved companion and of the sorrowing sons and daughter!

A FRIEND.

MILLSAPS.—On February 7, 1889, in Memphis, Tenn., Mr. SIDNEY MILLSAPS, son of E. F. Millsaps, of Brown's Wells, Coplah county, Miss., fell on sleep, to await the resurrection morning.

This brings great sadness to the loved ones at home and to his many admiring friends. At about the age of twenty-three years, with bright promise for the future, last summer he left the parental home to start in life for himself, and chose the railroad as a business, and soon, alas! sadly soon, the train upon which he was came in collision with another, which gave him injuries; and, after six months of great suffering, he passed away highly esteemed by all that knew him and fondly admired and loved by many more intimately acquainted with him; and in his home was almost the idol thereof. Doubtless, the many friends and acquaintances of the bereaved family will cherish this notice and opportunity to pray for them. His remains rest in Western Coplah, in the family graveyard, where, with the beautiful service of the church, conducted by the writer, assisted by Rev. J. T. Nicholson, in the midst of many weeping friends, he was laid to rest. May our heavenly Father gather the bereaved family under the wings of his great love!

J. W. ELLISON, Pastor.

Short is the little that remains to thee of life. Live as on a mountain. For it makes no difference whether a man lives here or there, if he lives everywhere in the world as in a civil community. Let men see, let them know, a real man, who lives as he was meant to live. If they can not endure him, let them kill him; for that is better than to live as men do.—Marcus Aurelius.

What We Sing.

"Arma Virumque Cano," said Virgil; but in a more practical vein, "We sing the virtues of Compound Oxygen."

In these instances we sing by proxy; our patients are the proxies:

PORTAGE, WIS., January 30, 1888.

"My wife has been taking your Compound Oxygen for over two years for consumption and has derived much benefit from it. In fact I think she would have died long ago but for it."

H. D. JAMES.

WALLA WALLA, WASHINGTON TER., April 9, '88.

I have used your Compound Oxygen treatment. My lungs hold double the amount of air they did at the time I first tried it. I know your agent is all you claim for it."

N. K. GARRIEL.

SUMTER, S. C., March 24, 1888.

"I believe I owe my life to your treatment."

CHAS. L. WITHERSPOON.

We publish a brochure of 200 pages regarding the effect of Compound Oxygen on invalids suffering from consumption, asthma, bronchitis, dyspepsia, catarrh, hay fever, headache, debility, rheumatism, neuralgia; all chronic and nervous disorders. It will be sent, free of charge, to any one addressing DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, 1529 Arch St., Phila., Pa.; or 331 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.

A RUMOR ABOUT THE COMPASS.—The London Electrician has a dispatch from Berlin to the effect that a means has been discovered of using electricity for ascertaining the true north, instead of the magnetic needle; that, in short, the new means will be altogether superior to the compass, and is likely to supersede it.

If this is true, it will be welcome news to the mariner, for since the coming of iron and steel ships the needle has played many fantastic tricks; requiring a fairly good knowledge of magnetism and other phenomena to understand it. The liquid or "Richie" compass, that came with the monitors, in which the needle is submerged in spirits of wine or alcohol, is, of course, a great improvement on the old-fashioned and wabbling "card;" and the lines of deviations, and the corrections for the same, laid down on all the ocean charts, are powerful aids to the mariner. But there are times—during magnetic storms or because of curious conditions of the cargo—when, on an iron ship, the compass in the binnacle may say one thing, the "tell-tale" compass swinging in the cabin another, and a third in the tops still another—"pointing three ways for Sunday," as the phrase goes. Aboard a man-o'-war is not so bad, for they have plenty of technical talent. But the master of a merchantman is more likely to be a sailor than a scientist, and all he can do, if near the coast under such conditions, is to turn her head hard off.—Scientific American.

THE MUSIC-CURE.—In these days of mind-cure, rest-cure, electricity-cure, ovariotomy, and other forms of faith-cure, why does no one start a music-cure? The influence of music on disease is as undoubted as that of opium on pain. In many forms of nervous affections, in mental perturbations, the art which soothes the savage has proved a distinctly curative element in the treatment. In chorea, the influence of gymnastic exercises, aided by music, is of benefit. In the delirium of fever we have known the tender strains of Schubert's serenade, evoked from the piano by the hands of a master, soothe the patient until he dropped into a quiet sleep. The Lancet says: "By acting as a refreshing mental stimulant and restorative it braces the depressed nervous tone, and indirectly that of the other tissues. Thus there is something to be said for the old customs of exorcising pestilences by the sounds of music. Calmed and inspired by harmony, the tonic energies of will and nerve combined to oppose a wholesome bodily tone to the invading scourge, and to prevent that tissue laxity which has often provided the nidus of disease. A similar process is relied on by those who turn to music, among other diversions, for some relief from the pain of atonic neuralgia. In melancholia and allied states of depression its value is generally admitted in our own day.—Philadelphia Medical Times.

"TELL IT OFT."—"Brother R——, just stand up and tell the friends how and when you found the Savior," said the preacher at the close of a special service in an out-of-the way little chapel, to the friend who had brought him to the meeting. Surprised beyond measure, he stood up, and said: "My friends, what I'm going to tell you, I'm sorry to say, I've never told before in all my life; and I'm fifty years old. When I was only two I lost my father, and when I was twelve I lost my mother. Then I had to get my own living, and started off to a place with all my little belongings tied up in a red handkerchief. As I went along the road my heart was very heavy, and I did so wish my mother could come and pray with me once more, as she used to do. Oh, didn't she used to pour out her heart before God on behalf of us children! Then I thought, 'I wish I could pour out my heart in prayer like she did.' So, jumping over the wall just below that public-house along the road, I went behind some beech trees, and, kneeling down, I prayed as I never prayed before. What I said I couldn't tell you, but I emptied my heart before God; and when I came back over the wall, no one—not even you, sir," addressing the preacher—"ever had a lighter heart than I had, and from that day to this I have been secretly following Jesus;" and, with tears in his eyes, he said, "And God forgive me for never telling it out before."—

DOMESTIC.

The annual meeting of the State Immigration Association was held in this city on March 1.

Within two days of the adjournment of the present Congress, the exact size of the Republican majority in the next Congress, as determined by the November elections, is at last known. The Democrats having secured the four certificates from West Virginia, the Republican majority is at present three. By next December, however, there will be four new States, who will send four or five new Republican Congressmen to swell this majority.

The bill withdrawing the public lands of the United States from sale passed both Houses of Congress on March 2. Hereafter public lands can only be disposed of under the provisions of the homestead and the pre-emption laws. The bill also provides that persons who have abandoned their homesteads shall be permitted to enter another one.

The direct tax bill was vetoed by President Cleveland. The conceded effect of this bill is to take from the money now in the treasury the sum of more than seventeen millions of dollars, or if the percentage allowed is not included, more than sixteen millions of dollars, and pay back to the respective States and Territories the sums they or their citizens paid more than twenty-five years ago on a direct tax levied by the government of the United States for its defense and safety.

Nineteen Mormon missionaries arrived in Chattanooga Tenn., last week from the West, to be distributed from that city throughout the Southern field. Chattanooga is the headquarters of the work in the South, and over 100 are now engaged in actual proselyting.

Mr. Gladstone, in the House of Commons, on March 1, said: "To continue the state of things under which so many representatives of this House are placed under a ban of proscription, is impossible. You may deprive of its grace and freedom the act you are asked to do, but avert it you can not."

Referring to Congressman Hitt's resolutions in favor of commercial union with Canada, the Empire, the leading government organ, says: "The United States, by their House of Representatives, have graciously invited Canada to become part of the Union commercially, or, rather, they have intimated that if Canada will offer to sacrifice its independence, Congress will kindly accept the surrender. They will wait a long time before they find Canada debasing itself by becoming a suppliant for its absorption by a foreign power."

CHEAPEST FURNITURE HOUSE IN NEW ORLEANS.—This is the heading of the advertisement of Mr. J. G. Grant's, 50 and 52 Baronne street, New Orleans. Now, we would suggest to our readers to peruse it carefully, and they will be astonished at the low prices which Mr. Grant is selling furniture for. As this gentleman is thoroughly reliable, and guarantees the smallest article that leaves his store, we feel satisfied that those who may try him once will have further dealings with him. There is no store of this character in the South that keeps a larger or finer assortment than his, and as his expenses are less than others in the same line, he has informed us that he can sell lower. Try him.—N. O. Weekly Picayune, January 24.

Railroad and Industrial Notes.

The United States exported in 1888, $2,092,053 worth of sewing machines, as against $2,397,357 in 1887; and $7,626,336 worth of steam engines and other machinery in 1888, as against $5,088,700 in 1887.

The Value of Our Crops.

Before active speculation shall begin as to the prospects of this year's crops it may not be out of place to briefly review the results of last year's harvest. We have been accustomed to speak of the wheat harvest of 1888 as bad, and yet the official returns show that in "money's worth" the crop of last year was nearly as good as that of 1887, or, in fact, of any other recent year. It is quite true that the money value of wheat to the producer is not an absolutely correct measure of the real value of the harvest in all its relations to the trade of the country. The high prices which the farmers receive for a comparatively short crop may be greatly outweighed by losses of consumers in the increased cost of bread. But, as a general rule, what the farmer receives for his products affords a tolerably correct measure of their purchasing power in exchange for other commodities. At the same time the price which the country receives for its crop exports measures the value of its agricultural products in exchange with the products of other lands. In quantity the wheat yields of 1888 was comparatively small, being 414,868,000 bushels, against 457,320,000 bushels in 1887. But the average high price which the farmer obtained, and which the country received for its export surplus in exchange for foreign commodities, was a set-off to the loss in quantity. While the average market price for wheat in Philadelphia in the last six months of 1887 was about 81¼ cents a bushel, its average price in the corresponding months of 1888 was $1.01¾ a bushel, making a difference of 17 cents. Upon this basis the wheat harvest of 1888 represented a value of about $144,000,000, and the greater crop of 1887 a value of about $383,000,000. The portion that was exported did not share in this relation, but taking the averages of the two years the wheat harvest of 1887 did not yield in the markets much more money than that of 1888. To cover this loss the corn crop of 1888 yielded about 2,000,000,000 bushels. Of this enormous crop not more than 5 per cent. is exported; but, taking averages, the value of this crop is at least $120,000,000 greater than that of the preceding year. So of the oats harvest, which is estimated to have exceeded that of 1887 to the amount of 42,000,000 bushels. In regard to cotton, the chief export of the country, it is estimated that the decline in value of the product of 1888, compared with that of 1887, is about $20,000,000. Taking, however, the four great crops of cotton, wheat, corn, and oats together, the gain in value in 1888 was $100,000,000 over the value of these crops for the preceding year. Although reliable comparative estimates in regard to animal products are out of the question, the official returns show a large decline in the exports of provisions during the last year. In beef, pork, and milk products there have been no serious fluctuations in prices. On the other hand, there has been a marked decline in prices of vegetables, which is attributed to excess of production. But taking all in all, the agricultural products of 1888 have brought more to the farmers than did the products of 1887. They have more money for the purchase of commodities than they had in the previous year.—Philadelphia Record.

The New York Commercial Bulletin makes an interesting comparison of exports for the seven months of the present fiscal year with those of the year preceding, which shows that in aggregate value there is a close correspondence between the two periods. Under the four principal classes the comparison is as follows:

	1889.	1888.
Breadstuffs (7 months)	$ 78,814,40	$ 82,501,764
Cotton (5 months)	119,841,015	148,658,757

J. H. CASSITY, P. E.

The clergy of America take kindly to Life Insurance, and have been its firmest champions. They fight for it and thoroughly believe in it. There are many splendid financiers in the Church that they are intelligent and thoughtful for their future goes without saying. All denominations seek the protection of Life Insurance, and are careful to select the company offering the greatest security and the most advantageous terms to policy-holders.

The Episcopal Diocese of New York has an Insurance Fund for all of its members, and The Mutual Life, which is the largest and strongest company in the world, with over $122,000,000 assets, has been officially selected by that body to issue all the insurance to these worthy people.

A Southern Department of this Company has been opened in New Orleans under the management of Mr. T. H. Bowles, with offices in Louisiana National Bank Building.

Have You a Sister,

Mother, wife or lady friend to whom you desire to give that most acceptable of all presents—a handsome black silk or satin dress? or do you wish one for yourself? In another column of our paper is the astonishing offer of a reliable silk manufacturing establishment located in Mansfield Centre, Conn. Read it carefully. Selling as they do, direct from their looms, and thus saving all intermediate expenses, they are in a position to offer, at a merely nominal price, goods which can not be excelled for richness of color, durability and pureness. We recommend our readers to write for samples to G. S. Chaffee & Son, Mansfield Centre, Conn., which are sent free on application. Do not be deterred by the thought that a purchase of this kind is beyond the limits of your purse; it is not, as a silk dress bought from this firm will cost you no more than many ordinary cloth suits. On ordering, from the samples, the pattern you select is sent to your residence; and if you are not pleased with it in every particular, it will be taken away again without expense to you. Try them; it will pay you to do so.

THE VICTORY OF THE VANQUISHED.

BY H. G. H.

Granted the odds are against us; granted we enter the field,
When Fate has fought and conquered, broken our sword and shield.
What then? Shall we ask for quarter, or say that our work is done?
Nay, rather, a greater glory is ours if the field be won!

'Tis war with the wrong of years—with prejudice, pride and hate;
Against the world's decree, and the frown of an evil fate,
But even if hope should fail us, still we may do and dare;
At least there is left the courage born of the soul's despair.

A crown to the one who wins! and the worst is only a grave,
And somewhere—somewhere still, a reward awaits the brave.
A broken shield without, but a hero's heart within,
And held with a hand of steel, the broken sword may win!

The Mississippi Gulf Coast, the Churches, and the New Orleans Lottery.

BY R. ABBEY, D. D.

Or you may reverse this order of stating the case. It is not generally known among the uninformed masses that in every State of the United States, except Louisiana, and in every State of Europe, except Italy, the lottery is ostracized by law; and by a strong—I might say, an almost or quite universal—public sentiment, it is scouted and regarded as the worst, most pernicious and destructive of public morals and public good of all kinds, of all forms of swindling ever invented among men.

And, as to Italy, I am not certain. The lottery was patronized there by the Pope and his government; but Victor Emmanuel being acknowledged King of Italy in 1861, and declaring and maintaining his independence of the papacy, quite likely put a stop to this iniquity among his other reforms. Of this, at this moment I am not informed. If this is an exception, it is the only one in the United States or Europe, leaving poor, disgraced Louisiana the only custodian of this famous civil infamy.

I am, therefore, not uttering any opinions or views of my own, but merely stating legal and historic facts, when I point out the lottery as a fugitive and vagabond, an outlaw and an escaped convict on the earth, and without the protection of even the mark of Cain, its natural father.

The Legislature of Texas treats her next-door neighbor, Louisiana, on this wise:

If any person shall sell or take an order for the sale of any ticket or part of ticket in any lottery, or if any proprietor or manager of any newspaper or any other person shall publish the advertisement or statement of any lottery drawing, or if any person shall receive any lottery ticket or deliver the same to any other person or pay money on the delivery of same for any ticket, or if any person shall give any information to the public or to any other of the result of any drawing of any lottery, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be fined in any sum not less than $20, nor more than $50.

And the law of my own State is much the same, though, perhaps, less sweeping; but at this moment I am not able to repeat it verbatim. It is hoped that our next Legislature will fix it better. Of the peculiar and practical disadvantages, and cool criminality of this particular form of swindling the poor out of their hard earnings, I will, with the editor's permission, try to have some good reading for the ADVOCATE at some future time.

But just now I wish to call attention to some of the outside social, moral and ecclesiastical effects of the forbidden intrusion of the Louisiana Lottery into Mississippi. You know that one of the most beautiful, valuable and delightful portions of my State is the sea-coast front of Hancock, Harrison and Jackson counties, fifty miles from Scranton to this place; and that unfortunately it sustains, geographically, commercially and socially, a mere suburban relation to New Orleans. And so our trains are full, or, rather, partly full, of this lottery, with its burglarious tools, filching money from the pockets of our people—mostly the poor—at the rate of about from eight to twelve thousand dollars a month, according to a very fair and impartial calculation.

And not only so, the lottery essays, and with some success, too, to run the churches. Our own church is by no means free from these influences. It even threatens to bestow large money upon us to hush our conscience. These "charities" and "benevolences" are dealt out among us with unstinted profuseness. For every thousand dollars they filch from us, they give us, in "noble charity" and public improvements, almost, and sometimes quite, a hundred dollars! And these hundreds soon amount to thousands; and no few of them. Being a new-comer on this coast line, I did not at first exactly understand this, but at second it looks very plain. So, if you will see the Nashville Christian Advocate, of December 8, 1888, you may notice a letter from me, giving some rambling information about this coast country, and, among other things, the building, many years ago, of a church for the Episcopalians, in Biloxi, by the munificent charities and benevolence of this lottery. Whereupon Bishop Hugh Miller Thompson, of Mississippi, in the Church News, of Natchez, of January 15 and February 1, of this year, takes me pretty severely to task. Referring to my Nashville letter, the Bishop says: "Some one calling himself a preacher of the gospel, moved by a sectarian hate," etc., "saw fit to make a brutal and false attack" on a then sick and almost dying minister of his church in Biloxi. The Bishop then a little more than faintly intimates that the end I sought, in my "blind malevolence," was the death of the sick minister, "if it be the end he sought." He calls me "the wretched author of this last development of its vile spirit." The Bishop then speaks of me as, "The unhappy author of the brutal assault upon the parish at Biloxi," and says, if I understand him right, that he has appointed a committee of vigilance to take vigorous action to hunt him (me) out as the author of this "slanderous attack," and to discover whether "he has any responsibility either in character or purse."

Now, I submit to the decency of Christendom, that whether I murdered a minister or not, this language, and more of the same sort that might be quoted, is proof positive that Bishop Thompson is far more familiar with the language of Billingsgate than that of Piccadilly.

And, Mr. Editor, I do most humbly apologize to you and your readers, for what seems to me a necessity, that I should mar your paper with a recital of such low vulgarity. It is as irksome to me to copy as it is to your printer to print, or you to read, such—call it what you please. And, furthermore, I most candidly assure you that I would not, so far as I, myself, am concerned, ask you to print these things. But it is evident that the Bishop's diatribe is not aimed at me primarily, but at my church through me. I am not here to defend my reputation, I would have you to know. My reputation is not my property, but that of others. It is what others esteem me do be, the Shakespearean jingle of nonsense about stealing purse, and trash, and poor, indeed, and all that, to the contrary, notwithstanding. "It is as much as I can do to take care of my character.

And, now, what is this Bishop's excuse for all this fearful accusation? If it is not to uphold the lottery, it is not apparent. I said the lottery built a church; and if that might suggest the inference that that puts the church in the position of a custodian of stolen goods—lottery money, I did not suggest the inference, but have no objection for the Bishop to do so, if he chooses.

That the lottery built the church, some twenty years ago—that is, that the owner of the lottery built it with lottery-made money—is well known, and is not disputed, so far as I know. The only pretense to a denial of what I said in my Nashville letter is a mere play upon words—a quibble, a metonymy. I said "lottery," meaning the owner and money of the lottery. I think that is good English. But whether it is or not, this is the only question in issue. And for this, exactly this, I am caressed by Bishop Thompson in the soft and beautifully classic terms above written. So it seems I am to be,

"Without reprieve, adjudged to death
For lack of well-pronouncing shibboleth."

But I insist I did put in the "h," and sounded it in good Gileadite English.

As to the late Rev. Dr. Hinsdale, of Biloxi, whom this Bishop drags before the public from his new-made grave, in order to charge me with being partially, at least, responsible for his death, as he plainly does in the Natchez paper above cited, I need only say, I never heard of the man until I saw announced the death of a man of that name, which, I suppose, is the same. I did not, before this, know there was a resident Episcopal minister in Biloxi or elsewhere on this coast. So, I could not have spoken of him, or in any way alluded to him. The facts I stated as being informed about occurred, if at all, possibly before Dr. Hinsdale was born; certainly, according to the Bishop's account of him in the Natchez paper, some twenty years or so before he ever saw the Southern country!

Now, citizens of Mississippi, in or out of the church, there is your Bishop! It is my duty, willing or unwilling, to introduce him to you just that way. I can do no less.

Will the Bishop, or somebody for him, specify and deny a word I said in my Nashville letter? If not, let him take the consequences, whatever they may be esteemed to be, of charging a man with falsehood, slander and, at least, connivance at murder, without the slightest pretense of a probable reason!

GULF VIEW, MISS., March 2, 1889.

The Power of Money, and a Place to Use It.

BY "W. L. C. H."

Money is the most wonderful fiction which man has produced. In itself, as money, it has no intrinsic value; yet it represents not only every form of exchangeable property, but almost every form of human power. It commands not only property, but labor of all kinds. Of all the forms which human power may assume, money represents that which is most susceptible of accumulation, concentration, transportation and transmutation into every desirable shape. Through the agency of money man's power becomes almost unbounded, defying the limitations of space, time, and measurement. Through money a man may exert his will at any place and in almost any conceivable manner. He may stretch his arm around the world with a dollar, and hold the cup of comfort to the lips of a suffering brother on the other side of the globe. All the wonders of architecture and of steam are wrought out under its order, and all the transcendent achievements of mind and of genius are brought forth at its bidding. Not alone the powers of earth are subject to its control, but the Holy Book informs us that money may be transmuted into heavenly treasures, and that we may make to ourselves friends of the mammon of unrighteousness, who, when we fail here, shall receive us into everlasting habitations.

The world in our day exhibits the results of accumulated capital, not only in great railways, factories, furnaces, bridges, and the like, but in also the ever-varying and multiplying forms of benevolence and charity. Never did money possess so great and so varied powers before, and never did its possessors rest under such weighty responsibility for its use, as they now do. All the world's advancement is accomplished by money. Through it every man may contribute his part to the great sum of human weal. A dollar is a draft on humanity that no man will dishonor. Among other great monuments of human beneficence we find that higher education is everywhere made in large degree a charity. No college, worth the name, exists anywhere without endowment in some form. Costly grounds, buildings and apparatus constitute their unproductive endowments; while interest-bearing stocks and bonds, amounting in some cases to millions, yield annual incomes of tens or even hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Friends of Christian education, Centenary College, of Louisiana, must be endowed, that it may fill its proper measure of usefulness. Its benefactors in former years have handed down to us an unproductive, but useful endowment, in the form of real estate worth $80,000. If we, of this generation, will add as much in productive endowment, the college will be in easy condition: If we will treble it, her prosperity will be assured.

Some man may ask for what purpose an endowment is wanted. We answer, An endowment is very greatly needed:

1. To enable us to reduce the price of tuition, so that we may compete with other endowed institutions of learning.

2. To enable us to purchase needed apparatus for all departments of instruction.

3. To enable us to increase the number of professors, and to pay them adequate salaries.

4. To enable us to build houses for the use and occupancy of the president and professors.

5. To enable us to put the grounds and buildings in such condition as the purposes and character of the institution demand, and to keep them so.

We have now a productive endowment of about $18,000.

All the presiding elders of the Mississippi and Louisiana Conferences have been furnished with books of blank notes for subscribers to the endowment. It is suggested that each presiding elder emphasize the twelfth question in the proceedings of each Quarterly Conference on the second round; that he preach on the subject of Christian education, and use earnest, and persevering efforts to obtain signers to the endowment notes. One hundred dollars of endowment costs one only six dollars a year, and thousands cost in proportion. Almost all can do something. We want an endowment which represents the affections of our people. Let us rally to Centenary.

"An Appeal to Methodists."

BY REV. JOHN W. CHAMBERS.

The thirty-three thousand Methodists of the Mississippi Conference have two colleges and, at least, six high schools under the control of our church. One college and five of these high schools are on Mississippi soil.

"A man can suppose anything he chooses; but it is a serious matter to accuse the "seventy-five thousand" Methodists of Mississippi of taking only half as much interest in the education of their boys as do our Baptist brethren. Did not our D. D.'s forget that French Camps, Port Gibson and Harperville gave schooling to many Methodist boys? Did they not ignore Kavanaugh College! What is to be made by depreciating the intellectual worth of Mississippi Methodists? Could no better plea be made than an appeal to church prejudices and State pride? Why did not the representative of the Mississippi Conference defend his brethren from the charge, "that college-bred men are coming to us less frequently now than in other years." This is a gratuitous assumption, without any ground in fact. Of thirty four graduates in our Conference, known to the writer, twenty-eight have joined the Conference during the last ten years. This fact goes far towards explaining why the "general average of ministerial culture is higher than ever before."

In the Mississippi Conference no such preacher exists as the one mentioned by the authors of the appeal. There is not a railroad town in the Mississippi Conference whose pulpit is not as well supplied as the pulpit of our sister churches." If there is, where is it? Is it Waynesboro, Shubuta or Lauderdale? Is it Newton, Lake or Brandon? Is it Natchez, Vicksburg or Jackson? Is it McComb, Wesson or Crystal Springs? Is it Yazoo City, Canton or Hazlehurst? Yet, so far as is known to this writer, these points are supplied by men not full-fledged graduates.

I write purely in defense of the Methodism of the Mississippi Conference. Her laymen and her clergy are the peers of the laymen and the clergy in any church within our bounds.

Upon what policy of the church was "failure" written years ago? The policy of building up institutions of learning of high grade? Let our five colleges and six high schools give the negative. The policy of getting those institutions on solid ground one at a time? Let Whitworth, Port Gibson, Meridian and Centenary answer. The policy of some of our preachers of saying three good words for the schools of our neighbors and one for our own? Let "an appeal to Methodists" answer. On that line we are still a success.

The Methodists of the Mississippi Conference have one school of high grade for every three thousand members, besides a large number of schools taught by Methodist preachers and consecrated Methodist laymen. Has any other church a better record?

Miss Kate Mary Felder.

A PROSPECTIVE MISSIONARY TO MEXICO DEAD.

BY REV. H. WALTER FEATHERSTUN.

Five years ago, when I came to this part of Mississippi, I found, living with their grandparents, two beautiful girls, whose mother had died in their infancy—Ella and Katie Felder. They sang so sweetly, and they were so prompt and efficient in all lines of church work open to girls situated as were they; and yet they were so sweetly modest, so intensely womanly, in the tenderest, purest sense of the term, that I, like all who knew them, was very much drawn toward them.

When Kavanaugh College was opened I wished to have them with us, because of the refining influence they would wield among the pupils, and because I was desirous of increasing their already phenomenal usefulness by adding culture to their consecrated genius. In course of time Ella married, and Kate—as I called her—entered our college at the beginning of its third term, remaining with us two years, the latter of which she was a member of my own household. At the close of her second year with us, last June, she went home, was taken sick, and lingering on until February 15, died.

Although quite an invalid, she attended the Topisaw Camp Meeting last August, where, on former occasions, she had been so efficient in revival work. Hoping, then, to be soon restored to health, she offered herself, through Dr. Weems, as a missionary for Mexico; and, had she lived, would, doubtless, have completed her education, being then in the junior class, and would have gone to that promising field where so much can be done for God and humanity by such consecrated culture as was hers.

Although so intensely womanly, she was unabashed in the performance of duty. I have often heard her sweet girlish voice leading the public prayer or the service of song with equal success; and I have often seen her, like a veritable angel of love, bending over penitents at the altar, or treading her way through the great congregation, place her hand upon the rough arm of some sinful man, and lead him to the altar for prayer. Her wonderful influence in such cases was the result of her sanctified womanliness, an element the very strength of which consists in its delicacy and tenderness.

Her school-life, like her home-life and her church-life, was irreproachable. I never knew her to offend in any way against the discipline of the college, and her popularity with pupils and teachers was so great that her long-continued suffering found sympathetic response in all hearts at Kavanaugh; and her death, though so long looked for, threw a shadow over the college deeper than it had ever known. To a bright intellect she added that never-failing factor of success, energy; and her energy, like all else that was of her, was sanctified. She toiled that she might learn, and she sought learning that she might use it for the Master; hence, as a natural result, she learned well and progressed rapidly.

She suffered severely and long for one so young, but was ever sweetly patient, her only anxiety seeming to be that she might get back to her "loved employ"—her preparation for her life-work; and when at length it became evident that this could not be, she became resigned, and lay through the long, dark, wintry weeks, "only waiting" the Master's home-call. Only Omniscience can measure the magnitude of the heroism that could lie there in that little plain room among the pines, away from congenial companionship, and often unable even to read, patiently suffering on and on, waiting the will of the Master. Surely, the highest heroism was not born on a battlefield.

At last, when the final hour came, she folded her hands and went peacefully "out of this world of ours," leaving with us who loved her so, the shadow of her going; and, oh! that shadow lies dark and heavy about the halls of her beloved Kavanaugh, pressing sorely upon our hearts.

One heart among us here had been so often strengthened and encouraged by her love and her loving counsel, that life seems, now that she is gone, only a desert to that heart. How they had planned to tread together the higher paths of Christian work, and achieve noble things for the cause they loved so dearly! But, alas! how often is it that "Hopes perish, which have hung like wreaths

Around youth's buoyant brow;
And joys, like withered autumn leaves,
Drop from the shaken bough!"

We bore the fair, sweet dust of our Katie out to the old graveyard under the pines,

"Folded the white vesture, snow on snow,
And laid it where the violets blow"—

where sweet flowers have been planted as sacred memorials of our love; where the soft south breezes and the mocking birds sing her requiems till the angel comes and calls for it. Thus,

"Heaven is gathering, one by one, to its capacious breast
All that is pure and permanent and beautiful and best."

KAVANAUGH COLLEGE.

Bishop Galloway's Residence.

We are so glad to know when a preacher of the gospel gets a house of his own to live in, that we can't help congratulating him. The following description of Bishop Galloway's new home in Jackson, Miss., we clip from the New Mississippian:

Through the courtesy of the contractor, Capt. Harry Taylor, a N. M. representative was last evening shown through the residence of Bishop Galloway, which has just been completed and turned over to the Building Committee.

The style of architecture is modern and the plan is the duplicate of the residence of a friend of the Bishop, in Nashville, Tenn.

The site chosen was that directly in front of the handsome new Methodist Church, and the residence fronts it, facing eastward. The building is two stories and a half in height, surmounted by a gracefully tapering spire, which reaches to an altitude of 55 feet. The paint is of dove color, with trimmings of a darker hue, which produce an exceedingly pretty and effective contrast.

The plastered walls of the interior are of snowy whiteness, and the first floor comprises hallways, with library and bed-rooms to the left; to the right, parlor and dining-room, with bay windows, pantry, kitchen and wash-room. The upper floor, which is reached by central and rear stair-cases, of walnut finish, embraces five bed-rooms, with numerous closets and bath-room, which, in common with several other rooms, is provided with both hot and cold water.

The mantels throughout are of native oak or walnut, finished in oil, and those in the hall, parlor, library and dining-room are surmounted by elegant French plate mirrors, the mantel in the last named combining the features of a side-board. The hearths and fire jambs are of tile, of bright and variable colors, while the windows and doors are of native cypress, highly polished.

A rarer combination of beauty of architecture, or substantiality of structure and utility of arrangement, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to find in this State; and almost incredible to believe it was turned over, complete, for the small sum of $6,500.

Permanent seclusion from the cares and ordinary duties of the world has been thought the best aid in attaining saintly virtues. The higher attainments, the peculiar joys of religion, are inconsistent with the duties of active life. Such an assumption is an indictment of the divine administration. If seclusion had been best for us, God would not have made it imperative on the majority of men to spend most of their time in contact with affairs. He who made us knew our needs and knew that busy rather than idle people become practical saints. It is a false notion that men suffer damage by devotion to business. With little doubt, God will find, in the great day, a multitude of his chosen ones with full hands and a weight of care. Up out of the dust, rather than from places of retirement, will come an army of God's shining ones.—Zion's Herald.

HE CHOSE THIS PATH FOR THEE.

BY T. G. WILLSON.

He chose this path for thee.
No feeble chance, no hard, relentless fate,
But love, his love, hath placed thy footsteps here.
He knew the way was rough and desolate,
Knew how thy heart would sometimes sick with fear;
Yet tenderly he whispered, "Child, I see
This path is best for thee."

He chose this path for thee,
Though well he knew sharp thorns would tear thy feet.
Knew how the brambles would obstruct the way;
Knew all the hidden dangers thou wouldst meet;
Knew how thy faith would falter day by day,
And still the whisper ever lived, "Yes, I see
This path is best for thee."

He chose this path for thee,
And well he knew that thou must tread alone
Its gloomy vales and ford each flowing stream;
Knew how thy bleeding heart would sobbing moan,
"Dear Lord, to wake and find it all a dream."
Love scanned it all, yet still could say, "I see
This path is best for thee."

He chose this path for thee,
What need'st thou more? This sweeter truth to know
That all along these strange bewildering ways,
O'er rocky steeps, and where dark rivers flow,
His loving arms will bear thee "all the days."
A few steps more and thou thyself shalt see
His path is best for thee.

Dr. D. W. Foster and "Christian Womanhood."

In the ADVOCATE, of February 14, I find an article, in which Dr. Black is taken to task for certain things he has said about "Christian womanhood." I presume the writer, Dr. Foster, is a physician of some experience and eminence; but his observation, or perhaps his judgment, has led him into some gross error. He wants Dr. Black to revise his book, especially that part which treats of the "employments" of women. In my opinion, Dr. Black has voiced the sentiments of an enlightened public mind. The current of modern thought is fast turning in the direction of the doctrines ably set forth in "Christian Womanhood." The old erroneous opinions that women couldn't master the higher mathematics; that women couldn't teach school; that women couldn't sell goods; that women couldn't keep books; that women couldn't set type; that women couldn't practice "the healing art," are rapidly dying with the ignorance and prejudice of the ages that gave them birth.

But what does Dr. Foster say? "If a girl should be allured by visions of fame or fortune into the profession of medicine, she would inevitably encounter appalling, if not ruinous, obstacles." The Doctor admits (with dignity and reserve) that girls have the capacity to learn the profession; but were she to enter the arena of the medical profession, something of her pure, angelic nature would be defiled! The Doctor further states: "To practice it successfully and safely requires long years of close application to hard study; and the girl should decide upon that avocation, if at all, early enough in life to enter a female college, and go through a thorough course of study to prepare herself for the curriculum of three years in the medical college." Does it require a more thorough course of study for girls to become proficient than it does for boys? If it is necessary for a girl to spend five years in a female college to prepare herself for the medical school, ought not the boy to spend that much time in a male college to prepare himself for a similar medical course? Where is the advantage in favor of the boy? Anyone who has had experience in teaching knows that girls are as patient, faithful and diligent students as boys dare be. If boys can learn "the healing art," girls certainly can.

Dr. Foster seems to think that in order for girls to preserve their strength of character, purity of life, they must be shut up within the cloistered walls of some female college? Did it ever occur to him that boys are occasionally (?) led "astray" by the influences and surroundings of medical life? Or, are they proof against these things? Again: Did it ever occur to him that if we can have literary colleges exclusively for girls, could we not have medical colleges exclusively for girls, taught by women, and not permit "degraded man," under the penalty of death, to enter its sacred portals? The Doctor himself will admit that this could be done. A man is certainly hard pressed for argument when he states that girls can not be taught physiology and the science of medicine without endangering her moral welfare.

After she has completed her medical course, can she not safely and successfully practice her profession? Most assuredly she can. As a nurse, is she not far superior to men? In treating children and her own sex, would she not be more successful and far more suitable than the M. D.'s of the masculine gender? Does it not occur to the Doctor that nothing that the "nice, innocent and unsuspecting girl" sees or hears in the dissecting-room or hospital could be any greater offense against modesty or chastity than the present custom of male doctors attending women in all their diseases and conditions? But Dr. Foster says when she has completed her medical course, "if she does what God and nature intended she should do, she will marry and raise up a houseful of children." The highest ambition of woman, her loftiest aspirations—to become a wife, and the "mother of a houseful of children"? I thank God that there are hosts of Southern girls who have too much independence, too much of the spirit of "Christian womanhood" in them to lean upon the weak arm of the average boy for support; and God bless them if they never marry—they will accomplish something for themselves and their race. Thousands of women who have married, "raised up a houseful of children," and lived in poverty and want, would have done a far better act had they gone on to school, thereby preparing themselves for increased happiness and usefulness. I can't see that we especially need a swarm of boys and girls in every household. The living, earnest demand is, better mothers, better boys and better girls, and not more mothers, more boys and more girls. Many a woman would have done her country infinitely more good by remaining single than she has done by marrying and "raising up a houseful of children," who became mental, physical and social wrecks, a curse to society, and an infamy to the age.

I wonder if Dr. Foster tells his eldest son that he must get ready to become President of the United States, and his second son that he will get to be United States Senator, and his eldest daughter that she will some day become mistress of the governor's mansion of Louisiana? While I believe we ought to inspire in the minds of the young desires to become noble and useful, yet I prefer to tell them that no position or station can give them honor unless they merit it; that there is as much honor in being a good farmer, or a good mechanic, as there is in being a good President; that all stations and positions are alike honorable, if alike honorably filled.

I say, Give the girl a chance.

W. N. LEWIS.

Speak Kindly.

Why not? Why should not husband and wife, bound together, as they are, in the most intimate of all earthly relations, and necessarily in constant intercourse with each other, consecrate and hallow the sacred relation, and bless themselves, by always using kind words when they speak to each other. Where is the place for harsh words, angry words, and words of reproach and bitterness? Such words always leave a sharp sting behind them. They are not the words of affection, and become neither husband nor wife. They contribute nothing to the happiness of either, and are the prolific source of a large amount of misery.

The husband who abuses his wife by his words, and the wife who snaps and snarls at her husband, are alike untrue to their marital pledge, and really in a very bad way.

Speak kindly. Why not? Why should not parents always speak in this way to their children, and why should not children always so speak to their parents? If parents thus speak, children will naturally learn to do the same thing. Two example by the parents will reproduce itself in the practice and habits of the children; and the latter will grow up into manhood or womanhood with a gentleness and softness of manners, and a carefulness in the use of words that is characteristic of refined and cultivated beings. Authority, when exercised through kind words, is scarcely felt simply as authority. The element of severity is withdrawn from it, and obedience to it is secured by love. Parents who allow themselves to get into fits of passion with their children, and then thunder and storm at them in the language of vehemence and anger, are making a grave mistake in the matter of family government. Such parents need first of all to govern themselves and put their own passions under a healthful restraint.

Speak kindly. Why not? Why should not brothers and sisters living in the same house, eating at the same table, and fed and clothed by the same bounty, always speak to each other in this way? By so doing they will minister to each other's happiness, and avoid petty quarrels, make home pleasant, cultivate good affections, gratify their parents and please God. As they become men and women they will be scattered hither and thither; and when thus scattered it will be pleasant for them to look back to their childhood days, and remember that their intercourse with one another was kindly and affectionate. The friendship then formed will follow them through life.

Yes; speak kindly. Why not? Why should not men who are associated together in business study and practice the law of kind words toward each other? Why should not the minister of the gospel, the doctor and the nurse in the sick-room, the buyer and seller, the banker and the merchant, the governor and the governed, the judge on his bench, the warden of a prison, and, indeed, every man and every woman, on all occasions, in all circumstances, and under all provocations, both study and practice the law of kind words in the total intercourse of life from the cradle to the grave?

We would like to have the readers of this article, each one for himself, ponder these questions. There is an amazing power for good or evil in words. A large part of human influence is exercised through this channel.

What one is in life, how he affects others, and how they will feel toward him, depends very greatly upon the use he makes of his tongue. If he goes through life with a lawless and acrid heart, hurling epithets right and left at others, blistering the sensibilities of his fellow-men by his own vehemence, and disgusting them with his vulgarity, he may set it down as a fact that he will make himself a nuisance in the social system. Everybody will be afraid of him, and manage, as far as possible, to keep clear of him. If, on the other hand, he sweetens his own life with kindness of feeling and kindness of words, he will always be a pleasant person to meet, to talk with, and be acceptable and agreeable anywhere and everywhere. Society will find good use for such a person, and will use him to its advantage and his advantage.

Kind words are the cheapest and, at the same time, in practical power for good results, the most potent words that one can use. Reader, speak kindly; you will thereby avoid saying what might be offensive to others; and while making yourself happy, also make others happy.

JONES BAYOU, Mississippi.

Women as Physicians.

MR. EDITOR: In your issue of February 14 I noticed a communication from D. W. Foster, M. D., criticising Dr. Black's book, "Christian Womanhood," for its advocacy of woman's right to enter the medical profession. That an article of such a character should emanate from so respectable a source, in the last quarter of the nineteenth century, seems to me almost inexplicable. The Doctor has either been in a Van Winkle slumber for the last few years, or he willfully ignores facts in order to strengthen his argument, for he writes as if the entrance of woman into the medical profession were a thing untried. Hear him: "If a girl should be allured by visions of fame or fortune into the profession of medicine, she would inevitably encounter appalling, if not ruinous, obstacles which she had never conceived of." He then proceeds to specify some of these "appalling obstacles," the chief of which is that she would be compelled to sit alongside men to witness dissections and to listen to lectures on anatomy.

Now, if the good Doctor had only taken time to read Dr. Black's book thoroughly before framing his criticism, he would have learned that this "appalling obstacle" is a creature of his imagination rather than real. If he will turn to page 289 of "Christian Womanhood," he will find the following passages: "There are now, both in the Old World and the New, medical colleges for women. In the United States institutions of this kind exist at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and Cleveland, O. So then, if a young lady concludes to enter the profession of medicine, she is by no means compelled to pass through the 'appalling' ordeal of mixing with men in the lecture-hall and the dissecting-room. She can attend one of these women's colleges where there are no men." In "Christian Womanhood" this statement also occurs: "These institutions (Women's Medical Colleges) have sent out hundreds of graduates who are now ornaments to the profession and benefactors to their kind." In this Dr. Black understands the facts in the case. Besides the goodly number of graduates who, for various reasons, have abandoned the profession, there are now over a thousand women who are regular practitioners of the healing art. Of these, several have won both fame and fortune. Some have an income of fifty thousand dollars a year.

It is a well-known fact that female missionaries are now accomplishing a work in mission fields which, a few years ago, was either left undone, or deemed impossible. How has this come about? It is mainly through the influence of women physicians, who, as Dr. Black states in his book, are now very important adjuncts to our missionaries in foreign lands. In many Pagan countries the customs of society are such as to make it impossible for women, however sick, to be properly treated by male physicians. The female doctor, however, finds no obstacle in her way, and her entrance into the household prepares the way for the entrance of those women whose mission is to preach Christ.

Says a distinguished writer: "A few young girl doctors, inexperienced, poor, trammeled by the narrow policy of the societies that sent them, have done more to Occident the Orient, to Christianize the heathen, than all the mints of missionary money that have been sent hitherto. There is scarcely a land under heaven where the woman physician is not found."

A celebrated mathematician once made an elaborate calculation, in which he demonstrated the impossibility of a steamship's crossing the ocean, because no ship could hold the coal needed for the voyage. Similar in character, it seems to me, is Dr. Foster's demonstration that it is impossible for women to become successful physicians. As soon as the first steamer crossed the ocean, the anti-ocean steamer calculator abandoned his theory. Our anti-female doctor theorist, however, clings to his theory in spite of facts.

WIDE AWAKE.

From the Work.

HOUSTON AND WESLEY CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I want to tell you something about my work, and then tell you how much I am pleased with the work you and Bro. Grant are doing. My first Quarterly Conference was held on February 13, which, you remember, was Wednesday. As a usual thing, we don't expect many at quarterly meeting held in the middle of the week; but we had a good congregation, all things considered. Bro. Kendall, the inimitable presiding elder, was with us, and preached to the delight and edification of the people. Such was the power attending the delivery of the sermon, that some of us Methodists got happy and shouted a little, notwithstanding some people consider it a sign of weakness. Well, I tell you confidentially, we have a good many on this circuit with just such a weakness, and I am continually asking God to increase the number. This is my second year on the Houston and Wesley circuit. We are having some soul-stirring and refreshing times at my regular appointments. Our prayer meetings are increasing in number and spirituality. I am hoping and praying that the time is not far distant when we shall have a revival the year round.

Now, I want to tell you that I think the dear old ADVOCATE is growing better with each number. You are getting rid of those objectionable advertisements, and filling the space with good, wholesome reading matter. I can heartily recommend it to my people now, and tell them it is not only worth the money they pay for it, but that it will repay fourfold. I will send you a subscriber occasionally. May the good Lord bless you both in the blessed work of disseminating truth to thousands of hungry souls!

"A mighty man in Israel has fallen;" all our papers are in mourning, and we are sorely bereaved. If it were not for the history of the past, of God's providence with his people, we might be inconsolable. But all the while "God is burying his workmen, yet carrying on his work." Some brother will step to the front, take up the work where Bishop McTyeire left it; and our grand old church, under God, will move right on to victory.

J. R. ROBERSON.

OLIVE BRANCH CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: We are away up on the northern border of the Conference, and I reckon I shall have to write a little to have you think on us some. I think we are doing some good. Our people are growing in spirituality, and, therefore, in liberality. Our young people have gone through the winter admirably. The young men have kept up, every Saturday night since July, an interesting prayer meeting, which has been a source of great benefit to the community. This people are taking care of this preacher, and the preacher is trying, by God's grace, to take care of the people. I think sometimes, Mr. Editor, that a good people do better than a third-class preacher.

On last Friday, while I was busy in the room, my little niece, who lives with me, came to the door, and said: "Uncle Hodge, a man is at the gate, who wants to see you." I went out to see what the man wanted. I found a hack, with two horses, well loaded with various kinds of grub, and other good things. I said, "Brother, what does this mean?" He said: "This is a load of things my community have made up for the parsonage. I told them we could make up the load and never miss the little from each place, and it would be considerable when brought together at the parsonage." Quite a good notion. This man is not a member of the church, but I trust will be soon; for a man who thinks and does as he does will make a good officer in the Lord's army.

I feel, Doctor, that, in some respects, I am richer than my Master was in his earthly sojourn; but this all comes of pushing nearer to perfection the Christian system. Jesus Christ laid the foundation and furnishes the material, and we are to complete the system and structure.

The last question that gets close to me is, whether I have done as well for the flock as they have for the shepherd; but I will promise, by God's grace and the help of your prayers and paper, I will do my work. I ask the prayers of God's children for these who are not members of Christ's body.

Fraternally, G. H. HODGE.

HICKORY FLAT CIRCUIT, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: As I am not in possession of the address of the secretary, will you allow me space in the ADVOCATE to make an inquiry concerning the publication and distribution of the Minutes of the North Mississippi Conference? Have they been published and distributed, or not? A great many of the brethren on my charge subscribed and paid for the Minutes, and they are constantly interrogating me about them, and I am as ignorant as they are. The secretary will please answer through the ADVOCATE, or by private letter, as he wishes.

We are moving along well on Hickory Flat charge; have employed most of my time since Conference trying to raise money to build new houses of worship, and have had encouraging success. Have one building in course of erection now, and money promised and lumber purchased for another, which will not go up till summer. Last week I made an effort to raise money to build at Hickory Flat depot; but this I found to be an arduous task. There are two other church buildings and a school-house to go up here this year, and, as we are weak numerically—and financially, too, for that matter—we are in a financial pressure; but, by the dint of continued perseverance, I think we will succeed; if not this year, we will another. If any brother is interested in the prosperity of Methodism, and wants to manifest his interest by his liberality, we will gladly receive and highly appreciate any amount he will donate to our building here.

Spiritually, the churches on this charge are prospering. Our Sunday-schools have been suspended during the winter for the want of good comfortable houses in which to hold them; but will be resumed as soon as the weather will permit. We are praying for and anticipating a glorious season of gracious things from the Lord this year. The Lord grant it.

Yours, etc., D. M. GEDDIE.

GLOSTER, MISS.

MR. EDITOR: As this is my first year in the traveling connection, I will send you a short letter from my work. We left our native home in Franklin county, January 10, and landed here on the eleventh. We were met here at the depot by a good steward with a hack to take us to the parsonage, and another with a wagon to haul our goods. At our new home we found several ladies with a dinner that consisted of a great many good things, to which we did justice, besides enough cooked to do us a week. Since that time we have received favors too numerous to mention.

We held our first Quarterly Conference, January 29. Our presiding elder was at his post. We had a pleasant time. I am getting my Conference money subscribed. Expect to get it all up before I go to Conference. This circuit covers a considerable portion of Wilkinson county; seven regular appointments a long ways apart. Preach at eleven A. M.; ride from six to eight miles, and preach at half-past three P. M. We are working for a general revival on this work. We expect to have it by the help of the good Lord and the prayers of the church. I find the ADVOCATE scattered over this work, but not as much as I would like. I am urging my members to take it. Have some few subscribers to send you; hope to send many more this year. Our Sunday-school work is improving. We are doing some work on our churches. Well, to say the least of this circuit, it is the best one I ever served. We are going to have a good time. Many good wishes to you and the ADVOCATE.

WM. M. SULLIVAN.

BELZONA, NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I have been round my work twice, and have seen the people of the swamps, and find them to be a generous, kind and intelligent people. All they need is the right kind of preaching—a general stirring up. They do not care much about the education of their children.

This is a hard country to get round in, though I have been to every one of my appointments, and have preached at every place twice and three times. I have made about forty pastoral visits in this work. We organized a Sunday-school at Ashton last Sunday, and will organize one at Belzona, Sunday week.

I saw an article in the ADVOCATE, some time ago, headed, "Presiding Elder's Pounding." We would be glad to see one in this part of the swamp. You know, brethren, that when the elders come round, they always give us a send-off. I think it would be a good idea to have them with us eight times a year instead of four; and some places they do not get to see more than one or two times in the year.

I can say that I like this place very well, though I will make it a more desirable place before I leave it, if I can stay close to Christ, and get him to help me in the cause. The health of the people is good in this swamp.

W. H. SANDERS.

TRENTON CIRCUIT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I have been advocating the necessity of taking the church paper to my congregations, and think it is doing much good; and I expect to continue insisting the necessity of every family taking our church paper, for I am sure when we, as preachers, can get the people to whom we preach to take the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, the church will progress much faster, spiritually as well as financially. Bible reading is absolutely necessary; but the members of the church can not do well without the church paper. I think every preacher should try to remove the idea that some have regarding papers, for many think because they can get secular papers for one dollar, that they are much cheaper. This is a mistaken idea, for the difference is as great as the difference between wheat and chaff. We admit that we get news from other papers that is interesting; but if we are not able to take but one, it should be the church paper. And, as I see that it is a great benefit to the church for the members to take the ADVOCATE, I expect to urge upon the people to take it; so I hope every family in the Mississippi Conference will take the ADVOCATE, and especially in Trenton charge. I send you some subscriptions, and will send others soon.

Yours fraternally, B. H. R.

FRANKLINTON, LA.

MR. EDITOR: Our first Quarterly Conference has just passed. Our presiding elder was with us, and preached a good sermon on Saturday, February 23, on "My grace is sufficient;" and on Sunday, "If you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts." The presiding elder brings encouraging reports from all the charges visited on his first round. He has started out on the district to strike out the embarrassing word "detich" from the Conference vocabulary this year; and the stewards on the Franklinton circuit made a liberal assessment for the pastor in charge and collected one hundred dollars for the pastor in charge and presiding elder, and have promised to bring up all the assessments in full. I am getting all the names of the heads of families, and, by the grace of God, I will do all I can for the dear old ADVOCATE. This people here in this pine country seems to be hard run for supplies at this time. They tell me they had a bad crop year last season; but they seem willing to do all they can. Doctor, pray for me, that I may be able to do the work faithfully that is assigned me. Your obedient servant,

J. H. EVANS, P. C.

MARCH 1, 1889.

WOODVILLE DISTRICT, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

MR. EDITOR: I have just completed my first round, and will send you a few items. I met every appointment, found every preacher well, at his post, and working faithfully.

The assessment for the preachers are in many cases an advance on last year's; in others, just the same as last year, and only in one charge, so far as I know, is the allowance less than last year.

The collections, so far, are very good, considering the disaster to the farming interests last August. There is a disposition on the part of the people to take care of their preachers.
